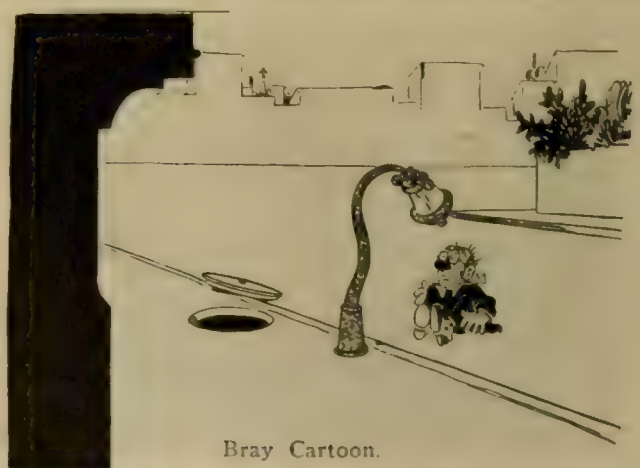
What a woman will do to catch a man forms a subject for the very clever comedy, "Naughty Henrietta," produced at the American studios by Director Cooley's company of photoplayers. Miss Neva Gerber and Webster Campbell form a pleasing combination as the leading characters and are admirably supported by Katherine Wilson and King Clark. "Dan Mathews," a confirmed bachelor, finally succumbs to the wiles of Henrietta, who has set her mind on marrying the only man whose heart is closed to her charms. The methods employed by the artful coquette provide a merry tale which ends in a happy marriage.

PATHE ANNOUNCES ANOTHER BRAY CARTOON COMEDY.

Pathe announces for release at an early date a new animated cartoon comedy by the Bray Studios, entitled "Col.



Scene from "Col. Heeza Liar Takes the Pledge" (Pathe).

Heeza Liar Signs the Pledge." The "Heeza Liar" series has become world famous and this particular comedy is fully up to the standard set by its predecessors. In it the Colonel imbibes not wisely but too well, and after various comical experiences profits by his adventures and "swears off" once and for all. A good number.

UNIVERSAL'S MEMORIAL DAY SUBJECTS.

The Universal has prepared two appropriate dramas for release on May 30, Memorial Day. One is "Shattered Memories," a three-reel Civil War drama produced by Robert Leonard. The other is "The Memory Tree," in which Charles Ogle plays a leading role.

One hundred veterans of the Civil War, now members of the Old Soldiers' Home at Sawtelle, near Los Angeles, were guests of the Universal company during the filming of "Shattered Memories." Word had reached the Home that the Universal was filming a Civil War drama and a number of the old defenders of the Union expressed a desire to witness the making of the scenes. This desire was conveyed to General Manager Magie of the Universal Company and a notification was sent to the managers of the Home that the company would furnish cars for one hundred of the old soldiers from Sawtelle to Universal City.

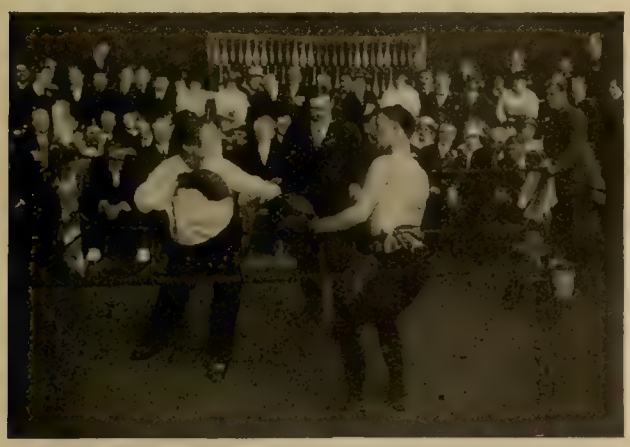
Scene from "The Memory Tree" (Universal).

In the cast of "Shattered Memories" are Ella Hall as Jane Marsh, the sweetheart of Jasper Wells, Robert Leonard; Harry Carter, Colonel Mobray of the Confederate Army, and Charles Hickman, General Hicks of the Federal forces.

"The Memory Tree" is also a timely Civil War drama. Charles Ogle plays the principal role, that of a young Northern officer who marries a pretty Southern girl and incurs the enmity thereby of his rival for her hand, a handsome young Southern soldier. The years pass. The Northerner, in civil life, prospers while the Southerner in his old age is reduced in circumstances. He is found dying, at last, in a humble tenement and his old foes, Northern war veterans, gather around him and drape both the Stars and Bars and the Stars and Stripes about his wasted old frame. The pathos of the drama should make an especial appeal to all true, unhyphenated Americans.

BILLY REEVES IN "THE SUBSTITUTE" (Lubin).

Billie Reeves, the English comedian, pantomimist and acrobat, the man who set the world laughing as the drunk in "A Night in an English Music Hall," will make his debut as a screen performer and Lubin star on May 15 when he will appear in a screamingly funny comedy called "The Substitute."



Scene from "The Substitute" (Lubin).

Reeves, who has an international reputation as a funster, was recently engaged at a large salary by the Lubin Company together with his own company of comedians, and each Saturday, beginning with "The Substitute," Reeves will be featured in a comedy and the Lubin Company is making every effort to make these Saturday releases the strongest and funniest of comedies. "The Clubman" will be released May 22; "Out For A Stroll" on May 29, and so on.

In "The Clubman" Reeves imitates the antics of a "drunken sport" as played by him over 5,000 times in vaudeville in this country and abroad. The comedy is a riot of laughs from beginning to end and includes his famous roller skating act in a fashionable cabaret restaurant and his inimitably ludicrous boxing match.

VAN LOAN BASEBALL STORY BY BOSWORTH, INC.

Just at the opportune time when baseball again comes into its own in the public eye throughout the country, Bosworth, Inc., announces as its next release "Little Sunset," a story involving the national game by the well-known writer, Charles E. Van Loan. This photoplay promises to be one of the most interesting yet released by Bosworth, Inc., and is adapted from the story of the same name written by Mr. Van Loan, who has become famous as an authority on sport and as a Saturday Evening Post humorist.

This story is probably the most vivid picture of big league ball players in action ever secured for the motion picture screen, and offers a comedy that is unusually true to life, most of the scenes having been taken in the well-known Los Angeles park of the Venice team of the Pacific Coast League. This team's star players appear singly and as a whole throughout the picture and their dashing illustrations of the famous "hook slide," the "spitball" and other expert tricks of the trade are a distinct exhibition in themselves. A party of professional ball players who were invited to the Bosworth studio for a private showing of the photo-comedy showed frank surprise at the correctness with which all the baseball "stuff" had been done.

Mr. Van Loan, who is one of the most popular authors of baseball stories in the country met with an automobile accident just prior to producing this picture, but stood close by the camera throughout the production of the subject, supervising the work on crutches.

Scene from "Little Sunset" (Bosworth).

In the title role appears Gordon Griffith, the celebrated child actor, in one of the most fascinating characterizations yet seen on the screen. Master Griffith is one of the youngest, if not the youngest actor appearing before the motion picture camera today. Other important characters in the story are portrayed by Hobart Bosworth, as "The Terrible Swede;" Joseph Ray, as "Little Sunset's" father; Rhea Haines, as his mother, and Marshall Stedman, as manager of the "Apaches." This photoplay will be released by Paramount, May 6, just the time when baseball is in full swing all over the country.

"THE SONG OF THE HEART" (Thanhouser).

Mignon Anderson and Arthur Ashley are featured in the cast of "The Song of the Heart," a two-reel Thanhouser release in the Mutual program. These two popular stars are ably supported by Morgan Jones, Bruce Wiaman and Henry Leonie.

The story deals with the love of Arthur von Bauer, a young German musician, for his landlord's daughter. The young woman sings in the same cafe where he plays, and when the proprietor insults her he comes to the rescue and they both lose their jobs. Meanwhile, Bauer has had his wonderful song and opera, both called "The Song of the Heart," stolen by a rag-time artist named Richards. When Bauer asserts his claim to his own music, he is branded as a plagiarist and only Richard's dying confession absolves him. When he is cleared, he and the girl he loves are married.

BUFFALO BILL IN UNIVERSAL PICTURES.

"Patsy of the Circus" is the title of a three-reel drama which has been written by Hugh Weir, well known magazine writer, for the 101 Bison Company, and upon which Henry McRae has already begun work.

As good luck would have it, the Sells-Floto Circus and Buffalo Bill's Wild West Show played an engagement at Los Angeles just about the time Weir was completing the scenario of "Patsy of the Circus" and Director McRae, who is an old-time friend of Colonel Cody, met the manager of the Sells-Floto aggregation and through the kindly efforts of the Colonel was extended the courtesy of the circus in connection with the photoplay of the sawdust ring he was preparing to produce.

A day or two later McRae took his company into Los Angeles and during the afternoon performance Marie Walcamp, who is to portray the part of Patsy, a bareback rider in the play, made her appearance in the ring before an audience of six or seven thousand people. At the proper moment she made a tumble from her horse, and, as per arrangement, the spectators rose in their seats and animatedly discussed the accident.

Wellington Playter, Sherman Bainbridge, Rex de Rosselli and other members of the 101 Bison Company were in the scene and several others that were taken, and all were enthusiastically applauded at their appearance and also at the conclusion of their work in the ring.

Colonel Cody took occasion to call the attention of the audience to the fact that they were viewing and also participating in a film play that would be produced later by the Universal company, the announcement creating great interest among the thousands who heard it.

"WHEN CAMERON PASSED BY." (Reliance.)

Not all of the thrilling and absorbing photoplays produced by the Reliance Motion Picture Corporation are made upon the coast. Much engrossing material is turned out in the East at the Yonkers Reliance studios.

The production which is at present engaging the Reliance forces is a melodrama, "When Cameron Passed By." It is full of action from beginning to end. Excitement begins when Cameron, a wealthy young man, rides by a country house and sees a girl pursued along the roof-gutter by a man. He finds that the house is the headquarters of a group of criminals and that the girl is being forced to marry one of them. He rescues the girl but is driven to a small house near by for refuge by the gang, and there is much spirited gun-fighting.

Sheriff and posse happen to be passing, just as Cameron had passed, and rescue them. The story ends with a touch of romance, indicating that Cameron and Margaret, the girl whom he rescues will not love unhappily.

The part of Cameron is taken by William Williams, while Gladie McDonald is Margaret, Alfred Krantz is Kalt, the girl's villainous guardian. William R. Randall plays Marsh the man to whom her guardian is forcing her to marry. "When Cameron Passed By" is directed by Lawrence B. McGill.

Another Reliance drama being made at the Yonkers studio is "The Cliff Girl" with the same principals.

EXTRA PRINTS OF "GRAUSTARK."

In his review of "Graustark," in the Moving Picture World, James S. McQuade said, "It is the first Essanay release on the V. L. S. E., Inc. combination, and after viewing the subject, I am convinced that it well merits the distinction."

Mr. McQuade's opinion vindicated the claims of the manufacturers that "Graustark" would be a subject the exhibitor might well be proud of and now, according to reports from the V. L. S. E. booking offices, theater owners appear to agree, that all that has been said of it, judged by the expressions of satisfaction received from the houses where it has been shown. Extra prints of "Graustark" have been put in service at each of the V. L. S. E. branch offices.

"ONCE IS ENOUGH" (MinA).

Harry La Pearl, the famous circus clown whose work in previous Mina releases has added to his reputation as the greatest "joy-boy" of the day, does some of his characteris-tically clever comedy acting in "Once is Enough," the Mina release for May 27.

As a victim of circumstance Harry continually gets into trouble. At the wedding feast his bride flirts outrageously with the minister, whom Harry ejects from the premises rather forcibly. For his riotous conduct Harry's wife, in anger, goes to her room, locking the door, while her spouse seeks consolation in the flowing bowl.

Three "second story" men come to rob Harry's home. At the point of a gun he is requisitioned as helper to cart off the booty. When the looting task is over Harry is permitted to leave. His knocking at his wife's door brings visions of burglars to the bride and she yells for the police. When they arrive Harry is laden with additional burdens in the way of trouble, but he finally succeeds in freeing himself in a fashion that is all his own.

Splendid support is given by Elaine Ivans, as his wife, and "Spooks" Hanson, the well known clown, as the minister.

FAMOUS PLAYERS TO PRODUCE "THE MOTH AND THE FLAME."

One of the foremost of the dramatic masterpieces of the contemporary stage that have yet been converted to the screen is the Famous Players Film Company's five-part production of Clyde Fitch's greatest play, "The Moth and the Flame," which will be the Paramount release of May 13th. The original stage production of this celebrated morality drama met with astounding success wherever presented, and the screen version supplied by the Famous Players combines the overpowering dramatic elements of the play with a pictorial elaboration of scenes and settings that further enhance the appeal of the great human theme.

"RAFFERTY STOPS A MARATHON RUNNER."

The second release in the Peaceful Rafferty series, being produced by the All Celtic Film Company, is called "Rafferty Stops a Marathon Runner," written by Charles O'Hara and directed by J. A. Fitzgerald. It is broad comedy, verging on burlesque, offering a number of more or less humorous incidents strung together by a slight story. The idea, at least, seems novel. Obsessed with the idea that he is a great runner, a man escapes from an insane asylum dressed in running clothes. Rafferty, among others, undertakes to capture him and by mistake holds up the leader in a genuine Marathon race. There is an abundance of fast action in a production that no doubt will appeal to some audiences.

LEWIS PLAYS ROLE IN "THE PLUNDERER."

In producing "The Plunderer" Edgar Lewis was called upon to play one role himself. It was necessary to secure an actor to play a comparatively small part, a role too unimportant to warrant the expense of taking an actor for it to Georgia, where the play was put on. Mr. Lewis could find no suitable person in the neighborhood to play the part, and this small role threatened to delay the picture for several days. In order to finish on time, Lewis made up for the part himself and played it creditably, and for some time before the other members of the company penetrated his disguise and recognized their director in the cast.

"WITHOUT A COUNTRY" (Great Northern).

On about May 10 the Great Northern Film Company will release its latest production entitled "Without a Country." This is a dramatic presentation of love, treachery, and political intrigue, in four parts, and executed in a masterly fashion. The part of Judith is played by Miss Rita Sacchetto, the celebrated actress, whose delightful performances at the Metropolitan Opera House of New York are well remembered.

NEW PICTURE BY CALIFORNIA M. P. CO.

The third Bret Harte photoplay to be produced by the California Motion Picture Corporation will be "A Phyllis of the Sierras," scheduled for release on June 28.

Like its predecessors, filmed by the same company, "Salomy Jane" and "The Lily of Poverty Flat," this screen-drama will show the picturesque characters and conditions in pioneer California in the days when the great gold rush was still on.

The story, in brief, is that of a titled young Englishman sent to the Golden State for his health. In the California family, at whose home in the Sierras he stays during his sojourn, one of the two daughters sets her cap for him, and he, in turn, finds his heart drifting toward her, although he has his stern father's command to avoid entanglements with fair creatures not of aristocratic blood. The handsome young British lord has proved wonderfully attractive to the beautiful but untutored daughter of the village blacksmith, but his fancy for her is only fleeting. Then comes a message ordering him home to England. A few years bring about a tremendous change. The fortune of the Englishman's family is swept away, and he returns to California, broken in spirit and health, only to be discovered by the "Phyllis of the Sierras," now rich, thanks to a mine discovered by her little brother. The happy ending does not come, however, until after a series of dramatic episodes, narrowly verging on the tragic.

This is the narrative now being pictured in elaborate style by the California Motion Picture Corporation at its San Rafael studio and at its mountain headquarters in the Santa Cruz redwoods at Boulder Creek. As in the previous Bret Harte feature films, Beatriz Michelena, the charmingly versatile star of the company, will assume the leading role, supported by an excellently balanced cast.

MILLS HANDLING SAVOIA FEATURES.

Phillip O. Mills, until recently prominently identified with the Picture Playhouse Film Co., Inc., which organization he was instrumental in founding, has been elected president of the Arnold Service Co., with offices at No. 1328 Broadway, New York City, and will continue to take an active interest in the motion picture industry.

The Arnold Company has secured exclusive American booking rights for the productions of the Savoia Feature Film Co., of Turin, Italy, one of the wealthiest and best known film producing concerns in Europe, and is planning a particularly aggressive campaign intended to introduce the Savoia pictures to the American market.

When Mr. Mills began work with the Savoia pictures, immediately following his resignation as an executive member of the Picture Playhouse Film Co. organization, the Arnold Company had in their possession six four-reel feature pictures: "The Mirror of Life," a romance by Ivanhoe Ronalta; "The Flying Clue," adapted from the novel by Bret Harte; "The Heart of India," adapted from a novel by Prof. Rulver; "Margot," adapted from a novel by Alfred de Musset; "The Fatal Domino," from a novel by Aleria Dolores; "The Four Leaved Clover," adapted from the novel by Wilkie Collins.

It is announced that a number of American stars have signed contracts with the Savoia Company to appear in especially selected scenarios from well known Broadway successes, among them Miss Molly McIntyre, who will leave for Italy in the near future to head an all-star cast in a five-reel feature.

METCALF IN LARGER QUARTERS.

Exhibitors who count San Francisco their purchasing center for supplies will be interested in knowing that G. A. Metcalfe, who had been doing business at No. 153 Eddy St., has found it necessary to move to larger quarters at Nos. 115-19 Golden Gate avenue. The Metcalfe Company has built up quite a business in the sale of all kinds of motion picture suplies and accessories and is known to practically every exhibitor in the Pacific Coast territory.

The New Metcalfe location on Golden Gate avenue has been chosen because of the peculiar advantages which it offers to the company's patrons. It is in "Film Row," a name applied to lower Golden Gate avenue, and is not only central to most of the downtown theaters and exchanges but also of easy access for trans-bay exhibitors by means of the "Jitney" service which uses Golden Gate avenue as its main artery of traffic.

The Metcalfe move, it is announced, has been made necessary by the constantly growing volume of business being done by the company.

Negotiations were pending between Mr. Lubin, president of the Allied Features, and the Life Photo Film Corporation for some time and contract was signed Monday of last week.

The Allied Features intend to enter upon a large campaign of publicity and have advised the Life Photo Film Corporation that they have signed up one hundred days' solid booking commencing from the first day of release of each production.

"CAPTAIN FRACASSE" (Biograph).

Theophile Gautier's great story, "Captain Fracasse," will be released on May 25 as a two-reel Biograph. The title is derived from the stage name of an impoverished young French baron who joins a troupe of strolling players for the sake of a beautiful girl named Isabelle. How he won her love, how she made woman's greatest sacrifice, and how Captain Fracasse rescued his lady from extreme peril, alone and unaided in the midst of foes who sought his life, is the breathless development of this swift and heart-stirring drama, which culminates in the revelation of the secret of Isabelle's birth. The scenes are exceptionally striking in their varied effects of happy pastorals, lonely mountain fastnesses and grim feudal castles; the action is swift and sure, with that quality of being inevitable which makes for greatness. Vola Smith, Alan Hale, Charles H. Mailes, Kate Bruce and Jack Drumier divide the honors in the principal roles. The piece is superbly costumed.

Scene from "Captain Fracasse" (Biograph).

The first of the series of stories by Roy Norton, recently announced by Biograph for release in one-reel dramas, is "Gratitude," released May 27. It is the story of Laughing Jim, the square gambler, who gave his life in definition of the quality of gratitude. Ivan Christy has the leading role, and is admirably supported by Walter Coyle and Joseph McDermott. There are many striking scenes, and the vivid little drama is marked by the sympathetic work of a director who understands thoroughly the characters Mr. Norton drew in his great story.

"THE BLACK BOX" (Episode 12) (Universal).

In the twelfth episode of the Universal feature serial, "The Black Box," the entire Universal company pays a visit to the San Francisco exposition after a trip through the Suez Canal in pursuit of Craig, the supposedly villainous servant who is held responsible for the many crimes which have been committed in previous chapters of the serial.

In the view reproduced on this page, from right to left, William Worthington (Professor Ashleigh), Herbert Rawlinson (Sanford Quest), Anna Little (Leonora MacDougal) and Laura Oakley (Quest's assistant) are seen looking out over the exposition buildings. In the center of the picture can be seen the tower over the archway to the exposition grounds, which reminds one strongly of the Municipal Building in New York.

Many of the exciting incidents of the twelfth episode of "The Black Box" are enacted in and around the exposition grounds, and when the Universal serial is finally completed "The Black Box" company will have made a trip around the world. Other episodes of the serial show Quest and his party in England, in Egypt and the desert and aboard ship going through the Suez Canal. The final installments depict the exciting situations which resulted from the clash of wits during the journey from Port Said to San Francisco and, afterward, on California soil.

BOOKINGS ON "TWENTY MILLION DOLLAR MYSTERY" $750,000.

The Thanhouser Syndicate Corporation reports a pleasingly steady business for "The Twenty Million Dollar Mystery," which now bids fair to surpass the total bookings of its record-breaking predecessor, "The Million Dollar Mystery." Edgar Shallenberger, vice-president of the Thanhouser Syndicate Corporation, recently said that the total bookings, with cancellations deducted, for "The Twenty Million Dollar Mystery" have passed the $750,000 mark.

The popularity of Marguerite Snow, James Cruze, Sidney Bracy, Harry Benham, Frank Farrington and Elizabeth Forbes in the big "Mystery" serial not only shows no sign of abating, but constantly increases. Their many thrilling experiences seem thoroughly to satisfy the patrons of motion pictures throughout the country.

"THE GREATER STRENGTH" (American).

"The Greater Strength" is an uncommon story, uncommonly well told, and is just the kind of a clean, wholesome subject, strong and attractive in dramatic situations, which leaves the audience with a deep-rooted idea that all is not bad in this world even in the roughest sections. The majority of the scenes depict life in a rough and mountainous mining camp where the charm of picturesque surroundings impart an interest all their own.

Scene from "The Greater Strength" (American).

The plot hinges on the great physical strength of a young doctor, who, in a friendly wrestling bout, has crippled for life his best friend and vows never to use his natural power in combat again, unless it be to save life.

In the mining camp, where he goes after the accident, his mental strength is heavily taxed by the insulting remarks of the camp bully regarding his friendship for the community's pretty school teacher. These remarks, being challenged, lower the teacher's estimation of her friend, but later when to save the life of the bully's child, the doctor easily overpowers the man, the teacher is brought to realize that the control over mind and body calls for a greater strength than the use of mighty muscle.

As Dr. Hart, Edward Coxen presents a splendid piece of characterization in which this finished actor plays opposite to Miss Winifred Greenwood. George Field, as the bully, conducts himself with ease in a difficult role, while the balance of the cast do creditable work.

MINA PICTURES TO BE MADE ON COAST.

Beginning with the release on the licensed program for Thursday, June 3, the makers of MinA films announce that all future releases of this brand will be made at the newly and especially constructed and equipped studios in Los Angeles.

This announcement bears greater import than is apparent on the surface. It means that with the opening of these new studios the last important detail entering into the production of MinA animal pictures has finally been completed, and that the actual filming of these much heralded creations will be under way within another fortnight.

"A DAY AT UNIVERSAL CITY" (Universal).

Herman Fichtenberg, King of the Louisiana exhibitors and wild alligator tamer, and William Oldknow, general manager of the Universal Film & Supply Co. exchanges throughout the South, appear in "A Day at Universal City," a Nestor two-reel comedy which is to be released in the near future.

In the photograph on this page Mr. Oldknow is the gentleman in the white shirt on the southwest corner of the truck. His vis-a-vis and co-truck carrier in the striped sweatshirt is Mr.

Fichtenberg. Lee Moran, janitor and general boss of the job, can be seen at the extreme right sternly ordering the two moving picture magnates that pronounces it impossible to carry the trunk up to the sixth floor, rear.

"A Day at Universal City" is unique. It shows the production of a Nestor comedy from the writing of the scenario by the author to the projection of the completed film in the Universal projection room before the players who took part in it. In short, it gives the spectator an idea just how the picture is taken. Shows the cameraman filming the comedy, the process of developing, printing and cutting the film, and the many modifications of plot and action to suit the director's judgment.

BATTLE IN VOSGES REGION.

Authentic Pictures of the Fight Shown in Mutual Weekly.

CARTING his camera into the Vosges Mountains where some of the most desperate and bloody encounters of the war have been staged, Leon Gaubert, the Mutual Weekly photographer with the French armies, has secured what will go down in history as the most wonderful motion pictures of actual warfare ever filmed. These pictures will be shown in Mutual Weekly No. 18, released at all Mutual exchanges May 6.

Leaving the Gaumont studios in Paris shortly before eventualities in the Vosges region were resumed, M. Gaubert arrived in time to meet the members of the [illegible] of French officers, planning the attack. The pictures show the advance, begun the following morning, the heavy French troops greatly handicapped by the snow, which at times reached to their knees.

The attack on the woods, which was cleared of German [illegible] after a bloody encounter of many hours is graphically depicted, while in the distance the camera has caught the advance line of the comrades struggling entrenched on the crest of a hill. First a shrapnel, followed by [illegible] after the assault of infantry with the artillery bringing up in the rear, are clearly shown.

Of a sudden the air is alive with bursting shells. Men are falling, dead and dying, some of them within but a few yards of the lens, the undaunted photographer having brought his machine right into the heat of battle.

Then comes the charge through the snow, where the men were covered knee to hundreds. Because of the [illegible] and [illegible] of the ground in places, are clearly depicted in all their horror, together with scenes of [illegible] horses and soldiers of cattle, making this set of pictures as far the most wonderful of their kind ever obtained.

LUBIN'S "COLLEGE WIDOW" ON V. L. S. E. PROGRAM.

The College Widow," the second Lubin special in the V. L. S. E. program, will be released May 15 and pretty Ethel Clayton will make her bow with George Soule Spencer as the leading [illegible] George Ade knows how to write a play with more action than "The College Widow," and in directing the screen version of J. Hartz O'Neil's [illegible] moving from start to finish. In fact they moved altogether too fast for comfort in at least one scene.

It will be remembered that during the production of this feature Miss Clayton narrowly escaped a serious accident and fatal injury in the fire scene. A hotel was purchased and set afire and in order to secure realism it was decided not to rehearse the scene but allow the supposed guests to escape in the usual way. The fire spread more quickly than was anticipated, however, and in the real confusion that followed Miss Clayton became trapped on a burning stairway.

ART FILM CO. PRODUCING.

The Art Film Company of Philadelphia will shortly release to State rights buyers one two-reel feature each month taken from a popular book or play, with a well known star playing the leading role.

Jerome Lewis and Bert Wolff are now representing the Art Film Company in New York under the name of the Art Film Sales Company with offices at 116 West 42d street. Mr. Wolff promises a remarkable picture in the presentation of Clyde Fitch's famous book, "The Girl Question of Geraldine," with Lucie Nelson Hall playing the lead supported by an extremely able company. The picture is to be made in Jacksonville, Fla., under the personal direction of Jerome Meyers, where they are working in the Eagle set of Mr. Ferrol's plant. From all indications this feature should be ready for screening on or about May 15.

Many will remember Miss Hall from her appearance in "The Three of Us" and later in her creation of "Everywoman" in Henry W. Savage's production of "Everywoman."

"WHO BEARS MALICE" (Lubin).

A very instructive picture of the lumber camps and forests of the North which is instructive as well as picturesquely beautiful. The habits of the lumbermen and trappers are faithfully drawn and the rigors of the surrounding. The story tells of a desperate feud between two of the men which runs through many encounters and places the lumberman's wife in imminent danger. The villain who is a trapper relentlessly pursues his opponent and even [illegible] to secure advantage. In the final fight which is desperate the trapper as a struggle falls upon his own knife which pierces his heart and after months of misery the woodman and his wife are restored to peace and happiness. The story features Edgar Jones and Lucy Cotton and is mounted by the best of the Lubin [illegible] artists.

Y. M. C. A. BOOKING WAR PICTURES.

The European War pictures which the Picture Playhouse Film Co., Inc., brought to this country by way of Italy some weeks ago, have just been critically passed upon by executive officers of the Young Men's Christian Association for the purpose of securing them for use in the strictly censored motion picture entertainments which are given in the various Y. M. C. A. branches in New York City and throughout the country. The pictures have already been contracted for a showing in the Twenty-third street (New York City) branch of the Y. M. C. A. Friday, May 14, and for the Fifty-ninth street branch the following day, May 15. It is likely that they will be shown in other Y. M. C. A. branches in New York City on subsequent dates and later in various other cities of the United States where the Y. M. C. A. goes in for picture entertainments.

The war pictures are proving one of the best pieces of property which the Picture Playhouse Company has ever handled. The ten prints of the double feature (the pictures are in two series, each consisting of four reels) have been in constant demand from the company's branch offices throughout the country and are bringing a record rental price.

President Woodrow Wilson and several members of his cabinet showed great interest in the pictures when they were shown at a private exhibition in Washington, D. C., not long ago and a number of big United States army officials added their approval to that of Col. Edwin Emerson, returned war correspondent, who said, when he first saw tahe pictures some weeks ago, that he believed them to be genuine and authentic in every important particular.

ENTIRE PICKFORD FAMILY IN "FANCHON THE CRICKET."

"Fanchon the Cricket," the Famous Players release of May 10th, attaches an unusual interest because of the fact that it not only presents Mary Pickford, the idol of the screen, in the title role, but that the supporting cast also includes Lottie and Jack Pickford, sister and brother of the popular star.

This is the first time since the Pickfords have been appearing on the screen that all three have been together in a single subject, and the production therefore possesses a unique interest aside from its great dramatic strength and the charm of "Little Mray's" exquisite portrayal of the title character.

The interest of this odd situation is further heightened by the fact that Lottie Pickford is at the present time a star in her own right. "Fanchon the Cricket" may therefor be termed not only a Pickford triumph, but a plural Pickford triumph.

A NEW CORPORATION.

Under the name of Messter Film Company, Inc., has been formed with offices at 110 West 40th street, New York. The aim of this company is the handling in the United States and Canada of the output of the Messter Film Company of Berlin, one of the foremost German producing companies. These films are considered the best made in Germany and are of a character, quality and nature which makes them appropriate and suitable for the American market.

The Board of Directors of this new company is made up of prominent New York merchants and its manager is Mr. Louis Gero, connected for years with the film import trade in this country and very well known to the film world.

RELIANCE INDIAN STORIES.

The Reliance Motion Picture Corporation is doing a real service to the lovers of Indian legends and to the general public in filming a series of Indian stories which are the work of Dark Cloud, an Indian actor.

All of these Reliance subjects are based upon legends which Dark Cloud had from his ancestors by word of mouth. Many of them were handed down by oral tradition from the time when this country belonged to the red men.

The latest of these is "Race Love" which is now in the process of production under the direction of Arthur Mackley. While the scenario is by G. N. Terry the theme is a story furnished by Dark Cloud.

A SPECIAL POSTER.

All over the Country theaters are displaying a very pretty one-sheet poster announcing the Falstaff comedies, made by Thanhouser. The border design is the torched Shakespearian horn, which is also the trade-mark of the brand. The poster is done in Turkey-red, with quaint, antique lettering. They were shipped to the Mutual Exchanges for distribution to their customers, and the branch managers are busy getting them to the theaters which are asking for Falstaffs.

KLEINE'S DENVER MANAGER GOES TO PITTSBURGH.

Miles F. Gibbons, manager of George Kleine's Denver office since its establishment, has been promoted to the managership of the Pittsburgh Branch. E. W. Biederstadt, associated with the Chicago Branch, succeeded Mr. Gibbons as Denver Manager.

VICTOR MOORE IN TWO MORE LASKY PRODUCTIONS.

Victor Moore, the celebrated Broadway comedy star, who has achieved such an extraordinary hit in his first photodramatic appearance under the Lasky management, in "Snobs," has agreed immediately to star in two more picturizations for the Lasky Company. With this purpose in view he left last Wednesday, and will, upon his arrival at the studios, immediately begin work in the picture version of that most famous Irish comedy, "Chimmie Fadden." The second of the two additional Victor Moore productions has not been definitely decided upon, but will be announced within the near future.

Notes of the Trade

THE MASKO FILM COMPANY has removed from 145 West 45th street, New York City to the twenty-seventh floor of the Metropolitan Building, 1 Madison avenue.

Tom Wilson who was a successful pugilist before he became a photoplay actor is arousing interest in a proposed Reliance gymnasium in Los Angeles. He believes that the gymnasium should be built so that the players can assemble after studio hours and take exercises. He says that the so-called difficult "stunts" in picture making would be very simple if the players were careful to keep in condition at all times.

Harry Mainhall, formerly author and director for the Essanay Company, is now in charge of the Smallwood Film Corporation script department. He is the author of "The Law of Nature," "Canned Curiosity," and "The Winding Way," the first three releases of Pyramid Pictures, featuring Edwin August.

Ethel Grandin and the Grandin Players under the direction of Ray C. Smallwood are busily engaged at the Cliffside Studio in New Jersey in the production of two reel subjects for the United Film Service.

For a subject that has been so often done in pictures as fire scenes, the praise from Exhibitors and laymen that is coming to Director Ashley Miller and Edison for the big fire scene in the play, "Out of the Ruins," in which Mabel Trunnelle is featured, is unusual. The play, though done in three reels, is remarkable for the long period that suspense of the super class is carried over.

Eugene Pallette, the well known actor, has become a Selig star. He is to take leading roles with Selig Pacific Coast stock companies.

Those who have been fortunate enough to see "God's Witness," a Thanhouser production, which has been selected as a Mutual Masterpicture, are enthusiastic in their praise of the work of Harris Gordon, who appears in the leading role. The picture was scenalized from the book "At the Mercy of Tiberius." W. Eugene Moore directed the picture, many of the scenes being taken in and around Savannah, Ga. "God's Witness" will be released during the latter part of May.

An important addition to the playing forces of the Ideal Studio is Mabel Van Buren, a clever motion picture artiste who portrays the leading role in a forthcoming United Production entitled "Stepping Westward," a two reel story by Rev. Clarence J. Harris, the well known photoplaywright. Miss Van Buren is well known for her work in the Lasky Production of "The Girl of the Golden West."

Giles Warren, who was recently on the Selig production staff and previously with Lubin, Victor and Whitman features, has become a Mutual director. As a beginning he is staging "Gridley's Wife," a one reel drama in which Thomas Wilson, Claire Anderson and Raymond Wells appear. The story deals with the crisis in the lives of a United States Marshal, his wife, and a secret service agent.

Harry Sheporwich, New York saelsman of the World Film Corporation, has succeeded in booking "Salambo" for a 25 days' run over Proctor's circuit of twelve theaters. "Shep" also engineered the big Marcus Loew contract whereby all World features are to be routed through that famous circuit, commencing with those released last September.

Lon Chaney, director of the Kerrigan-Victor company, is at work on the picturization of a short story by George Bronson Howard, adapted for the screen by Earl R. Hewitt. The play features J. Warren Kerrigan with Vera Sisson playing opposite him. Wm. Quinn plays the heavy character supported by Yeamans Titus. T. D. Crittenden and Herr Krueger, a fencing master of Los Angeles who was cast for a part in the story to make sure of the success of several fencing scenes which have much to do with the punch of the story. The picture will be released under the same title as the short story, "The Service of the Sword."

In the Edison "His Convert," a play of the underworld with a regeneration turn, Mabel Trunnelle and Marc MacDermott are cast opposite together for the first time in a long while.

Jean Frazer, a Los Angeles lassie, aged two years, appeared in a scene with a large leopard at the Selig Jungle Zoo last week and performed her most difficult task with a fearlessness which astonished even the animal trainers.

In appreciation of the splendid way in which Harry Weiss, has been conducting the Chicago office, of the World Film Corporation, Mr. Selznick has appointed him assistant to W. R. Scates, Central Division Manager. Harry will still supervise the local office, for the time being at least, but C. A. Dickinson who has been assistant manager will have charge of most of the details, so that when Scates is out of town which he is quite frequently, Weiss will be able to handle his work.

Ray Myers is the most recent addition to the staff of directors at the Griffith-Mutual studios in Hollywood. His first production is "Mike's Elopment," a one reel Reliance drama with a light comedy interest. Violet Wilkey, the talented Mutual child actress, is featured. In her support Harold Goodwin, Fred Burns and Pearl Sherwood appear.

Hobart Bosworth and his company of feature players are back from a ten days' stay on the Whitewater Ranch at the edge of the Salton Sink where they went to stage a number of exterior scenes in the production of his first Universal release, "Fatherhood," a four reel story of the cattle country.

Captain Wilbert Melville, manager of the Western Lubin Company, at Los Angeles, has returned from San Diego where for ten days he has been filming army and navy scenes for a forthcoming Lubin drama. Not only did Melville "borrow" all the infantry and cavalry there but he utilized an array of battleships, cruisers, torpedo boats, destroyers, transports and submarines as well. The troops are shown in all sorts of manoeuvres and one of the best scenes is a cavalry charge directly at the cameras.

B. A. Rolfe, this week, purchased for screen purposes Booth Tarkington's most successful story, "The Turmoil" which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post and upon which work will begin at once.

Many exhibitors over the country are calling the combination of the V. L. S. E., Inc., the "Big Four."

An old Indian legend resurrected by the Mutual star, Dark Cloud, the Indian chief, is the basis of the two reel Reliance drama, "The Huron Converts." In addition to being the author, Dark Cloud plays the principal part. Joseph Henaberry and Bessie Buskirk are also in the cast.

Robert Daly is hard at work on the production of his first picture since returning to the Universal Company, "Frivolous Fritzi." The picture features Fritzi Brunette. Supporting Miss Brunette are Jack Bramall, Bertram Law, J. Prescott and Lew Carter.

Miss Martha Boucher, has joined Director Colin Campbell's company, Selig Polyscope Jungle Zoo. Miss Boucher played the lead in "Ben Hur" on the spoken stage and is a talented actress.

B. A. Rolfe purchased the screen rights to "Big Tremaine" this week and will star the scenarioizing of the famous fiction document at once. "Big Tremaine" in addition to running serially in one of the biggest magazines, appeared as a serial in over seven hundred daily papers throughout the country.

Harry M. Young, Cincinnati salesman of the World Film Corporation, is the latest addition to the staff of hustling press agents. At Waverly, Ohio, he applied the World Film teachings wonderfully well. As a result of his efforts, the Waverly Watchman carried a five column ad of the Wonderland Theater, a quarter of a column announcement of their contract for World Film features and almost a column of good live news concerning the growth of the industry and the World Film Corporation in particular. This column was headed "A Year of Wonderful Success."

Guy Oliver, the well known actor, now a director for the Selig Polyscope Company, has completed a pictureplay fantasy "The Angel of Spring."

Lawrence B. McGill, until recently one of the principal directors with the Mutual Film Corporation, joined the staff of the Metro Pictures Corporation this week and will begin work immediately on one or that concern's big productions.

Director Henry Otto has finished work at the American studios on a comedy called "The Broken Window." It will be released in the Mutual program. The action begins with a scrub game going on in the town street. A batted ball comes crashing through a window, and complications ensue. Winifred Greenwood and Ed. Coxen are featured in the cast.

Mr. R. A. Bertschy and B. J. Scheafer are newly appointed salesmen for the Kansas City office of the World Film Corporation. Bertschy is a graduate of the Home Office school, of the World Film Corporation, while Mr. Schaefer was trained in the Central Division office, of the same company by Mr. Scates and Mr. Weiss. Another roadman with the Kansas City office is Mr. Joe Fieldman, who has made a name for himself in the Kansas City territory.

Thomas Jefferson has been cast for the part of Father White in "Up From the Depths," the four part Mutual feature now in rehearsal. Courtenay Foote will be featured in this play. Gladys Brockwell plays opposite him.

Murdock MacQuarrie and his company of Big U favorites are working on a two reel story entitled "The Swinging Doors." The story was written for Mr. MacQuarrie's company by Virginia Whitmore and put into scenario form by Dr. H. G. Stafford. The cast is composed of Murdock MacQuarrie, little Doris Baker, Marc Fenton, Jack Tutt, Irma Sorter, Miss Arnold and Paul Byron.

W. W. Kulp, Cleveland manager of the World Film Corporation, is one of the pioneers in the business. He made his debut 13½ years ago when the pictures were only 150 feet long. Kulp opened the first film exchange in Indiana. It was located in Indianapolis and was called The Calcium Light and Film Company. He also helped organize the H. Liebler Film Company. In Cleveland he owned the United States Film Service. He was also a manager for the old World Special.

"One Summer's Sequel," a two part dramatic picture produced by the American company and released in the Mutual program, has an unusually strong cast, headed by Winifred Greenwood and Ed. Coxen, interpreting it. George Field, Nan Christy, John Steppling, William Bertram and others are seen in support of the two stars.

Jack Clark and Gene Gauntier have left the Universal City studios for a trip of ten days into the back country where they are to take exterior scenes in the production of two stories of Irish life, "The Ulster Lass," and "The Smuggler's Lass," both written by Miss Gauntier. During their stay they expect to complete all the exteriors in these four reels and if possible will make a number of scenes for a story of the Kentucky mountains, the title of which has not yet been decided upon.

S. B. Kramer is acting temporarily as manager of the Pittsburgh office of the World Film Corporation. Since December 1913 he has been acting as manager of the Indianapolis office for Warner's Features and the United Film Service. In this capacity he met with undisputed success and was one of the most popular exchange men among the exhibitors in that territory. Previous to locating in Indianapolis he was with the Mutual Film Corporation in Omaha and Kansas City.

The Special Event Film Mfg. Co. have removed from 216 West 42d street to new quarters at 220 West 42d street.

Joseph DeGrasse and his company of Rex players are at work on a one reel story of the Kentucky hills written by Maude Thomas under the title, "Mountain Love." Pauline Bush plays the feminine lead with William Clifford playing opposite, supported by Ben Rothwell and Ray Gallagher.

The first trip that Mr. Harry Weiss took under his new title of Assistant Division Manager of the World Film Corporation was to spend a week at the Kansas City office of that company.

With almost all the old soldiers from the home of Sawtelle, Cal. working in the background to give the picture a touch of real life, and with more than four hundred extra people appearing from time to time throughout the picture, Robert Leonard and his company of Rex players are busy at work on a three-reel story of army life entitled "Rally 'Round the Flag." Mr. Leonard, Ella Hall and Charles Hickman play the leading roles.

Victor M. Shapiro, formerly Assistant Publicity and Promotion Manager of Hearst's Magazine, and late Publicity Manager of the Leslie-Judge Company, is now associated with F. C. Gunning, who conducts "The Films and Film Folk" under the name of "Wid" in the Evening Mail.

EIKO HAS GERMAN WAR FILMS.

The Eiko Film Company of America has just received 75,000 feet of film of the latest German War pictures from Berlin. These pictures are the very latest received in this country and show all the principal events and important engagements in the theater of war from February 1st up to and including April 10th, this year.

The Eiko Film Company of Germany is the largest motion picture concern in that country, and is making a consecutive serial history especially for the Archives of the German Imperial Government. The company has an army of more than one hundred cameramen, who work under the direct supervision and orders of the General Staff. Announcement is made that the Eiko Company is in a position to furnish a weekly service to exhibitors in New York and New Jersey.

"The Red Seal of Quality"

Love Rocks Throne of "Graustark"

LIKE "the Colonel's lady and Judy O'Grady," everyone is more or less human under the skin. Even princes fall in love and beautiful princesses from time immemorial have trampled on affairs of state and monarchial pride when the "real man" comes a-wooing.

IN America we believe one man is as good as another. George Barr McCutcheon, the author of "Graustark," chose as the hero of his great story a true American. The hero, Grenfall Lorry, met the beautiful princess when she was traveling through the United States "incog." And he fell in love at first sight.

NOW Lorry didn't know she was a princess. It probably wouldn't have made any difference if he had. He knew she was the girl for him. That was enough. So he followed her to "Graustark."

AND the beautiful princess fell in love with Lorry. Is there any more to say? For she was a true woman and altogether like "the Colonel's lady and Judy O'Grady."

THE task of putting "Graustark" in the films was one of the greatest ever imposed on any producer. But ESSANAY did not falter. Like all ESSANAY FEATURES, "Graustark" is a superb creation. It holds interest from the beginning to the end of its six acts.

THE following branch offices of the Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essanay (Inc.) are now booking this big success: New York City, 1600 Broadway; Philadelphia, 1316 Vine St.; Chicago, S. E. Cor. Wabash and Adams (Chicago Business College); Atlanta, 75 Walton St.; Kansas City, 12th and Walnut, Boley Bldg.; Dallas, 1900 Commerce St.; and San Francisco, Mr. C. B. Price, Hotel Stewart.

Sunday Shows in Lincoln

Nebraska's Capital City Will Probably Have No Sunday Picture Shows—Church People Made Earnest Fight Against Opening While Advocates of It Kept Silent—Shall the City's Sunday Be Aristocratic or Democratic?

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

MUCH comment was made in Lincoln because the Sunday picture show was an undefended issue at the early May election. The Sunday theater advocates did not come forward with their identities and their arguments, and the one-sided campaign was unusual. The names of those who had signed the Sunday show petition were run in local papers in installments.

Carl C. Engberg, executive dean of the University of Nebraska, which is located at Lincoln, made the following statement, which has the needs of the university alone in view and leaves the citizens wholly out of consideration:

"There has been considerable increase in delinquency over the first semester of a year ago. There has also been a general lowering of the scholastic average. This lowering of studies is due to a very great extent to the ever increasing desire for amusement, and the recent increase in social life of the University. This tendency is just now in the ascendancy and should the proposition of Sunday theaters carry at the coming election we can look for a decrease of at least 15 per cent in the scholarship of the University for the coming year. What is needed more than anything else at present is to get back to the solid facts and the realization of the opportunities of university life."

Pledge cards against the Sunday shows were distributed at every church in the city by the committee of 100. At a political meeting all municipal candidates questioned were against the Sunday shows.

Ministers devoted a Sunday to the issue. Rev. R. A. Waite of the First Congregational church taking as his subject "Lincoln's Enemies," appealed to the New England traditions of Puritanism brought over on the Mayflower and declared Sabbath desecration is brought to this country in the steerage of the ocean liners. One of his utterances: "This Godless movie craze is increasingly creating a morbid desire for Sunday amusements that as a vampire feasts on the vitals of religion."

This is a clearly defined position, but there are many sincere and faithful members of the community who in their hearts and minds entertain what they think a more human and in its essence more Christian idea of religion. Let us admit that Sunday shows are "commercial"—is not the church "commercial?" The truth simply is that the ideal picture show on Sunday and the ideal church would be, both of them, big helps to a community in fighting evil things.

NEBRASKA BRIEFS.

Better censorship of moving pictures is needed, decided the Woman's Club of Norfolk, discussing the subject of "civics."

The senior class at Nebraska Wesleyan University, Lincoln, decided upon a practical gift as a class memorial. A show accompanied the formal presentation of a motion picture machine which will be used in the class rooms, and by the Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A.

Omaha exhibitors will assist the "Buy Omaha-Made Goods" campaign. Samuel H. Goldberg of the Princess, 1316-19 Douglass street, volunteered to run a slide for a year free. He also promised to take up the matter with the Omaha Moving Picture Exhibitors' association of which he is president.

The Elite theater at Hebron frankly tells its patrons what it costs to book a feature like "The Eagle's Mate" and as is necessary at such times, let its regular program go unused, though paid for. This explains to them the 10 and 20 cents admission.

Miller & Lynn have inaugurated Saturday matinees for the Royal at Ponca.

Improvement clubs at Lincoln used moving pictures made in Lincoln parks to secure votes for a bond issue for a better park system.

Every boy or girl who helped clean up South Omaha was given a free ticket to a picture show at the Orpheum.

R. J. Merry will continue as manager of the Electric theater at Republican City, which has been sold by L. C. Bacon to Thomas & Bush.

Odd Fellows at Polk will commence early in May the construction of a $12,000 auditorium. T. J. Hahn is a member of the building committee.

Nat. Johnson, owner of the Lyric at Fremont, closed since the departure of J. W. Glenn, returned to Fremont from California and announced that the house would be operated for the present with Leader Furse of the orchestra as manager.

Manager Robinson of the Home theater at Blair had a benefit for the baseball team. The local band furnished music free.

A. F. Tucker has bought a haf interest in the Star at Crofton.

SHOWMANSHIP IN IOWA.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

MANY ideas have been released in Iowa, nearly all of which will be passed by the National Board of Showmanship. The Lyric, at Osage showed "Officer 666" as a benefit for the local Queen Esther Circle. Local pictures proved a great attraction at the Nemo, at Earlville. Mt. Ayer citizens had a clean-up day. Boys and girls who had made anybody's backyard trashless filled out a coupon and were admitted free to the Princess by Manager L. P. Todd. Films of the Panama Canal were shown at a benefit for the public school at the picture show in Dow City. Modern Woodmen in Waukon "got behind" a show of fraternal films at the Cota. The Grand, at Dubuque, gave a similar show. Local snapshots created extra business for three nights at the Gem, in Lamont. The Idle Hour, at Leon, has booked "The Hazards of Helen" for a series of Saturday matinees. Pictures of photoplay stars worth framing are given to patrons every Monday night by the New Mystic, at Madrid. The Comet, at Albia, is running "Runaway June" every Tuesday in addition to its regular program. Manager W. H. Iversen, of the Superba, at Lyons, is showing four, five and six-reel features every Wednesday. Women's clubs of Belle Plaine handled the ticket sale when the Isis gave an afternoon's receipts to help build a new park. The Family, at Davenport, is featuring a new $5,000 Bartola. The Palace, at Burlington, in co-operation with a local department store, had an "after-breakfast matinee" when a corset-fitting picture was shown.

RATE WAR AND NEUTRALITY IN SHELDON.

Sheldon has a cut-throat war between two houses, Wonderland and the Harvey, and the latter cut the admission down to 3 cents or two for a nickel. Wonderland had the Sheldon field to itself until the Bijou (now the Harvey) started. When the Lyric, the third house, entered the field, Wonderland cut to a nickel and the Harvey slashed still lower. Meanwhile the Lyric is maintaining its price and refusing to rock the boat.

WANT SUNDAY CLOSED.

The City Council at Anamosa has been asked to close the Sunday picture shows. The petition represents the desires of the following: The Civic Club, Fortnightly Club, Concord Round Table, Daughters of the American Revolution, Epworth League, Christian Endeavor, M. E. Ladies' Aid and Mission Circle, Congregational Ladies' Aid.

PICTURES IN IOWA SCHOOLS.

Professor Whittaker of the Iowa State Teachers' College, has been conducting investigations at Waterloo and Des Moines as to the desires of school children for moving pictures and their educational value. The Teachers' College is working with the Iowa State University at Ames to establish a state-wide circuit of shows in the schools.

IOWA BRIEFS.

R. C. Hoadley, of Garden Grove, has opened a show at Weldon. Dr. A. Morton and Clifford Hall will expend $1,500 remodeling the Shoemacker building at Laurens into a moving picture theater.

Manager Sam Garden has awarded the contract for construction of the New Garden theater at Davenport. It will cost about $50,000 and will be ready about Sept. 1.

Tough luck for the Cota theater was to have its electric power line fouled by a tree when giving the people of Waukon such a pretentious picture as "Quo Vadis." Later the power was restored to allow one belated show.

The Airdome picture show—three nights a week—has been started at Kellerton.

A. L. Raines has purchased the interest of his partners, Ted Jackson and Glen Jeffers, in the picture show at Hopkins.

The Princess, at Cadar Rapids, was closed for a week, but has been reopened and will run until June 1, when it goes under new management, who will remodel throughout and install 150 more seats, bringing the capacity up to 750.

A. E. Cooper & Son have erected an airdome picture show at Maxwell.

CENSORS AND FREE PASSES

Grand Rapids, Mich., Censors and City Exhibitors Fall Out Over "Co-operation."

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

THE cooperative relations between Grand Rapids managers and the censorship committee appointed by the mayor have been strained. The manager provided the members of this committee with passes to investigate the shows. The report of the investigators suggested that when the passes were presented the managers knew censors were in the house and put on better pictures. The result was the pass privilege was withdrawn and the managers hinted the investigators might enter unobserved and view the customary exhibitions. Mrs. Gilmer Kuiper, the chairman of the censorship committee, appointed the following to assist that body in drawing up an ordinance:

Joseph Renihan, to represent the Catholic federation; Claude O. Taylor, representing the labor unions; E. J. Sharo, representing the Y. M. C. A.; J. S. Davis and John Ensign, representing the moving picture interests.

MICHIGAN BRIEF NOTES.

Films of addresses in sign language are announced for the annual meeting of the Michigan Association of the Deaf, at Flint, June 11-16.

Grand Rapids theaters ran slides to help the local "swat the fly" crusade.

C. S. Sullivan is now devoting his time to the Grand, having closed the Royal at Escanaba.

The Star at Gaylord has returned to an every-day schedule. Saturday matinees have been added. James Taylor is managing the house for James Overton of Grayling.

C. A. Fiske expects to open a new picture house seating 400 in the H. H. Sheldon building, at Albion, about July 1st. Remodeling will begin early in May.

A. Richter of Otsego has taken over the Rex at Three Rivers.

A "camera fiend" roamed the streets of Benton Harbor, making pictures that boosted business at the Bijou.

The Copper Country Commercial Club had planned to show clean-up campaign pictures in houses in that territory, but after running the film through in Hancock rejected it because it was a paint company advertisement.

Will Dyer has sold the picture show at Bellevue to W. H. Landon of Battle Creek.

A. L. Favier, formerly a photographer at Gaylord, has purchased the Royal at Alphena.

The Michigan state legislature, in session at Lansing, was filmed and will be shown throughout the state.

The Salisbury animal pictures were made an educational event during the showing at the Auditorium in Saginaw. Five thousand tickets at five cents were distributed among the school children.

A small boy tampered with the electric wires at the Bijou in Trenton and the short circuit caused an embryo panic.

ILLINOIS BRIEFS.

William B. Sheets has opened the Bijou at Quincy with a six-reel program.

Charles Kizer of Springfield, later of Chicago, will be the manager of the Lyric at Litchfield as the Grand there, recently bought by Charles Gehlman of Springfield, is to be known hereafter.

The Drexel theater at Joliet, originally built by L. M. Rubens, has been sold to Harry A. Rubens.

E. J. Vezina of Grand Rapids, Michigan, has become resident manager of the Superba at Freeport, succeeding Martin Wagner, who has acquired the Lyric.

W. W. Watts of the New Gaiety at Springfield showed "The Nigger," Springfield had a race riot a few years ago, but the stage version of "The Nigger" has since been shown there without protest and the film caused no excitement.

The Gaiety at Kankakee has returned to its old vaudeville policy—continuous from 7:30 to 10:30 with pictures.

Thomas Gassman and Edward Hanley of Tuscaloa have been making arrangements to open a picture show in Hibernian hall at Ivesdale and later to acquire a chain of photoplay houses in that part of the state.

E. A. Melze has been enlarging the Echo at Des Plaines.

Redecoration and other changes were planned by Davis Breeding and Walter Bennett, who took over the lease of Glenn Bradbury on the Haisb Auditorium at De Kalb. They will run vaudeville until summer when an exclusive picture policy will be adopted.

The Pythian and Crescent theaters at Marshall have been merged.

The Standard Motion Picture company of Chicago and the East St. Louis Sun have been making arrangements to take a picture in East St. Louis. The leading lady will be selected in a voting contest.

The censors of Oak Park acted for the first time when they refused to allow Manager Hodgson of the Oak Park theater to show "A Modern Magdalene."

The city of Macomb filed suit to collect tax of $5.00 a month for three months from Harry Frank, proprietor of the Grand. Frank believes the tax unlawful and announced a court test of the ordinance.

A strike in the building trades halted plans for George K. Spoor's new picture house at Waukegan. Work had not commenced, but higher wages would necessitate new estimates.

Censor Bill in Illinois

Turner Bill Before Lower House of the State Legislature Puts Censoring of Film Under Supervision of Public Utilities Commission—Must Appoint Board of Three at $1,500 a Year Each—Fees, Penalties and Appeals.

By Frank H. Madison, Illinois Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Turner Bill, offered to the lower chamber of the legislature of Illinois, provides for the appointment of a board of censorship by the state's Public Utilities Commission. It is to be comprised of three persons, one to be appointed for a term of one year, one for two years and the third for three years, or a full term. As the office shall become vacant a new appointment shall be made for the full term.

The Pubic Utilities Commission shall furnish the board of censors with suitable office rooms and with sufficient equipment to properly carry out the provisions of this act. The board of censors may organize by electing one of its members president. The secretary of the Public Utilities Commission shall act as secretary of the board. Each member of the board of censors shall receive an annual salary of $1,500 per year.

The members of the board shall be considered as employees of the State Public Utilities Commission and shall be paid as other employees of such commission are paid. The Public Utilities Commission shall appoint such other assistants as may be necessary to carry on the work of the board.

It shall be the duty of the board of censors to examine and censor as herein provided all motion picture films to be publicly exhibited and displayed in the State of Illinois. The board shall charge a fee of $1.00 for each reel of film to be censored which does not exceed 1,000 lineal feet; for any reel of film exceeding 1,000 lineal feet, the sum of two dollars shall be charged.

Only such films as are in the judgment and discretion of the board of censors of a moral, educational or amusing and harmless character shall be passed and approved by such board. They shall be stamped or designated in an appropriate manner and consecutively numbered. Before any motion picture film shall be publicly exhibited, there shall be projected upon the screen the words, "Approved by the Illinois Board of Censors" and the number of the film.

The board of censors may work in conjunction with any censor board or boards of legal status of other states as a censor congress and the action of such congress in approving or rejecting films shall be considered as the action of the board when the fees therefore have been paid to the Illinois board, shall be considered approved by such board.

Ninety days after this act shall take effect no films may be publicly shown or exhibited within the State of Illinois unless they have been passed and approved by the board of the censor congress and stamped and numbered by such board or congress, as provided for herein.

Any person, firm or corporation who shall publicly exhibit or show any motion picture within the State of Illinois unless it shall have been passed, approved and stamped by the Ilinois board of censors or the congress of censors shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not less than $25.00 nor more than $300.00, or imprisoned not less than 30 days nor more than 1 year, or both, for each offense.

Any person in interest being dissatisfied with any order of such board shall have the same rights and remedies as to filing a petition for hearing on the reasonableness and lawfulness of any order of such board or to set aside, vacate or amend any order of such board as is provided in the case of persons dissatisfied with the orders of the State Public Utilities Commission.

Every person, firm or corporation producing, leasing, selling or exhibiting motion picture films shall secure an annual license. Applications for licenses shall be made to the Public Utilities Commission and considered and passed upon by the board of censors, provided for herein. The said board shall have power to make and promulgate rules and regulations not inconsistent with this Act under which licenses shall be issued and under which all such persons, firms or corporations shall operate, and to suspend, cancel or revoke such licenses for a violation of the terms of this act or of the rules and regulations so adopted in conformity thereto. Each such licensee shall pay an annual license fee of $5.00, which shall accompany every application for a license.

MANAGERS AND PROGRAMS.

Stunts to keep the ticket roll unwinding are numerous. At the Star in Plano, Gerda Holmes, until recently with the Essanay company, appeared in person. Manager Harry Redmond of the Majestic at East St. Louis will admit free all Elks at the coming state convention to a show made up of films showing ceremonies attendant upon the building of the new Elks home there. Redmond has installed fifty electric fans. The Empire at Morris had 150 surprises for its patrons in as many local slides. Each male patron of Scott's Hippodrome at Jacksonville was given a five-cent cut of tobacco. Manager G. Schneider, Jr., had a special program at the Grand in East St. Louis, where the Slade School Parents and Teachers' association combined forces with the house. Manager Edwards of the Palace at Staunton also had a benefit for the high school. The Star at Evanston had to turn away business when it showed a local film of a prominent citizen paying a freak election bet. Ruth Stonehouse of the Essanay company once lived at Wilamette and her photograph in the new bower-like lobby of the rejuvenated Village theater is affectionately inscribed to her friends. This house showed "The Wishing Ring" under the auspices of the Zeta Beta Psi.

NEW CHARTERS IN ILLINOIS.

The secretary of the state at Springfield issued charters to the following:

Galesburg Amusement Company, Galesburg; capital, $2,500; amusement and theatrical business; incorporators, William J. Olson, A. B. Olson, Nat J. Neylon.

Echo Amusement company, Des Plaines; capital, $20,000; amusement business; incorporators, John T. Ayers, Emil A. Melze, B. L. Franzen, Jr., William F. Graupner, Fred A. Helm.

National Amusement Coupon corporation Chicago; capital, $2,000; advertising coupon business; incorporators, Isaac Bloom, Abraham Goldberg, Joseph C. Harris.

Universal Camera company, Chicago; capital, $25,000; manufacturing and dealing in moving pictures, etc.; incorporators, Charles E. Douglas, L. D. Mahon, Nick Maehl.

BLOOMINGTON'S NEW HOUSE.

The Irvin theater is the tentative name for Clarence E. Irvin's $50,000 photoplay house under construction at Bloomington, but he may hold a contest for another title. The building will be two stories, white terra cotta, trimmed with chocolate colored brick. Much marble will be used in the interior. It will seat 1,000.

The head camp of the Modern Woodmen of America at Rock Island is preparing a nation-wide advertising campaign with slides in moving picture theaters.

Pennsylvania's New Bills

Governor Brumbaugh Advised by City Solicitor Ryan of Harrisburg That the Snyder Bills, Amending Building Code, Should Not Be Passed—Thinks Vaudeville Should Have Adequate Safety Devices—Amending Daix Bill.

Special to Moving Picture World from Philadelphia News Service.

GOVERNOR BRUMBAUGH has recently been advised by City Solicitor Ryan that the four bills introduced in legislature by Senator Snyder should not become laws. These bills, Mr. Ryan says, aim to protect a small number of moving picture theaters in the city, which for years have operated in flagrant violation of fire laws, from the threatened action of the fire marshal in closing such places because they are giving vaudeville performances as well as moving pictures.

He declares that these theaters were erected for moving picture displays only, and in conformity with the law so restricting their use, and do not contain the safety devices and appliances which the law requires theaters to install. The act of 1913, which held that theater laws should not apply to those places where vaudeville is shown, was ignored by the fire marshal, who ordered that they cease vaudeville or close. Suits were brought to restrain the marshal, but it was handed down in Court No. 4 that the protecting section was illegal and unconstitutional, and dismissed the complaints. Two weeks later the Snyder bills were introduced in the legislature. In his appeal to the Governor not to approve these bills should they reach him, Mr. Ryan said in part:

"The introduction of vaudeville carries with it the introduction in front of the audience of electrical apparatus, combustible scenery and the accessories of a theater. In a moving picture exhibition the machine which throws the pictures upon the screen is enclosed in a fireproof room, while in front of the audience there is nothing combustible but a curtain for the reception of the picture. A single act of vaudeville, however introduces the things to which I have already made mention."

That the Daix bill, which provides for a new system of censoring moving pictures, will be extensively amended before it passes the present legislature, was recently indicated when the Senate sent the measure back to the Judiciary General Committee.

When the bill came up for a third reading Senator Thompson, Beaver, moved that the bill be recommitted to the Judiciary Special Committee for amendment. "The bill has a salary list amounting to $32,460," said Senator Thompson, "and I desire to amend it so that the salary roll will be $16,140."

Senator Daix, sponsor for the bill, objected, asserting that the measure would save $40,000 in fees. Mr. Daix added that the bill was drawn by the Attorney-General and has the support of the administration. He called for an aye and nay vote and the Thompson motion won by a vote of 23 to 16.

Chief Censor J. Louis Breitinger recently indicated that he would be satisfied with the law as it is at present, rather than have the Daix measure, which he was instrumental in framing, amended so as to curtail the powers of the censor and limit the censorship. He said he favored the present act, even though the Daix bill raises his salary and the salaries of his assistants.

"INDUSTRIAL SAFETY" FILMS.

Helpful addresses were supplemented by four motion picture films recently at a meeting of Lehigh Valley Counci No. 5 of the National Safety Council in the Lyric at Allentown. Great interest is being shown in the campaign of industrial safety which is sweeping over the entire country. The four pictures exhibited at this meeting were: "The Workman's Lesson," "The Crime of Carelessness," "The Man He Might Have Been" and "A Locomotive Smashup."

NO SUNDAY PRIVATE SHOW.

Owing to an eleventh-hour order from Director Porter of the Department of Public Safety, in Philadelphia, there was no private exhibition last Sunday evening, in the Chestnut Street Opera house, of the new film, "The Heart of Maryland." More than fifty persons who had been invited to view the pictures by Sidney McSween, manager of the house, went to the theater and found it dark. "I had sent out 500 invitations," said Mr. McSween, "but luckily was able to reach most of my intended guests late in the day and explain that the picture could not be shown. The director asserted that the picture could not be shown as the law did not permit the opening of the theater on Sunday, even though the performance be strictly private."

ACADIA FORMALLY OPENED.

Philadelphia's Beautiful New Theater Has Its First April 24.

The doors of the beautiful new Arcadia theater, 16th and Chestnut streets, were formally opened to the public on the afternoon of Saturday, April 24. This wonderful motion picture theater is one of the most handsome structures of its kind in America, and as nothing but strictly first class pictures will be shown, it should be patronized to capacity from the start.

When time approached for the operator to throw the first picture upon the screen the house had long since been filled to the last seat. Outside there was a long line of automobiles waiting for their occupants to make an appearance. Busy ticket sellers mopped their brows and anxiously awaited a slight lull in the wave of curious persons eagerly seeking to gain admission.

The theater opened with the showing of that well known production "The High Road," in which picture Valli Valli takes the leading role. Mrs. Fiske attained great success in the play, and when it was decided to convert the former great stage production into a moving picture feature film E. A. Rolfe sought far and wide for the proper star to portray the role of the sprightly young heroine. Valli Valli, former star of the "Chocolate Soldier" and the "Purple Robe" was finally selected. How well she succeeded in rendering her part was clearly evidenced by the continual applause of a very critical audience.

PHILADELPHIA BRIEFS.

The management of the Calehuff Supply Company, 1301 Race street, reports having taken the agency for Philadelphia and vicinity for the Standard moving picture machine.

Lewis M. Swaab, proprietor of a film supply house, 1327 Vine street, reports having installed the beautiful automatic ticket chopper in the new Arcadia.

Owing to the secession of its lease the Palace moving picture theater, of Harrisburg, will be forced to vacate its present headquarters at 333 Market street, on or about May I.

The co-operation of the eighteen moving picture theaters in Reading has been secured to help along the Clean City Week plans. The sub-committee on co-operation of moving picture theaters, consisting of Mrs. A. D. Nelson and Mrs. I. H. Hartman, conferred with B. H. Zerr, president of both the state and local motion picture exhibitors' league. The result was the falling in line of the picture houses in this clean-up idea. Slides properly advertising the event will be distributed to each of the eighteen houses and will be exhibited between performances.

The Standard theater, between 16th and 17th streets, on Market street, Philadelphia, will celebrate their first anniversary week between April 26 and 30. The anniversary celebrates not alone the culmination of a year of success fur the theater, but also a year in which Stanley V. Mastbaum, its directing spirit, who one year ago was known only as a successful real estate operator, has leaped from practical obscurity to foremost rank in the list of the country's purveyors. The program arranged for the first three days will show as the principal feature Hazel Dawn in the title role of "Niobe." On Thursday, Friday and Saturday Lois Meredith will appear in the first local appearance of the screen version of "Help Wanted" in the character of Gertrude Meyer, the little stenographer, whose misadventures while in search of work make up the plot of the story.

The moving picture theater at the northeast corner of Seventh and McClellan streets, Nos. 1809-1813 South Seventh street, has been conveyed by Mark Haller to Arthur I. Berlin for a nominal consideration, subject to a mortgage of $14,000. It is on a lot 50.3 feet by 99.9 feet and is assessed at $30,000.

The Gleen theater, Ontario and Glenwood avenue, has recently closed its doors to the public for an indefinite period of time. It is thought that the competition proved too keen for the management of the theater and that they could not stand the pace.

William George, former owner of the Palace, Allentown, announces that he has sold his theater to another party whose name he would not divulge. The management of the theater is now in the hands of Edward Buss.

Title to the motion picture theater at the southwest corner of Cumberland and Sydenham streets was recently conveyed by the Tenant Moving Picture Company to W. Henry Elfreth, subject to mortgages of $7,000. It occupies a lot 35x88 feet and is assessed at $15,000.

Patrons of the Victoria, Harrisburg, Pa., were recently furnished with a great surprise when they noticed that the pictures were much clearer and failed to cause any blurring of the vision. This was due to the fact that a new machine had been installed. This new machine is a Simplex.

ATLANTA NEWS LETTER.

By A. M. Beatty, Atlanta Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

C. E. TANDY, manager of the Atlanta branch of the Paramount Company, is in New York on business for his exchange.

The Atlanta Anti-Tuberculosis Association, under the auspices and assisted by the Atlanta Ad Men's Club, gave a free lecture with which moving pictures bearing on the prevention of this dreaded disease were used, Sunday night, at the Grand theater. Dr. J. Wade Conkling, chairman of the educational committee of the association, delivered the lecture. Dr. Conkling paid high tribute to the moving picture in the work it is doing to bring to the public actual scenes in the ravages of the disease. The theater was crowded.

Jake Wells has added another link to the tremendously strong and attractive chain of feature attractions at the Grand. Arriving in Atlanta direct from New York, Thursday, he secured the special Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essanay feature service before nightfall. This service will be introduced to the Grand patrons on Wednesday and Thursday in the Vitagraph feature of the "Juggernaut."

The Vaudette announces this week as being an all-star program. Beverley Bayne in "On the Dawn Road;" Pearl White in "Exploits of Elaine;" Ruth Stonehouse in "A New George Ade Fable;"

Francis Bushman in "The Return of Richard Neal;" Charlie Chaplin in "On the Beach;" as also Anita Stewart and Norma Talmadge.

The Savoy announces Billie Ritchie in "Poor Policy" in addition to the "Black Box" at that popular theater on Confederate Memorial Day.

KRITERION EXCHANGE MOVES.

Max W. Herring, of the Kriterion Film Exchange of Pittsburgh, announces that he will remove to the room formerly occupied by the Famous Players Film Service at 404 Ferry street. The new location will afford the Kriterion Company the needed room for rapidly increasing business. Mr. Herring is a man that is well known to every exhibitor in and about Pittsburgh.

FILM DELIVERY SERVICE.

Dean McCloskey, George Vogenberger and Jack Scott have started a film delivery that will prove a boon to the exhibitors in Pittsburgh and surrounding territory.

W. T. KINSON GOES TO MUTUAL.

Walter T. Kinson, formerly manager of the Calcium branch of the General Film Company of Pittsburgh, Pa., is now holding a similar position with the Pittsburgh branch of the Mutual Film Corporation, H. B. Miller having assumed the management for only a temporary period after he sold out to the Mutual. Sydney E. Abel will continue as manager of the features of the Mutual and G. R. Ainsworth has charge on the bookings of "The Diamond From the Sky."

MAHONINGTON'S NEW HOUSE.

Interior work on the Baltimore building on Long avenue was started by workmen last week in Mahonington, Pa. This handsome brick building, which will be used for a moving picture theater, will be one of the finest buidings on the south side. The progress in its construction has been watched with interest by exhibitors. Work is now being rushed in order to complete the building in time for spring and summer trade.

FOLLY THEATER LICENSED.

The Folly theater, a new moving picture house at 646 West Twenty-sixth street, Erie, Pa., has been granted a permit to operate, following an inspection by the Fire Chief and Building Inspector. M. B. F. Neyland is the owner of the theater, which is the only one located in the southwestern part of the city.

UNITED FILM'S HOUSE ORGAN.

The first issue of a weekly house organ to be known as "The Service" was launched in Pittsburgh during the week of April 12th. "The Service" is designed to boost the United Film Service in this district. C. B. Nelson, who is in charge of Manager Lande's recently organized publicity department, is the editor of this publication. "The Service" will be issued twice a month for the present, but will likely be launched as a weekly in the near future.

IN PITTSBURGH.

It has been reported that the Sheridan Square theater, East Liberty, will soon change its policy to motion pictures.

Pennsylvania suffragists who were unable to make the trip to Troy, N. Y., to witness the casting of the Women's Liberty Bell, will soon have an opportunity to see the entire ceremony in the pictures.

Altogether 750 feet of film was used in "taking" the ceremonies and the most picturesque features will soon appear on the regular "News Weekly" reels sent out by the Pathe Mutual and Hearst-Selig film companies.

The New Liberty Theater

Fine Picture House in Pittsburgh's East Liberty Section Begun—Will Seat 1,667 People, 1,000 on Ground Floor, the Others in Gallery—Fronts on Penn Avenue—Men Who Are Behind the New Company.

Special to Moving Picture World from Pittsburgh News Service.

WHAT promises to be the very last word in modern motion picture playhouse construction is The New Liberty theater, for which excavation is being made in Penn avenue, East Liberty, Pittsburgh, Pa., by the East Liberty Theater Company. This undertaking is the most talked of topic in the Pittsburgh film circles and is expected to be one of the very finest and up-to-date photoplay houses in Pennsylvania when it opens Oct. 1. Only the highest class features will be produced at this theater.

There will be 1,667 seats in this house—about 1,000 on the first floor—with standing room for 300, and 667 seats on the second floor, 300 of which will be in boxes. The greatest attention has been given to ventilation, lighting and general comfort. The building is to be about 65 feet high and will have a frontage of 100 feet in Penn avenue. The entrance from which the marquise extends will be 32 feet in width. The architects are H. E. Kennedy & Company, Home Trust Building, Pittsburgh, and Palmer and Hornbostel, New York City.

An application will be made for a Pennsylvania State charter of incorporation on the 17th day of May by Miles H. England, John G. Buchanan, William R. Scott, James I. Marsh and Kenneth Buffington, for an intended corporation to be called "East Liberty Theater Company," the character and object of which is the establishing, maintaining and conducting of a theater or theaters.

CHANGES AMONG EXCHANGES.

The Independent Film Exchange, with A. E. Davis, manager, at 415 Ferry street, Pittsburgh, moved last week to the rooms heretofore occupied by the Pittsburg Photoplay Company, 413 Ferry street. The latter concern has consolidated with the Continental Feature Film Company, 420 Penn avenue. The Independent Company's reason for shifting next door is to provide for more room which is needed for rapidly increasing business.

The Exhibitors' Publishing Company and Messenger Service has moved into the room formerly occupied by the Independent Film Exchange. Mr. Callahan, the proprietor, states that the printing department will be increased in efficiency by the installation of a cylinder press. J. M. Fitzgerald, well known among the Pittsburgh exhibitors, has been engaged as manager of the printing department.

BUYS AMERICAN THEATER.

The American theater, at 1510 Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh, one of the best picture houses in the upper Fifth avenue district has been purchased by A. M. Snyder, who took charge of the house last week. Jules Bossampierre, the former owner and manager, bought the American about seven months ago and built up a business which is on a safe paying basis. Mr. Bossampierre has left for Chicago to settle an estate and it is expected by his friends he will not return to the Steel City. The American now seats 310, but Mr. Snyder is planning a remodeling process which will add 100 more seats. To make this house one in the cozy class, he is also going to repaint, redecorate and otherwise beautify in appearance.

PITTSBURGH TO SEE CABIRIA.

Pittsburgh is, to say the least, on the qui vive over the forthcoming production of Gabriele D'Annunzio's world-famous masterpiece "Cabiria," which will be revealed hereabouts for the first time in the new Miles theater, Penn avenue and Seventh street, during the week of May 3. News of this magnificent spectacle has come to us via New York, Boston and Chicago, where the drama ran for months to capacity business; and although it has been a long time reaching the Smoky City, the delay has only served to stimulate added interest in its initial production in the Miles. That it is to be done in this particular playhouse (one of the most beautiful and comfortable in the world), lends further importance to the scope of the production, since the theater, as everybody knows, is equipped with the largest pipe organ and unit orchestra in the world—an instrument peculiarly adapted to bring out the full beauties of not only the drama itself, but the elaborate score that has been written for it.

PITTSBURGH SHORT ITEMS.

The great Universal special, "Damon and Pythias," is making a fine record for itself in the western part of Pennsylvania. Mr. France, manager of the Feature Film & Calcium Light Company, Pittsburgh, Pa., which handles this feature, states that bookings are coming in at a record-breaking rate and that exhibitors are well pleased with the results it obtains.

John and Joseph DeMuth have sold to Charles A. Lange a lot, 30x100 feet, improved with a one-story brick structure used as a nickeldeon building in the south side of Spring Garden avenue, Twenty-fourth ward, Pittsburgh, Pa., for $6,500.

The big motion picture success, Rex Beach's, "The Spoilers," will begin an indefinite engagement at the Nixon theater, a high-class opera and road show house on Sixth avenue, Pittsburgh, May 5.

Special representative of the Automatic Ticket Selling machine, H. C. Simeral, with headquarters in Pittsburgh, left last week with his wife and baby for Clarksburg, W. Va., where they joined Mr. Simeral's parents and proceeded on south to Florida, to spend a vacation on the latters' farm. Mr. Simeral states that they will remain for a month or more.

Al. W. Cross, manager of the Hudson Feature Film company, Pittsburgh, Pa., announces that they are negotiating for two great photoplays which will be soon put on the market, "Prohibition" and "The Melting Pot." Mr. Cross was associated with Walker Whiteside in the last-named production, in the managerial end of the business which makes the picture of great interest to him.

Elmo Keane, one of the well-known men of the Pittsburgh moving picture theaters, is working on a scenario. "6-No" is the title and it is said to be a good one throughout.

The Regent Red Rose held a meeting last week at the Regent theater in East Liberty. Full particulars will be announced next week.

S. V. Kramer is now manager of the Pittsburgh branch of the World Film Corporation.

The Michaels & Freeman company has opened offices at 304 Cameraphone building, Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh, and designates its business as photoplay brokers. The new firm will buy and sell theaters, theater equipments, requirements and films.

"Quo Vadis," the eight-reel drama of days of Nero and St. Peter, will be projected in the Asbury M. E. church, Forbes street, Pittsburgh, Friday evening, April 30, free of charge.

Resigns as Protest

In Milwaukee, Wis., Censor Barrows Leaves Board as Protest—Couldn't Have His Own Way in Its Decisions—Had Been Secretary of National Board—Mayor Is Satisfied with Work of the Board—Its Membership.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

F. M. BARROWS resigned after a year's service from the Citizens' Moving Picture Censorship Commission at Milwaukee. His reason is quoted "as a protest against the work on the commission by the moving picture exhibitors through the secretary of the commission, Charles Philips, who is himself an exhibitor and attorney for the exhibitors' association."

"The situation has become unbearable to me, especially after having served as associate secretary of the National Board of Censorship. I intended my resignation to act as a protest against the conditions in the hope that the public will come to know the true facts."

Secretary Phillips replied: "Mr. Barrows' charge is utterly unfounded. The exhibitors and the commission are working together and getting good results. The mayor is satisfied with the commission's work and so is the public. Milwaukee's commission is known all over the country as the model censorship body."

"Mr. Barrows is resigning because he has not had everything his own way. However, the general satisfaction with which our work is regarded assures us that in the main we have been right in our judgment."

A statement attributed to Mr. Barrows that board meetings were nothing but wrangles, were denied by G. N. Meyer, a member of the board. The Sentinel says:

"According to Mr. Meyer, the statement by Mr. Barrows that C. H. Phillips, secretary of the board, had been coerced by exhibitors, is untrue. Mr. Phillips has been quite fair, he said. Referring to the alleged wrangles at board meetings, Mr. Meyer said they occured only when Mr. Barrows was present. In controverting another charge, Mr. Meyer said it was only at Mr. Barrows' request that the aides of the board were present at the meetings."

Mayor Baden credited the board with good work. "I do not believe that with such members as Judge Neele B. Neelen and others on the board that any improper films will be passed," he said.

The censorship commission was appointed by the mayor over a year ago. Various organizations nominated candidates and these nominations were confirmed by the mayor. The present board includes G. R. Radley, chairman, City club; Gustav Meyer, Merchants' and Manufacturers' association; N. B. Neelen, Milwaukee Bar association; H. R. Denison, probation department; Charles Phillips, secretary, and B. K. Fischer, moving picture exhibitors' league.

HEIM SUNDAY BILL HEARING.

W. H. Austin, an attorney representing the Majestic theater of Milwaukee, and R. W. Jackman, attorney representing Madison theaters, championed the Heim bill legalizing Sunday shows at a hearing before senate committee on state affairs at Madison. The bill was opposed by the State Federation of Churches and the Wisconsin Sunday Rest association.

WISCONSIN BRIEFS.

The cheap "jitney" idea is being featured by the Empress at Milwaukee, which went into pictures. "The Avenging Conscience" was the first of the big things to be shown for the low admission of five cents.

The Klondyke Feature Film company has taken a ten-year lease on the White House theater in Racine and will operate it as the Strand with pictures during the week and will add vaudeville Saturdays and Sundays. M. Miller will be resident manager.

The Motion Picture Publishing company of Milwaukee has been incorporated with capital stock of $5,000. The incorporators are W. K. Winslow, P. F. Runzel and J. F. Collins.

A 2,000-foot "All Waukesha" film was made in that city for showing at the Auditorium.

"Pictures of Homefolks" was a good stunt program for the Monroe theater at Monroe.

Grace church at Two Rivers has ended a successful season of pictures. Next fall more religious and inspirational films will be used.

The Girl's club of Chippewa Falls had a special night at the Empire there.

Milwaukee Park commissioners refused to allow the opening of a moving picture show in Lapham park.

Contract has been let at Weyauwega to Gerald & Zimdars for construction of a new opera house, 54x112.

John Noble and Frank Blanchard are proprietors of the new show in the Allen hall at Livingston.

W. E. McCanna, who managed the Mer Mac at Appleton, has been planning to erect a new photoplay house at Wausau.

George McLaughlin of Eau Claire has been looking for a new location for a picture house. He recently was at Morrison, Ill.

J. A. Becker has given up his lease on the Gem at Omro and Manager Reid is now in charge, assisted by Frank Mitchell.

Four hundred balloons were given to children at a Saturday matinee of "Atlantis" at the Orpheum in Fon du Lac. The picture was shown for 5 and 10 cents.

E. S. Perkins sold the Crystal at Burlington to Walton McNeel.

LYRIC'S HOUSE ORGAN.

Chattanooga Theater Issues Bright Weekly Review of Pictures.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Tennessee Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Lyric Company, lessees of the Alcazar motion picture theater, of Chattanooga, Tenn., has been publishing a house organ known as the Chattanooga Motion Picture Review, since the early part of April. Miss Ruth D. Evans, who is in charge of the company's advertising and publicity work, is editing the paper, which is issued weekly. In the initial issue the editress printed an interesting article concerning the work of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company in taking moving pictures at their temporary studio on Signal Mountain, at Chattanooga.

TENNESSEE BRIEFS.

Theater goers, employes, managers and all classes of people were saddened to hear of the recent death of John Bunny, who has made many persons feel rested when they were really dead tired. John Bunny was probably better known by Chattanooga picture patrons than any other character ever shown on the screens. In this connection it is noted that the moving picture film and the talking machine record are two inventions which preserve the voice, motions and personality of the human being as in life. The great moving picture actor can be seen many times on the screen and the film revived even after he has been dead for years, whereas the legitimate actor is done for at the time of his death.

At Clarksville, Tenn., Elliott & Waddell, contractors of Clarksville, are busy with the work on the new Lillian theater, which replaces the theater burned on December 29. Joseph & Joseph, of Louisville, are the architects. The building will be completed and ready to open on or about Aug. 15, according to the conditions of the contract.

Work is progressing rapidly upon the Parthenon theater, of Nashville, noticed in this column last week, the beautiful new motion picture house being erected on Church street, between Fourth and Fifth avenues. The doors of the theater will be thrown open about the middle of May. Ira C. Lamb, president of the company, has just returned from New York, where he closed contracts with some of the leading feature film companies for service, including the World Feature Film Corporation and the Metro Film Company. He also made arrangements whereby an immense electric sign will be made and shipped to Nashville, where it will be installed in front of the theater. The sign is about thirty feet high and has a color-changing device. It represents an immense fountain at play, the water spurting from the top and running down the sides. A real fountain, operated by electricity, and electric lights will be installed in the lobby and will furnish water for the patrons. When completed the theater will undoubtedly be one of the fairy spots of the South.

The good old axiom about not being able to be in two places at once was recently shattered to smithereens in Nashville when moving picture fans were able to see Theda Bara appear in two "vampire" roles at the same time. She appeared at the Orpheum in the five-reel Fox production entitled "The Clemenceau Case," and at the Strand in the "Kreutzer Sonata," another Fox production.

The Crescent theater, of Nashville, recently adopted a new policy, that of showing all star productions of big feature plays that have been shown previously at the Fifth avenue, and for which a big demand has been experienced. The first of these pictures to be shown was "The Typhoon," a startling Japanese drama featuring Sessue Hayakawa. This picture has been acknowledged one of the sensations of the day.

At Nashville arrangements were recently made whereby the seventh of the episodes of "The Exploits of Elaine" was shown at the Rex, and the remaining episodes of the serial will be shown at this theater. The pictures will be shown every Monday.

The Crescent Amusement Company, of Nashville, has secured the twelve Pathe dramas entitled "Who Pays?" and will show the pictures at one of its Fifth avenue theaters. The first of the pictures to be shown will be "The Price of Fame." The entire twelve pictures will be shown at the same theater, according to present plans.

The Dixie Amusement Company, of Nashville, which operates the Strand and other theaters, recently opened the Orpheum, the latest addition to the ranks. The first film used was on Monday, April 26, when "The Clemenceau Case" was shown. It is interesting to note that the Strand was also opened by a film in which Freda Bara took the leading part. This film was "A Fool There Was," which packed the house. The theater has been remodeled and put in fine shape for adaption to its new picture policy.

H. H. Huddleston, a well known moving picture man of Memphis, Tenn., would have made a very interesting subject for a one-reel production when he played fireman in a local color stunt a few days ago. A house opposite the Huddleston home caught fire. Huddleston, who happened to be home at the time, got busy with a garden hose and step ladder, and had the fire practically under control when the engines finally arrived. He probably saved the building from destruction.

Motion pictures illustrating mission work in the Orient were recently shown at the West End Methodist Church, at Nashville, by Dr. W. W. Pinson, of the foreign mission board of the M. E. church, South. The pictures dealt principally with work in China, Japan and Korea. The hospital and medical centers and work done by the native physicians were probably the most interesting part of the films. Other churches in Nashville have announced their intention of showing the films.

James S. Lanier, of Memphis, Tenn., has let a contract for the erection of a combined store and theater building to be built at once. It is understood that the theater will be used for motion pictures.

IN KENTUCKY.

W. S. Bland, of Clarksville, Va., was recently in Louisvile, where he purchased 250 new opera chairs, and an Edison machine with which to start a new moving picture theater.

Mrs. Whittinghil, of Jeffersonville, Ind., was in Louisville last week and purchased a 6A Powers motor-driven machine, to be used in the Opera House, at Horse Cave, Ky. Mrs. Whittinghill recently rented the theater and has already opened for business.

The need of a new compensarc at the Jasper theater, of Jasper, Ind., brought Anthony Geisler, the manager, to Louisville. He also arranged for film service while in the city.

R. E. Powell, of Hawesville, Ky., has purchased a second hand gas projecting machine and outfit with which he will play a circuit of six small towns in the vicinity of Hawesville, Ky. It is understood that a wagon and tent will be used and the show transferred daily from one town to the other. In this way the complete circuit is covered each week and fairly good attendances drawn out.

R. J. Sullivan, of Paducah, Ky., recently purchased a complete outfit with which to open a moving picture house in a suburb of Paducah.

Thomas & Christi, of Salem, Ind., were recently in Louisville making arrangements for additional film service.

The Owl Feature Film Company, of Louisville, recently received an order for an Edison motion picture machine from the Star theater, of Vaiden, Miss. The company is now getting considerable business from the South and reports the best machine sales on record.

Dr. John B. Stout, of Danville, Ky., is having a number of extensive improvements made to the Danville Opera House and has stated that it wil be one of the most attractive opera houses in Central Kentucky when completed.

The Dixie, of Mayfield, Ky., discontinued showing serial pictures shortly after April 1. The theater will specialize on high class feature productions instead.

D. P. Curry, of Uniontown, Ky., has reopened the Star, and is showing a larger program and better class material than was formerly exhibited.

Manager Stivers, of the "Hipp" theater, of Jackson, Ky., has been using vaudeville stunts along with his regular run of motion pictures, and has had excellent crowds at the popular playhouse. Haddis & Pollard, of the Lyric, have installed a new lighting plant so as to be able to run daily matinees when the central station is not operating.

The Lyric, of Olive Hill, Ky., was burned at 2 o'clock in the morning of April 23. The loss was estimated at $7,000 and was not covered by insurance. Several other buildings were burned at the same time. The origin of the fire is unknown.

Manager White, of Damon's theater, at Elkton, Ky., has just installed a large orchestra piano and is operating the show house seven nights a week.

At New Haven, Ky., the new "Movie" theater is making arrangements for electric power so that exhibits may be made on Saturday afternoon. A new piano has just been installed and the theater is doing nicely.

Toughs Riot in Lobby

Louisville's Walnut Street Theater Employees Have Tussle with Gang of Roughs Who Attempt to Get in Without Payment—Assistant Operator Shot in Leg Trying to Wrest Revolver from Gangster Who Had Fired at Him.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Louisville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE Walnut theater, on Walnut street, between Fourth and Fifth, got into the limelight when a gang of young toughs undertook to pass the doorkeeper without paying at the box office. The trouble occurred on Sunday night, April 25. According to employes of the theater a number of boys appeared in the lobby and made themselves disagreeable. They were ordered off the premises, but later returned with a gang which claimed that it was going to clean out the theater. The doorkeeper and two or three other employes called for police aid, but before the latter could arrive the trouble started. The employes of the theater were forced to chase the gang out, and some of the latter who happened to be armed started shooting as soon as an alley was reached. A bullet passed through the clothing of Thomas Newman, one of the theater employes. Leroy Nichols, 15 years old, opened fire on Whiteford Volles, 17 years old, assistant operator at the Walnut. Four shots failed to take effect, and Volles grappled with the boy doing the shooting. In the scrap that ensued Nichols discharged the gun into his own leg, and was removed to a drug store and later to the hospital. The police at last arrived and captured a few of the youngsters, who were taken to the Juvenile Court on Monday. Very few of the patrons of the theater became aware of the disturbance, although it caused a good deal of excitement on the streets. Trouble has been experienced on one of two occasions at the suburban theaters by young hoodlums, but this is one of the first cases in the downtown district.

MUSIC AT THE MARY ANDERSON.

Providing the proper music for motion picture shows is one of the problems confronting the high-class photoplay theaters, according to a successful manager of Louisville, Lee L. Goldberg. The day is past for patrons to accept music, regardless of how well it is played, if it is not in keeping with the action of the screen. They want, he asserts, both good and appropriate music. If the scene being shown on the screen is of a tragic nature, dramatic music is expected, while for gayety or romance selections of a lighter nature are expected. Professor Edgar Barbee, orchestra player for the Mary Anderson, arranges his music to conform with each play, and takes care to see that his music fits in with the production. For instance, when the "Fifth Commandment" was shown Professor Barbee went to the trouble to send to the composer to get a copy of "Castles in the Air," the beautiful song which furnishes the theme of the play. Mr. Goldberg is of the opinion that managers of photoplay houses should discuss with their orchestra leaders, in advance, the shows which are to be given, so that the orchestra director can make the proper arrangements.

HARRY GREENWAY TO MANAGE S. & P. FILM OFFICE.

Announcement has just been made of the appointment of Harry Greenway, formerly traveling representative out of Chicago for George Kleine, as general manager of the S. & P. Film & Supply Company, to assume the duties vacated recently by Fred Sheldon, who resigned. The concern has just been reorganized as the S. & P. Company. Officers are: Charles Pressy, president, and M. B. Pressy, secretary-treasurer. Fred Sheldon was formerly secretary-treasurer as well as general manager. Pressy Brothers, a booking agency, which arranges concessions for parks, fairs, vaudeville shows, home comings, etc., will maintain offices with the S. & P. Company. Pressy Brothers is composed of Charles and M. B. Pressy, and is not incorporated.

KENTUCKY FILM CO. DISSOLVED.

E. O. Schaeffer, president, and O. Schaeffer, secretary-treasurer of the Kentucky Film Company, organized a few months ago with a capital stock of $100,000 to make motion pictures, have filed a notice with the local papers that the company will be dissolved. The corporation asks that all debts and demands against the company be presented at once at its office, 310 East Gray street, Louisville. The notice was first filed on April 21, and all demands must be filed within four weeks of this date.

THEY HAD A GOOD TIME.

Louisville picture exhibitors who attended the recent convention of Kentucky Branch No. 2 of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, at Lexington, Ky., on April 21 to 22, were very much pleased with the brilliant entertainments arranged for the exhibitors by the Lexington committee, composed of J. H. Stamper, of the Orpheum theater; N. H. Gurnee, of the Ada Meade, and R. A. Parsons, assistant manager of the Orpheum. The fact that the three officers re-elected were all from Louisville was another reason why the Louisville delegation was appreciative of the annual convention.

LOUISVILLE BRIEFS.

The Pathe Weekly recently had a man in Louisville to take motion pictures of a ten-mile interstate relay race in which teams of picked men from various athletic organizations took part. Views were made of the race while on the K. & I. bridge and while going through the parks.

The Sanders Amusement Company, with an authorized capital stock of $4,000, divided into shares of the par value of $100 each, has filed articles of incorporation. The concern will operate a motion picture theater. The debt limit is placed at $3,000. The incorporators holding three shares each are: Putnam Sanders. Frances A. Sanders and Cora B. Sanders. The two first named incorporators are of Louisville and the latter is of Lebanon, Marion County, Ky.

Father Assen, of 1020 East Burnett avenue, has purchased a complete moving picture outfit to be used at St. Elizabeth's school in showing educational pictures, etc., to the students. The outfit included a moving picture machine, machine booth and folding chairs.

The American Seating Company, of Chicago; the Bennett Seating Company, of Louisville, and other concerns, had special exhibits of school seats in windows on Fourth avenue during the week of April 19. The occasion was the annual convention of the Kentucky Educational Association, which brought many school teachers to the city. The convention also helped considerably in making the moving picture business good.

M. L. Atterberry, of Tompkinsville, Ky., was recently in Louisville and purchased a new Edison machine, a booth and complete equipment with which to start a moving picture show on May 1. The town has less than 700 people, according to the last census, but has been supporting the new house nicely.

Censor's Show Paid

Exhibitor in Topeka Let State Censor Board Use His Theater for Run-Off—Then Opened Box Office and Did a Good Business with the Advance Reels—Exchanges Objected and It Won't Be Repeated.

Special to Moving Picture World from Kansas City News Service.

TO put one over on the Kansas legislature and the Kansas State Board of Censors it took Lew Nathanson, of Topeka, to turn the trick. It has been the misfortune of Kansas not to have any suitable place to censor the films that are being sent into the state so they had to borrow the theaters of the Kansas exhibitors for the censoring. Lew Nathanson let them have his show, but when he got up the next morning he forgot he let them have it and went to the theater and found a show in progress. There were only a few people seated at the show and the ticket office was closed. Lew, with an eye for business, immediately opens the box office and soon had the largest house of the season to witness the first review of the picture "A Diamond from the Sky." The picture was being censored and was not to be released for a month. But Lew got away with the deal and the censors just had to take the joke and stand for it. They could not do anything else and Lew made a very nice profit for the single performance that morning.

C. J. SCHERER BUYS EXCHANGE.

Charles J. Scherer, manager of the Navajo Film Company has purchased the interest in the business of his partner and he is once again the sole owner of the company. Mr. Scherer came to Kansas City when pictures were first introduced here and he had stuck in the game until he has at last got his own company and office.

CENSORS READY FOR STAGE.

The Church Federation of Kansas City has lately drafted a letter which they have given out to the press, sent to the various moral reform and educational societies asking for their co-operation in regard to the plays on the stage of Kansas City theaters. This in no way interferes with the moving picture theaters. They are going to try to suppress burlesque and smoking at the burlesque houses. The Gayety and Century theaters came in for a good scoring and the best theater in Kansas City being the Shubert, was scored for the performance of the "Passing Show of 1914." The stage is rapidly slipping by and moving pictures are rapidly taking the place of the play. This action by the clubs in Kansas City will probably put the soft pedal on what the people want to see on the stage in Kansas City.

KANSAS CITY BRIEFS.

W. B. Harris, Martin Wells and George Owen, all of Smithville, Mo., were in the city last week. They brought in with them the news that Smithville has entered the lists with other cities and is putting on a free moving picture for the benefit of the farmers that come to town on Saturdays.

A new feature film concern recently opened in Kansas City. It is the Grand Feature Film Company with offices in the Gayety theater building at Twelfth and Wyandotte streets. Their first picture is that of Salisbury's Wild Animal Life of America.

KANSAS NOTES OF INTEREST.

Mr. Liggett, the owner of the Gene Gauntier theater, in Kansas City, Kan., recently donated the theater one night to the Women's auxiliary of the Railway Mail Association. The theater was well filled at the benefit performance and many of the ladies spoke from the platform.

The Best and the Cozy theaters at Topeka, Kan., gave free shows Sunday, April 18. The law requires that the Sunday shows be free and that the subjects be semi-religious in nature. The shows remained open from 1.30 to 10.30 p. m. The owners of the shows have made a good big hit with the people of Kansas. A silver offering was left at the window by those who so desired and the proceeds were divided between the Jewish Orphans' Home at Cleveland, Ohio, and the Jewish Consumption Home at Denver. The proceeds were small, according to Nathanson. The piano players played sacred music at the shows. All the employees donated their services free of charge. Lew Nathanson, manager of both the theaters, is the same man who charged admission to the censoring of one picture.

"Mother's Roses" was the offering at the Aurora theater recently, which brought forth one of the largest houses that the theater has had for some time.

The pictures made in the antarctic by Herbert Ponting were exhibited at Topeka, Kan., recently under the auspices of The Daily Capital, the leading Topeka newspaper. The pictures were shown at the Grand theater by the Capital, the idea being to educate the teachers of the colleges and the schools.

The Washington School at Atchison, Kan., will soon purchase a moving picture machine for educational purposes.

The two-part Gold Seal drama, "Wild Irish Rose," scored a big hit at the Hippodrome at Leavenworth, Kan., recently.

The "Commanding Officer" at the Orpheum theater at Leavenworth drew a good house last week.

A Selig picture. "Hearts and Masks," and a Universal release, "Uncle John," were the offering of the Iris theater at Hutchinson, Kan., recently, on their big double feature day. This sort of a day has proved to be very popular at the Iris and the pictures always draw good houses.

MISSOURI NOTES.

The Electric theater at Joplin, Mo., recently showed moving pictures of Jess Willard, the heavyweight champion, and they had the largest house of the year at this show.

The Trio theater at Chillicothe, Mo., the newest moving picture house there recently engaged Max Figman in "Jack Chanty," and it is reported that they had a record breaking crowd.

The Majestic theater is one of the few houses in the smaller Missouri towns that exactly conforms with the state laws regarding aisles, exits and ventilation.

HOUSTON, TEXAS, OPERATORS WALK OUT.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

UNION operators in Houston, Texas, walked out, the managers declaring they could not increase wages. Negotiations had been in progress. The demands as stated by Lucien Andler, president of the local union, were for one chief operator at each theater at $17.50 a week (to be increased to $20 Dec. 31) and a relief operator at $10 a week, and payment for overtime. Managers operated the machines (the walkout was at 3.15 p. m.) until help could be secured.

A POOR WAY TO CENSOR.

Managers in Houston, Texas, conferred with the board of censors to see if pictures could not be censored before shows were given. Houston is not a distributing point, and it is a hardship for managers to have a picture pulled off the machine after it has been started.

BETTER MUSIC.

Managers of moving picture houses in Texas will be asked by the Texas Federation of Woman's Clubs to provide a better class of music for mechanically operated instruments. A resolution to this effect, presented at the fourteenth district convention at Bryan, Texas, was indorsed.

DALLAS WANTS SPECIAL CHILDREN'S SHOWS.

The establishment of a children's hour at picture houses in Dallas, Tex., is urged in the first report of the Board of Public Censors in that city. It also advises against an increase in membership and declares the standard of pictures shown in Dallas is the highest in the state.

FIRE INSURANCE COMMISSION ACTIVE.

Considerable time will be devoted to the inspection of picture houses in Texas and all laws will be strictly enforced. This was the announcement made after a meeting of the State Fire Insurance Commission at Austin. The inspection force will be increased.

SOUTHWEST BRIEFS.

Floods which tied up train service caused the curtailment of many programs in Texas houses. Waco houses which had been getting service from Austin were supplied by Dallas.

A bill prohibiting child labor in moving picture theaters is urged by the Texas State Federation of Labor. At the convention in Austin the legislature committee was instructed to draft such a law to be introduced at the next session of the legislature.

The Texas Film Company, of Dallas, has certified to dissolution in the office of the Secretary of State.

G. W. Motzen, of Haileyville, Okla., has opened the People's Airdome at Hartshorne, Okla.

Manager Noye Wicks has booked the Mutual service for the Gem and Dixie theaters at Houston, Texas.

The Royal, at Enid, Okla., emphasizes its cleanliness with an invitation to any person to inspect the house as to sanitary conditions.

The Byers Opera house, at Fort Worth, Texas, has commenced a summer policy of three vaudeville acts and six reels of pictures for 10 cents.

O. M. Woulfe, of Waco, Texas, and J. P. Kaufman, of Green Bay, Wis., are members of a new firm which has leased the Queen, at Corsicana, Texas, from J. T. McClure. The new proprietors have remodeled the house.

WORLD'S CORRESPONDENT IN NEW OFFICE.

The Detroit correspondent of Moving Picture World has opened an office at 503 Free Press building, which is right downtown. The telephone number is Cadillac 4396. Mr. Smith will always be glad to have exhibitors, exchange men, in fact, anybody interested in the motion picture industry, call there or 'phone him whenever they have any news of interest. Copies of the Moving Picture World will always be kept on file for the convenience of readers. The Moving Picture World, always wants live news of the trade, so whenever you have any just 'phone or drop in at the office.

CHANGES IN CASINO FEATURE FILM OFFICES.

Harry Goldberg, general manager of the Casino Feature Film Company, Detroit, controlled by John H. Kunsky, has resigned; leaving the firm on May 1. Edward Thaye, road salesman, also resigned. Messrs. Goldberg and Thaye plan to leave shortly for New York, making the trip both ways in the former's automobile. It is their plan to return to Detroit and op[illegible] an office, booking high-grade feature pictures. Both are young men and well liked in the state. Mr. Goldberg was in charge of the Casino company's business for two years—practically since it started, while Mr. Thaye became road representative about ten months ago. No official successor has yet been appointed to Mr. Goldberg.

B. C. Smith, formerly associated with Haywood Bros. & Wakefield, seat manufacturers of Chicago, has been appointed special road representative for the Casino Feature Film Company, will devote his energies to the Paramount pictures, for which the Casino company has the Michigan rights.

DETROIT BRIEF NOTES.

George W. Weeks, manager of the Detroit office of the Universal Film Company, was one of the party that went by special train to the opening of Universal City. Mr. Weeks was in San Francisco when he received word of the death of his father. He took the next train for Detroit. Mr. Weeks, Sr., some time ago underwent an operation for appendicitis. It was thought that he had fully recovered when he took suddenly sick again, passing away a few days later. Mr. Weeks has disposed of his Royal Oak theater to Siggins & Bowles; his Kercheval theater to the Widner-Johnson Company, and his Plaza to the Plaza Theater Company.

Rex Minkley has resigned the management of the Forest theater, Woodward and Forest avenues, Detroit, and has left for New York in connection with an important project. He intends to return to Detroit and take up some other branch of the motion picture industry. The Forest has been taken over by the Toledo Amusement Co., and while pictures are being run there temporarily, it is said that vaudeville may be shown there later.

Frank Mellon, formerly manager of the Galdwin Park theater, has been appointed assistant manager of the new Knickerbocker theater, at Jefferson avenue and the Belle Isle bridge.

Eddie Murphy, formerly assistant manager of the Columbia theater, has been appointed manager of the Galdwin theater, at Jefferson avenue and Waterworks Park.

It is probable that both the National and Columbia theaters will change to pictures for the summer, starting about June the first. At the present time, the National is running musical tabloid and pictures, while the Columbia is showing vaudeville and pictures. Should the change be made for the hot weather months, both houses will return to their regular policy by September. The National is under the management of C. R. Hagedorn and is operated by the King Amusement Company, while the Columbia is managed by M. W. Schoenherr and operated by John H. Kunsky, Inc.

The report was current this week that George W. Weeks, manager of the Detroit Universal Film Company had resigned to take an important position with the Casino Feature Film Company. While it is true that negotiations were pending between Mr. Weeks and the Casino Company, nothing of a definite nature was closed, and Mr. Weeks will continue as in the past, to have full charge of the Michigan affairs of the Universal Company.

The Woodward theater, 1474 Woodward avenue, is giving away travel tickets, in connection with every ticket purchased. These tickets are good for transportation on nearly any of the passenger boat lines operating between Detroit and Toledo, Cleveland, Buffalo, Chicago, or Duluth They are also good on some of the railroads. The scheme is somewhat along the trading-stamp idea, the difference being that the Woodward theater coupons are good for traveling instead of premiums, as is the case with trading stamps. It takes a dollar's worth of travel tickets to earn a mile of travel.

Inspection Bill Passes

Michigan Legislature Passes Woodworth Bill—State Fire Marshal Must Inspect Theaters Twice Yearly at $10 Each—Exhibitors' League Protest Was Not Heeded—Victory for Non-Inflammable Film.

By Jacob Smith, Detroit (503 Free Press Bldg.) Correspondent Moving Picture World.

ON April 28 the Woodworth moving picture bill, which requires that the state fire marshal inspect picture theaters at least twice a year was passed, indicating that little attention was paid to the protest made by Michigan exhibitors who declared that one inspection was entirely sufficient for fire prevention purposes. The Woodworth bill requires that owners of moving picture theaters pay a fee of $10 for each inspection, and that amount paid for inspection by the state fire marshal's office should not exceed $20 in any one year. This is practically the situation at the present time. An amendment was made by the house, which exempts moving picture theaters for religious, educational or scientific purposes when non-inflammable films are used in special machines. This is a victory for such machines as the Pathescope. The bill having passed both the senate and the house of the Michigan legislature is now ready to be signed by the governor.

KUNSKY TO BUILD AGAIN.

Will Erect in Detroit Largest Theater Building West of New York.

What is reported to be the largest theater building west of New York is to be erected by John H. Kunsky on property just acquired at the southwest corner of Broadway and Witherell streets, conceded to be one of the very best locations in Detroit for moving pictures. Part of the building will face beautiful Grand Circus Park. The location is only a stone's throw from the new million dollar Detroit Athletic Club, the new Hotel Statler, the David Whitney building, the Kresge building, Hotel Tuller, and Detroit's leading thoroughfare, Woodward avenue. It is planned to have the theater seat 2,800 people on one floor and balcony.

The theater will be a part of a four or six-story building, most of which will be used by Mr. Kunsky for offices for firms in which he is interested. A stage capable of accommodating any production will be erected. Mr. Kunsky plans to operate the playhouse for motion pictures exclusively, showing the very best pictures only at prices ranging from 10 to 25 cents. Bowman's Cafe, a landmark in the downtown district, is on the corner that will be occupied by the theater. Mr. Kunsky leases this property for twenty years. He has also leased the adjoining 100 feet on Broadway for 99 years.

It is estimated the rent for the period will total nearly $1,000,000. The theater building will have a total frontage of 100 feet on Witherell street, and 200 feet on Broadway. Mr. Kunsky is now at the head of the John H. Kunsky, Inc., operating the Columbia, the Royal, the Liberty, the Empress, the Garden and the Washington theaters. He also controls the Casino Feature Film Company. He also operates a sign shop, carpentry shop, electrical shop, which does work for his own as well as outside theaters. His film exchange is located in the Royal theater building, while the general offices are located in the Dime Bank building, where they occupy no less than seven large suites. By combining all of these enterprises and locating them in the one building on Broadway, which Mr. Kunsky will erect, the annual rental will be considerably reduced.

When Mr. Kunsky completed the Alhambra last fall many people said it was "the last word" in moving picture theater construction. The new Strand which is being erected for Mr. Kunsky at Grand River and Fourteenth streets will seat 1,600 and be even more elaborate than the Alhambra. Topping them all, however, will be the new theater on Broadway. In this connection it might be said that the Grand River avenue theater, now in course of construction, is to be named the Strand despite the fact that there is already a downtown theater bearing the name of the Broadway-Strand. Mr. Kunsky was the first in Detroit to incorporate a company with the name Strand, having in mind the construction of a theater in Fairview. This project was later abandoned, but Mr. Kunsky allowed the corporate name to stand and to use it for his west side theater.

NEW HOUSE IN WYANDOTTE.

The Harris & Warren Amusement Company, of Wyandotte, a suburb of Detroit, will start at once the erection of a new theater in that section, seating 1,200 people, 75 by 120 feet in size. It will be of brick, steel and concrete, and will be located on Biddle avenue, the main thoroughfare in Wyandotte. There will be a main floor and a small mezzanine. The first floor will have seating capacity for 1,000 while the 200 seats in the mezzanine will be divided into boxes. The cost of this new enterprise is $50,000. It will be the largest of the down-river theaters. The members of this firm are Max H. Harris and Herman Warren.

J. FRIEDMAN WITH FOX FILM.

J. Friedman, formerly associated with his father in the management of the Victoria theater on Michigan avenue, has joined the selling force of the Detroit branch of the Fox Film Corporation in the Smith building, which is in charge of Mayer B. Schlesinger.

ONTARIO EXHIBITOR FINED.

Allowed Unlicensed Operator to Run Machine—Paid $50.

For allowing an unlicensed operator to run the picture machine, Miss Lillian Sage, proprietress of a theater in Windsor, Ont. (across the river from Detroit), was recently fined $50 with the option of thirty days in jail. The law governing motion picture theaters in Canada comes under the provincial government and a $50 fine is the minimum penalty. Miss Sage told the court that she knew the operator in question was not licensed, but said her regular operator had quit his job suddenly and went to Detroit.

D. H. FINK OPENS DETROIT OFFICE.

D. H. Fink, of The Automatic Ticket Selling and Cash Register Company, of New York, now has an office at 2316 Dime Bank building, Detroit, where he handles the company's Michigan business. Mr. Fink only recently returned to this concern, although he was formerly with them.

L. E. DAVIS HEADS DETROIT PATHE OFFICE.

L. E. Davis has been appointed Detroit manager for Pathe Freres moving picture films, succeeding John R. Lakin. Mr. Davis for some time was in charge of the Columbus office. He reports that the new "Exploits" are taking exceedingly well and that the outlook for Michigan business is very good.

Thus They Censor

Ohio Board of Censorship Makes a Decision—Boxing Scene in Staged Picture with Jess Willard in Role and Made Before His Championship Encounter Has Been Ordered Cut Out—Offering Had Been Drawing Crowds.

By Kenneth C. Crain, Cincinnati Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THINGS are getting to a point where, what with intermittent local censorship and a sort of feeling of nervous uncertainty on the part of the State Board of Censors, these two conflicting elements have Ohio exhibitors jumping sidewise as it were. A few days ago an order came from the censors to the effect that the boxing scenes in the Imp boxing picture, "The Heart Punch," featuring Jess Willard, the new world's champion, must be eliminated. It will be recalled that this picture was shown recently at the Colonial, on Fifth street, to record-breaking houses, judicious advertising assisting greatly; and it seems that the phenomenal success attending this particular engagement of the picture attracted the unfavorable attention of the censors, who deduced that there must be something wrong with it to make it draw so well. As a matter of fact, however, it is stated that when the picture was first seen by the board the elimination of the boxing scenes was ordered, although they were of the most innocuous character—"all fixed and framed," as one exhibitor stated it. This was true, as a matter of course, in view of the fact that the picture was purported to be nothing more than a drama built around the world's champion, or the future champion, as he then was; and the "heart punch" was, therefore, of course, merely an imitation of the real thing. This elimination, therefore, thus insisted upon, seems somewhat strained, especially in view of the fact that in every city of any size in Ohio, Cincinnati included, there are almost nightly boxing contests which not infrequently end in bona fide knockouts, induced either by a genuine "heart punch" or by the well known and justly celebrated swat to the jaw. However, the picture was promptly sent to Columbus, following the mandate, for revision accordingly interrupting its exhibition at a suburban house, and it will doubtless come back duly expurgated of the obnoxious imitation of a brutal three-round prizefight—in which respect, of course, it will differ materially from a large number of films, to which no objection whatever has been made, featuring prize ring episodes. But logic is somewhat too much to expect of censors.

HIGHLAND'S FIRST PICTURE TO BE "KENTUCKY."

The Highland Film Co. has announced the title of its first big feature production to be staged at its plant on the Kenton county heights in Kentucky, across the river from Cincinnati. It will be called "Kentucky," in six reels. The dedication of the plant is planned to be an imposing event, attended by appropriate exercises. The Governor of Kentucky and the mayors of the two principal Kentucky cities have been invited to be present at the time. The exact date has not yet been set, but will be some time between May 21 and June 1, according to Mr. Ford. The plant will be the first real dramatic moving picture plant in Kentucky, hence the real interest felt in it by the Blue Grass State.

NO BUYERS AT SHERIFF'S PRICE.

The Ryan theater property, on Gilbert avenue, just 100 feet south of Peebles corner, recently failed of sale for the second time, strangely enough, especially in view of the extremely low price at which it might have been secured. The property consists of a roomy and well-built moving picture theater, whose location, as indicated, would seem to be sufficiently favorable to make it very much worth while for a live exhibitor. However, it has not had much success, due largely, undoubtedly, to the fact that the Orpheum, much the biggest moving picture house in the city, is just around the corner, while the Victoria airdome, which runs winter and summer, is also nearby, with a good clientele. This accounts for the fact that on an appraised value of $6,000, which would have permitted a sale at $4,000, the sheriff failed to make a sale, or even to get a bid. The property will, therefore, have to be reappraised and offered for sale again. There is some talk of its being purchased, torn down and remodeled into stores, which might make it a good investment.

CINCINNATI BRIEF NOTES.

An extremely unusual case involving the "Funland," a moving picture house in Dayton, O., recently, ended in a judgment in favor of Edna Walters for $1,000 and interest, against Paul E. Coursey and A. N. Sutton. The plaintiff, it seems, purchased the theater in January and took possession, but later abandoned it for the reason that she found that the property as purchased by her did not include the exits, without which she claimed that the theater was valueless. She accordingly sued for recovery of the purchase price, and judgment went in her favor.

The Ivanhoe theater, of Sandusky, which was completed only a few months ago, and started off as one of the finest and handsomest moving picture theaters in the state, later being turned into a vaudeville house, has been closed by Manager Charles I. Blatz, unseasonably warm weather being given as the cause. It is anticipated that the house will be reopened when the weather moderates, Sandusky being in the summer resort zone.

The Big Time Feature Exhibitors' Association, of this city, announce "The Avenging Conscience," a six-reel Vitagraph, only produced a short time ago, and "The Escape," a seven-reel feature of the same make, also new, as secured for its members.

LETTER FROM DALLAS, TEXAS.

By S. G. Parker, Dallas Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

E. N. COLLINS, who has the Dixie and Garden airdrome at Electra, Texas, will soon have a motion picture theater at Thrall, Texas, with his own light plant and his own building. The new house will seat about 500. Thrall is in the new oil field near Taylor, Texas, and now has a population of 250, but it is expected to reach a thousand or two in a short time. Mr. Collins is backed in this venture by the new townsite company of Thrall, whose incorporators seem to realize the value of an amusement house in a town.

Fred Dullimore, formerly of the World Film office, is installed as office manager of the Fox branch at Dallas, and F. A. Tomes, formerly head of the shipping department, is now handling the booking.

The Princess theater at Victoria, Texas, is using three World films, two Paramount, one Alliance and one Fox film production to make up their weekly program, which is conceded to be about the highest grade obtainable. This house recently changed hands, F. A. Parson, formerly traveling for the Schumaker Grocery company in that section of the state, taking over the house on February 15th. H. E. Vaughn has been appointed manager and has demonstrated his ability in this capacity by the large attendance his place gets. The seating capacity is small and every day almost the standing room is taxed.

W. A. Bunnell and John Ray have let contract for a new modern airdome at Decatur, Texas, and plan to have the house open April 20th.

The Cliff Queen theater, a large suburban house in Dallas, has been sold by J. W Shivers to Geo. M. Blackburn, formerly of Salt Lake City, Utah. The policy of the house will remain the same for the present.

E. O. Kirkland has sold his interest in the Roseland theater, Dallas, to his partner, J. N. Stewart, and Kirkland has bought the Colonial, a suburban house in South Dallas, from P. G. Cameron.

The Dixie theater, Dallas, was sold recently by Mr. Rick to E. G. Caperton. Jessie Warden is still on the job as manager of the house.

Captain J. J. Hall is remodeling and reseating the Fifth Ward theater, a suburban house in Houston, and has also purchased a musical instrument.

PRESIDENT WILSON DID NOT ENDORSE PICTURE

"The Birth of a Nation" has not been given the indorsement of President Wilson, according to a statement issued last week from the White House, and efforts to make it appear as though it had the approval of Mr. Wilson were cut short in a letter directed to Congressman Thatcher, of Massachusetts, by Secretary to the President, J. P. Tumulty, which reads as follows:

> My Dear Mr. Thatcher—Replying to your recent letter and inclosures, I beg to say that it is true that "The Birth of a Nation" was produced before the President and his family at the White House, but the President was entirely unaware of the character of the play before it was presented, and has at no time expressed his approbation of it. Its exhibition at the White House was a courtesy extended to an old acquaintance.
> Sincerely yours,
> J. P. TUMULTY.

The production was shown here some months ago at a private exhibition at the White House, at which only a few members of the Cabinet, aside from the President and his immediate family were present, an account of which appeared in the Washington column of the World, by Thomas Dixon, the author of "The Clansman." Mr. Dixon and the President were classmates during their student days at the Johns Hopkins University, in Baltimore, and, as Mr. Tumulty states in his letter, the affair was merely a courtesy extended in a friendly manner.

IN WASHINGTON.

The Metro Film Service exchange, conducted by O. J. Allenbaugh and L. M. Day, is now well established in the Strand theater building, where it occupies commodious quarters on the second floor.

C. O. Moss, in charge of the Charlotte, N. C., branch of the United Film Service, who visited the Washington office last week, reported a decided improvement in business in the territory covered by him.

A. N. Waters, formerly manager of the Apollo, in this city, visited Washington last week, renewing old acquaintances and filling out his program for the Paramount in Roanoke, Va., where he is now located. Mr. Waters has one of the largest theaters in that section of the South and is well pleased with the way things are breaking for him. He was accompanied on his visit by James McFall, a member of the company operating the Paramount.

Billie Airey, another former Washingtonian, was also a visitor here during the week. Mr. Airey is now manager of the Apollo in Martinsburg, W. Va.

UNITED FILM'S NEW OFFICES.

Last week marked the opening at 903 E street, Northwest, of the Exchange Building, the new home of the United Film Service. The first floor is occupied by a store which is to be sublet for mercantile purposes. The second floor is utilized for the business offices of the concern. At the head of the stairs are entrances to the salesroom and to the private office of Sidney B. Lust, the local manager.

Present plans contemplate the use of a large space within the sales department for the display of posters and a large rack for this purpose will soon be installed. In the center is a table on which will be placed heralds and other advertising matter and numerous comfortable chairs are to be added for visiting exhibitors. The floor will be covered with a large rug and the room will present a fine appearance.

At the front, behind the large mahogany finished partition, are the desks of the bookkeeper and stenographer, while another space has been partitioned off for the use of the booker. Mr. Lust's office is a very comfortable place and decorated with the photographs of the film stars appearing in the releases of the United Film Service.

Toward the rear of the building is a large room from which all shipping is done. This is connected by a dumb-waiter with a similarly situated room on the floor above, in which all advertising matter is stored. The shipping clerk, although there is also a poster clerk, is held responsible for all shipments, including films, posters, and advertising matter, and as an order is filled for any of the latter, the same is sent down to him and the proper charges made, eliminating much of the confusion resulting from too many heads of departments and errors in the billing to customers. A portion of the shipping room is so arranged as to allow of its use as a projecting room and releases are shown to exhibitors by means of a small projecting machine of a type passed by the local authorities as being fireproof and requiring no booth.

The woodwork throughout is of French gray harmonizing with the cartridge paper covered walls. All rooms are large and commodious, and the lighting throughout, both natural and artificial, is exceptionally good.

In addition to the offices on the upper floor of the new Exchange Building utilized by the United Film Service, are those occupied by Irvine's Feature Film Company and the Treble-Clef Musical Movies, the latter being under the management of George R. Powers. William H. and Alex G. Irvine, of the former company, have two large offices here which give them more space than they had when located in the Bank of Commerce & Savings Building, and here they are closer to Ninth street, the motion picture thoroughfare of Washington. Like Mr. Lust, they are well pleased with their new location and each reports a growing business.

WASHINGTON BRIEFS.

W. R. Koch visited Washington. He operates the Onyx theater in Newport News, Va.

The Amusement Security Company has just been incorporated in this city with a capital stock of $10,000. The incorporators for the first three years are Edward S. Whiting, Earl P. Hopkins and D. M. Kenealy. The offices of the corporation are at 1428 U street, Northwest.

W. A. Hovey has assumed the management of the Truxton, at North Capital street and Florida avenue. Mr. Hovey is well known in this city and is an exhibitor of long experience. He formerly operated the Amusu in Baltimore and was connected with other enterprises in that city.

S. Robin, owner of the Georgia theater building, has taken over the active management of that house. Frank Howard, formerly its manager, resigned some time ago.

No Call for Excitement

In Washington, D. C., Most People Are Well Satisfied with Working of Present Methods of Censorship of Pictures and Theaters—Agitation for Different Kind of Censorship Not Widely Approved—Shows What Such Usually Amounts To.

By Clarence L. Linz, Washington Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THERE is a feeling in Washington that despite the agitation created last week by a number of social and charity workers and ministers of this city who appeared before Superintendent of Police Raymond W. Pullman to protest against certain classes of films, that the present police censorship, coupled with the cooperation of the exhibitors in keeping the business clean, is ample in the conservation of the morals of the people of this city.

The statements of many who appeared at this hearing were rather praiseworthy of the way in which the motion picture theaters here are conducted rather than otherwise. Particularly so was that of Rabbi Simon, who declared that common sense must govern the movement for the regulation and control of moving picture exhibitions and that it was not the intention of those interested therein to antagonize the motion picture interests, which were recognized as being capable of utilization with great power for educational and moral good. He also stated that the manufacturers should be educated to the belief that the public demands pictures of this kind and not of a character to arouse in the minds of the patrons of the theaters criminal thoughts and suggestions. It is realized that motion pictures are here to stay and should be permitted under proper regulation, and this is being looked after in an efficient way by the police, that department being clothed with sufficient power to stop any objectionable films.

Captain Charles T. Peck of the Frst Police Precinct, was present at the conference. It is within his precinct that a majority of the downtown theaters are located, and to these he gave a clean bill. It was stated that Patrolman Oriani was regularly detailed to look after these and a report is rendered periodically on the manner in which the theaters are operated.

There is really no need for censorship, other than that now prevailing, for the simple reason that the exhibitors themselves are taking due care to see that objectionable films are not booked. There is a great demand for the so-called problem plays, but the careful exhibitors watch these closely and cut out such parts of the films that they may consider too suggestive. It is seldom that there is an opportunity for complaint from this source and it is doubtful if within the last two months the police have suggested that more than one or two exhibitions be discontinued.

The newspapers are also taking a very broad view of the subject, and many of those films which perhaps paid reformers would object to have been commended for the lessons they contain. The Washington Times, carrying the best photoplay department of any local papers, has many times pointed out to its readers the fact that the educational value of the photoplay films shown here, from a moral standpoint, is very great.

The city's officials are reported as being perfectly satisfied with the manner in which the exhibitors conduct their business and with the present method of censorship, and under present conditions there is no need for any change therein.

NEW OFFICES OF WORLD FILM.

The World Film Corporation, now in its new quarters at 1004 E street, Northwest, has, without a doubt, the handsomest exchange in the National Capital. It is "new" for all of the fixtures, shelving, etc., were purchased especially for this place. One of the features of the exchange is that it is on the street floor, the only one in the city so situated, and has a real "store front."

The front of the building is very attractive from an architectural standpoint and contains a large plate glass window on which appears the company's trademark. Within the store there is a large space, or entryway, which extends to the shipping room at the rear, from which entrance is obtained to the various departments. The first entrance is through a gate in an oaken fence to the reception room, which is equipped with several easy chairs and a long table on which will be kept the latest copies of the World, and other magazines pertaining to the motion picture industry. It is to be decorated with oil paintings of the various stars appearing in the productions handled by the concern. Then comes the series of offices partitioned off with oak and glass.

The first of these is that of the manager, Ben E. Drum, which is equipped with desks for himself and the traveling representatives. The next space is subdivided by a similar partition, the front being used as the cashier's and bookkeeper's department and is equipped with all of the latest devices in office equipment, and the back will be occupied by the stenographer and booker.

The next large section is the shipping and paper room. This is a model place in every respect and laid off in a most systematic manner. Here has been provided a place for everything, and paper, slides, photographs, mats, cuts, heralds, window cards and other advertising matter will be easily accessible. When a film is received it will be perforated at its beginning and its end with a number. This same will be affixed to all of the matter mentioned above relating to that particular reel and placed in similarly numbered racks in the large tiers, according to its particular class. An enormous work table, capable of handling anything that might require packing, has been installed, and a counter completes the line of partition and blocks off the entry at the end.

The walls are white and the ceiling is of white figured art metal. From it are suspended a number of chain-hung droplights of the direct-indirect type. All of the fixtures and office equipment are of wood which is highly polished oak. Although quite pretentious, the whole presents a sort of cordial welcome that makes it a pleasure for all to transact business in so fine an office.

W. E. SHAFER TAKES ANOTHER THEATER.

W. E. Shafer, manager of the Colonial, in Hagerstown, Md., has also assumed the management of the Victoria, in Martinsburg, W. Va., now being operated by its proprietor, James Steliots. This is a new and very attractive house, having a seating capacity of about 600. The house will soon run features exclusively and an admission charge of ten cents will be made. A feature of this theater is a large reception room equipped with a writing table and stationery for the use of patrons, and a number of easy chairs for the comfort of those who may take advantage of the facilities of the room. The capacity of the house will be increased to 900 when the expiration of a lease will enable Mr. Steliots to add the space adjoining, which is now occupied by a store, having a frontage of fifteen feet.

Mr. Shafer is a veteran exhibitor, having started out thirteen years ago accompanying a road show. Since that time he has operated a number of houses in Pennsylvania, the last of his ventures being the Drome in Allentown.

Censor Bills Aplenty

Massachusetts Legislature Swamped with All Kinds of Censorship Measures—Wave of Excited Protest Said to Be Due to the Boston Showing of "The Birth of a Nation"—Some of the Bills Offered—Standing Against the Agitation.

By Edwin H. McCloskey, New England Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

As a result of the great agitation caused by the Boston production of "The Birth of a Nation," the Massachusetts Legislature is swamped with all kinds of censorship bills, submitted by various interested persons who believe that they have the solution to the problem.

The joint legislative committee on judiciary granted a hearing on the Sullivan bill last Monday. This bill would prohibit the performance of "any show or entertainment which tends to excite racial prejudice or tends to a breach of the public peace."

So great a crowd assembled in the largest room in the State House to listen to the arguments of the opponents that Senator Norwood felt it necessary to warn the spectators that comment would not be tolerated and that hissing and applause would result in the clearing of the room.

J. Mott Hallowell offered the committee a bill as a substitute for the Sullivan petition which would amend the present law so that no entertainments or shows could be given that would cause race hatred or religious prejudice.

M. Sumner Coggan has also offered an amendment which would give authority to stop any production to a board of three members, if in their opinion the show was immoral, obscene or in any manner disagreeable to public tastes. This board would consist of the Mayor of Boston, the Police Commissioner and a judge of the municipal court. This bill has since been reported favorably.

Rev. Chauncey J. Hawkins, of Jamaica Plain, told the committee that he came to protest against the attack on American freedom. "We suffer many things from the press that we do not like," he said, "and I think that the same should apply to the stage. I, therefore, protest against any restriction of this freedom and I believe that no race should be beyond criticism." He also stated that he had no other interest in the matter. He said that his limits to restriction on censorship would be immorality. The majority of the negroes present in the room loudly hissed the remarks of Dr. Hawkins.

Dr. Charles Fleischer, one of the most prominent Jewish rabbis in this country, declared he thought the present law to be sufficient.

The Rev. Thomas B. Gregory, for fifteen years on the editorial staff of the New York American, and a Southerner by birth, said that the scars of the war were practically eliminated, and spoke on the truthfulness of the play. He declared that everything depicted by the play was true since he had seen them with his own eyes. The play, he said, is merely educating the people to facts.

Eugene Walter, the playwright, said that long after the negro problem was solved there would be many playwrights who would wish to make a living, and these people would want to know how far they might go. He strenuously objected to any proposed law which would allow any one to stir up ill feeling by rivals or enemies.

Corporation Counsel John A. Sullivan, representing Mayor James M. Curley of Boston, said that the Sullivan bill was inadequate from any point of view. While it inflicted a penalty in this case, it would also penalize any play tending in the remotest degree to incite race prejudice. The play has a recognized and valuable part in the life of the people and it would be unfair to impose such a law. He said that laws cannot be broken because of of the whims of a body of people.

Judge Brackett, representing the Boston Theater Managers' Association, said that the proposed legislation would affect the interests which he represented.

WANTS STRICTER CENSORSHIP.

Lieutenant Governor Has Seen No Show; But Cites Reports of Them.

At a meeting of the Twentieth Century Club, Boston, Lieutenant Governor Grafton D. Cushing declared his belief in governmental censorship of moving pictures and favored the Carstens bill, which is now before the Massachusetts Senate.

Mr. Cushing admitted that he had never been inside a moving picture house, but based his judgment that censorship is necessary on the reports of private inspections that have come to him.

He stated that the inefficiency of commercial censorship of moving pictures had been showing, adding that of 614 films reviewed in Boston by forty volunteers, 124, or about one-fifth, violated certain standards as follows: Twenty-nine were obscene, thirty made vice attractive, seventeen were grossly degrading in taste and thirty-eight explained methods of crime. He estimated that 130,000 children viewed these films in seventeen weeks.

Another inspection covered 1,261 films in other Massachusetts cities, 235 of which violated standards, fifty-six for obscenity, twenty-five for making vice attractive, eighty-nine for being of grossly degrading tastes and sixty-five for illustrating methods of crime.

He believes it easily possible for the board of three provided for in the bill pending to censor 225 films a week, and said that the provision providing for an appeal to the superior court would safeguard the theaters' interests.

"It is easy to talk of the freedom of the press and of speech," he said, "but to allow people to traffic in unfit scenes of life is absurd. There are numberless good pictures, educational, many of them, which can be enjoyed by old and young alike, and it is incomprehensible that Massachusetts should allow the present state of things. This censorship is necessary. If a picture like 'The Birth of a Nation' —I have not seen it myself—but if it ought to be stopped, as many have said, then there ought to be authority to stop it somewhere."

Carl C. Carsten, father of the bill, said that he thought the important bill is: "Can this censorship be carried on intelligently? Undoubtedly there are dangers involved that this censorship would become so strict and unreasonable as to be stupid.

NEW ENGLAND BRIEFS.

"Bald Jack" Rose has returned to Medford, Mass., in company with about fifty moving picture actors. He has established headquarters at the plant of the Humanology Moving Picture Company in Fulton street. The players were in the same quarters last summer and it has been announced that they are planning the production of a two-reel feature, in which 175 persons will participate.

Mrs. Ida Pinanski, wife of Nathan Pinanski and mother of Samuel Pinanski, manager of the Modern and Shawmut theaters, Boston, died at the Charlesgate Hospital, following an operation.

John A. Williams has reopened his Ideal theater, Roxbury, with General Film Service. The house has been in darkness for five weeks, during which time many alterations have been made.

Michael J. Lydon, proprietor of Hamilton Hall, Dorcester, is attending the Panama-Pacific Exposition and will not return to Boston until July. During his absence his interests are in the hands of Mrs. Lydon.

The Larcom theater, Beverly, will close for four weeks beginning June 5. During that time Glover Ware, the proprietor, plans extensive alterations. He will install 450 new seats, increasing its capacity to 1,400.

NEWS OF MAINE.

By John P. Flanagan, Main Correspondent for Moving Picture World.

The New Majestic theater, Rumford, Thompson theater, Wilton, and the Music Hall at Farmington have recently taken out yearly contracts for the "Preferred" service of the World Film Corporation. These three houses will be worked on circuit, as E. B. Tinker, the World representative in Maine, believes that to give the best service not less than three houses should club together. This is an era of "co-operation," and it seems especially true in the film business.

Charles M. Stern, manager of the Bangor branch of the Universal Film, has just returned from a week's business trip to Aroostook county, visiting a large number of theaters.

H. N. Bragdon, of South Paris, is one of the liveliest managers in Maine and operates in fifteen towns. An ingenious contrivance enables Mr. Bragdon to make his own electricity by coupling the flywheel of his automobile engine to a small generator. He has two cars fitted in that manner which enables him to play towns where electric light is unknown. The "Last Days of Pompeii," which Mr. Bragdo nsecured through E. B. Tinker, played his circuit to record business at twenty-five cents admission.

Fred P. Chase, manager of the Orono moving picture house, is now running General Film service exclusively.

What is thought to be the record box office receipt for any small town in Maine, is claimed for the Music Hall, Farmington, where Robert Warwick, in the "Dollar Mark," a World film attraction, played to $146, afternoon and night, at twenty-five cents.

E. B. Wilder of Lincoln, a well known moving picture man, was in Bangor during the week on business.

The Empire, Portland, of which Mr. George Appleby, a well known exhibitor and exchangeman is the guiding light, reports that Clara Kimball Young in "Lola," broke all records of attendance at that theater.

The first airdome to start in this section of the state wili be the Pastime theater at Oldtown, which will open on May 29th with a seating capacity of 800. E. E. Boucher will be the proprietor and H. J. Thibodeau will be the business manager.

The Bijou theater at Bangor has resumed vaudeville and moving pictures after three weeks of the Kirk Brown Stock Company.

BLOOMFIELD BANS PICTURES.

(By Jacob J. Kalter, Newark Correspondent of Moving Picture World.)

Mayor FREDERICK SADLER and Councilman Fred Storm, of Bloomfield, have banned the film "Three Weeks." The picture was advertised to be shown on Thursday at the Savoy theater. Mayor Sadler also stopped the showing of a picture last Tuesday because he did not think it was up to the standard or kind of a picture that should be shown in a theater where a large percentage of the audience is children. It is likely that the Mayor will soon recommend to the members of the Bloomfield Town Council that a board of censorship be appointed.

theater, Norfolk street, near South Orange avenue. J. Rose will manage the house. The Pathe program will be shown. The place has 500 seats.

COLORED CITIZENS PROTEST.

The Colored Citizens' Union has protested to Mayor Dan F. Minahan, of Orange, against the showing of the offensive film, "The Birth of a Nation." The Mayor has written a reply stating that he would not permit the film to be shown if he found, upon investigation, that it showed prejudice against the negro race.

PARAMOUNT CHILDREN'S SHOW.

The Paramount Picture theater has a special performance every Saturday morning, at which pictures of interest to the kiddies are shown. Last week "The Adventures of a Boy Scout" was the headliner for the children's performance.

NEW MANAGER FOR OGDEN.

The Ogden theater, of Newark, which was formerly a burlesque place, has been transformed into a moving picture theater. M. Silberman is the new manager. He believes in giving the public good value, as he is showing ten reels daily. Tickets are being distributed throughout the city, and with the payment of five cents two persons will be admitted any afternoon, but in the evening five cents, together with the ticket, admits one person to an orchestra seat.

TRIANGLE THEATER GIVEN UP.

William H. Reeves, proprietor of the Triangle theater, of West Orange, has given up the moving picture business entirely and will change his former house into a garage. Mr. Reeves will dispose of all fixtures, including several hundred chairs.

TWO NEW THEATERS.

The M. & S. Amusement Company contemplates building two first class houses. On May 1st they will open the Regent theater, Main, near Grove street, East Orange. The house has 900 seats, and is up-to-date in every respect. The Pathe Weekly will be shown, also first run educational and scenic pictures. The other theater is on Seventh, near Orange street, Newark. One hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars is involved in this house, which will contain 1,600 seats. It is expected to be one of the prettiest moving picture places in the state. Paramount, Broadway and Pathe first run News will be shown. Henry Bechlin is the architect.

NEWARK SHORTER NOTES.

Jack A. Mayland, formerly operator at the National theater, has just become connected with the Imperial Motion Picture Co., as a solicitor. Mayland was one of the organizers of the local operators' union.

The spring and summer season is now in vogue at Proctor's Park Place theater. The scale of prices will be greatly lowered. High class motion pictures will be shown between the acts.

DAKOTA NOTES.

By Midwest Special News Service.

Eli McFarland is now sole owner of the Cozy, at Groton, S. Dak., having purchased the interest of August Shinkel.

John Piller, of Leeds, has taken over the Grand, at Larimore, N. Dak.

Manager Paul Kunert, of the Gem, at Hankinson, N. Dak., has started Saturday matinees for rural patrons.

Widlon & Hajem, of Viborg, S. Dak., have had plans prepared for a 26x100 brick moving picture theater to be equipped with stage and decorative front.

The Foto Play, at Pierre, S. Dak., under the new management of Alva Brown, reopened with "Paid in Full."

Gus Running will be manager of the new picture show in the George Pattinger building, at Valley Springs, S. Dak.

Samuel Spedden has opened the Orpheum, at Bristol, S. Dak.

Censorship in St. Louis

Mayor Kiel Wants Local Board to Supervise Shows and Theaters—Fears Some of City's 100 Picture Houses Are Fire Dangers—Wants Parents to Feel That Children at Shows Are Under City's Protection.

By G. H. Giebler, St. Louis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

IN Mayor Kiel's address to the First Board of Aldermen on April 24, he urged, among other recommendations, the creation of a municipal censor of moving pictures, and the investigation of safety of moving picture theaters and tents, by a committee of aldermen. He said:

"I want to call your attention to the necessity of censoring moving picture films shown in St. Louis, so that we may rest assured that our children may safely attend these shows without being subjected to moral danger. While most of the films shown here are censored under the direction of the National Board of Censorship, it is necessary, I believe, that you appoint a committee and invest it with sufficient authority to inquire into conditions in St. Louis in a logical preparation for the passage of legislation regulating moving picture shows, both as to the character of the films shown and as to the physical condition of the buildings in which such pictures are exhibited.

"The moving picture theater is a school. If the films are good ones, it is a school for good; if the films are bad ones, it is a school for bad. Therefore, you should act promptly to protect the morals of the children who attend the same. It is my information that there are nearly 100 moving picture shows in the city, many of which are not entirely fireproof, and some of which are in tents, and these, because of their great hazard to life and property, should be abolished. Statistics prepared by the building commissioner show that over 82,000 persons attend these moving picture houses every day. A large part of this attendance is children. We should, therefore, be doubly anxious to see that their welfare demands protective measures."

The churches in St. Louis and surrounding towns in Missouri and Illinois are also advocating censorship of moving pictures. At a meeting of the St. Clair County Federation of Catholic Societies in Freeburg, Ill., at which more than 200 delegates, representing every town in the county, attended, a board of censors for every town was recommended.

On the other hand there are many letters appearing in the People's Columns of the daily papers denouncing useless censorship. Since the prizefight films were banned from exhibition in the State of Missouri many are the criticisms appearing daily from the people themselves against the lawmakers, "who prohibit some films and allow others more detrimental to the morals of the people than any prizefight film might be."

MANY AIRDOMES OPENED.

Open Air Theaters in St. Louis Have Begun Summer Shows.

One of the first airdomes to open this season was the 18th Street airdome, which is situated just back of the 18th Street Theater, and which opened for business on April 18th, with very favorable weather for outdoor performances. William O. Reeve, manager of both the airdome and theater, is doing excellent business, giving his patrons all the serials he can get, with some features on special nights, and all for five cents admission.

The Monroe airdome, 3819 California avenue, opened on April 25th, with ten reels of pictures, including Beulah Poynter in "The Little Girl That He Forgot," in honor of the opening. The Monroe airdome seats 1,400 persons, and is managed by Mrs. H. D. Stoddard, one of the few women exhibitors in the city. Mrs. Stoddard also runs the Monroe theater.

The Hamilton airdome, Hamilton and Easton avenues, opened on April 29th, with a bill of moving pictures and vaudeville. The Hamilton is the largest open air theater in the city, and one of the most beautiful, with its many thousand electric lights, and a very pretty and ornamental pagoda near the entrance, with operator's booth above, and a rest room beneath. The Hamilton seats 4,000 persons, and charges 10 and 20 cents admission.

The Lyric Skydome, a new place of amusement at Delmar and Taylor avenues, opened on May 1st with "Hypocrites" as the initial bill. The West End Airdome Company is erecting a new airdome and theater on Florissant avenue, which will be ready to open to the public about May 10th with a bill of moving pictures and vaudeville.

FREE PARK PICTURES.

St. Louis is again to have free moving picture shows in the parks and playgrounds in all the thickly settled districts. For many years band concerts have been given in the parks and playgrounds, many of the parks being allowed only three or four concerts a season.

Last summer free moving pictures were given, primarily with the intention of showing the "Perils of the Fly," and other educational films, but the attendance was so great and the enthusiasm so hearty that the program was extended, and while most of the films were on the educational order some comedies and dramas were added, until a program of from four to five reels were shown at each park. The "fly" film was particularly effective, as also was a film showing the danger of allowing children to play on the streets, and perhaps those two films were viewed and remembered by more people than any other two shown in the city.

This year the free moving picture exhibitions will begin about June 1st, and will vie with the band concerts, and a new innovation in the form of neighborhood dances to be given in the parks and playgrounds. A portable platform that can be moved from one park to another will be used, and a schedule of band concerts, moving picture show and dance will be arranged so as to find no one of the entertainments conflicting with the other.

ST. LOUIS BRIEF NOTES.

A $15,000 building, to contain two stores and a moving picture theater, will be erected on the corner of Lee and Newstead avenues by Henry A. Pohlmann and Robert W. Kohlhauff. The lot on which the building will stand is 50 by 210 feet, and work is to begin immediately.

I. Leon Klasky, formerly with the Pathe Exchange, is now connected with the Fox Film Corporation as representative in Illinois, Indiana and Kentucky.

The Duchess theater, on Grand avenue and Olive street, was sold recently to Col. M. Schoenberg, who proposes to tear down the building, which was formerly a Presbyterian church converted into a theater, and erect a large building, using part of it for a theater, with suites for offices, or a hotel. Tentative offers have already been made to lease such a theater, with preferably a hotel in connection. The site of the old church is within half a block of Film Row, on Olive street, where many of the film exchanges are located, and many business fims are seeking quarters in the neighborhood.

At the Princess theater, on Grand avenue, the employes of the Missouri Pacific Railway Co., were entertained on April 26th with a lecture illustrated with moving pictures taken along the route of the Scenic Limited to the Pacific coast.

Roth Sees Bright Future

San Francisco Manager, of Partola Theater, Back from Trip to New York and Other Places in the East—Is Optimistic Over the Future in the Picture Field, Both from the Business and Artistic Viewpoint.

By T. A. Church, San Francisco Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

EUGENE ROTH, manager of the Portola theater, one of San Francisco's leading photoplay houses, and recognized as one of the ablest men in the business on the West Coast, has returned from a trip to New York where he made a careful study of present tendencies in the film market. While away he had the pleasure of meeting the heads of a number of the large concerns in the amusement world and came back filled with enthusiasm over the outlook for the future, both in regard to meritorious productions and the methods of placing these on the market.

He states that there is a more marked tendency at the present time on the part of producers to take into consideration the wants of the public than he has ever noted before, with a corresponding improvement in quality. Expense has become of secondary consideration in the production of feature films and makers are naturally looking to the large houses of the country to meet this increased cost by the payment of larger rentals. He found in New York a condition which he takes to be an important step in the placing of the moving picture business on a higher plane. The small, irresponsible producers are giving way to real business men who are giving their personal attention to the upbuilding of the industry and he believes that the immediate result of this will be that exhibitors will be placed in close touch with producers and that the indirect methods of doing business that have prevailed in the past will be done away with.

Mr. Roth returned home well satisfied with conditions here, as compared with those prevailing in other sections of the country, and with the business methods of Western exhibitors. He looks forward to a year of splendid business here, owing to the Panama-Pacific International Exposition.

"HEART OF MARYLAND" GIVEN PRESS REVIEW.

The filmed version of David Belasco's "The Heart of Maryland," with Mrs. Leslie Carter, was given a press review at the Gaiety on O'Farrell street, on the morning of April 24th by the All Star Feature Distributors, Inc., which control the rights of distribution in this territory. This private showing was attended by the greatest galaxy of dramatic critics that was ever gathered here to witness a moving picture performance and the newspaper comments were voluminous and highly favorable. Many exhibitors were present, as well as members of the Maryland Society of California.

CARL LAEMMLE AT EXPOSITION.

Carl Laemmle, accompanied by his wife and son, Julius, Mrs. M. Fleckles of Chicago, and Mr. and Mrs. M. Fischtenberg of New Orleans, was a recent visitor at the Jewel City and while here spent a large part of his time inspecting the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, which he pronounces the most wonderful thing he has ever seen. In commenting on business conditions, he said: "The European war has not hurt the moving picture manufacturing business. We have done more business in Europe and Great Britain since the war started than ever before in a like period. The increase in our foreign business has been a great surprise to us for we expected that it would drop to practically nothing. There is no accounting for this except that moving pictures are steadily growing in popularity and the war could not stop their progress." Mr. Laemmle has since left for New York, but plans to be here again at an early date.

OTHER SAN FRANCISCO NOTES.

The remodeling of the front of the Edison theater on Powell street has been completed and this now presents a very pleasing appearance. The small store has been removed, this widening the lobby, and a photo studio has been installed in the rear.

The Argentine Republic has opened its moving picture theater on the Exposition grounds and has the only Baird machine in operation there up to the present time.

George Chamberlain of the Independent Film exchange, is preparing to make a trip by automobile through the state, accompanied by his wife. He will first visit Eureka and vicinity, and will then go down the Coast as far as San Diego.

H. Nolan, district manager of the Universal Film Manufacturing company, with headquarters at Denver, Colo., and George Metzger, manager of the Portland, Ore., office, were here recently to confer with Carl Laemmle, making their headquarters at the California Film exchange, Inc.

The offices of the Golden Gate Film exchange and the All Star Feature Distributors, Inc., at 234 Eddy street, are being remodeled to make room for the new Kleine department, which has been removed to this location.

It is understood that R. E. Quive will act as local manager for the Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essanay, Inc., when a branch is opened here.

E. V. Clover, formerly manager of the Berkeley house of the Turner & Dahnken circuit, but of late in other lines, is again with this concern, filling a position at the main office at 942 Market street.

CALIFORNIA ITEMS.

J. R. Hart and J. B. Folk have taken over the old Crystal theater at Grass Valley, Cal., and have reopened it as the Gem, after having made extensive alterations.

The Liberty has been opened at Salinas under the management of Henry Vesley.

D. S. Taylor has opened an airdome at Tulare and is using a Powers Cameragraph No. 6A.

The Lyric at Eureka has been taken over by Charles Eaton, who will make a number of improvements. The new owner has purchased a moving picture camera and will take local views for the theater.

A. K. Adelberg has purchased the Kinema at Marysville and will conduct this as the Liberty. The house is to be remodeled and a ventilating system installed. Music will be furnished by a four-piece orchestra.

D. O. Haussler, formerly of San Francisco, has leased the Novelty at Napa, Cal., and has opened it as a 10-cent house. The inital attraction was William Farnum in "Sampson."

The Casino, at Lakeport, has been opened by D. Christianson. A local orchestra furnishes the music.

Al Johnson, formerly of Crescent City, has opened a splendidly equipped moving picture house at Requa.

Lee Cain and George Schlessinger have opened a large airdome at Tulare.

The Lyric, at Lodi, has been purchased by J. P. Gilbeau and an addition will be erected at an early date.

The Colonial, at Merced, recently taken over by J. R. Leonard, is to be known in the future as the De Luxe.

Fred Frisk, who recently took over John's theater, at Elmhurst, has disposed of the house and is looking for another in this territory.

Plans have been completed by A. R. Moore for the rebuilding of the opera house at Porterville, which was destroyed by fire last July. The new theater will seat over 900 persons and will cost, exclusive of equipment, about $25,000. A cooling plant for use during the summer months will be one of the features of the house. The theater will be used for moving pictures and road attractions.

The Thomas H. Ince Film Company has been incorporated at Los Angeles by Lloyd Wright, Charles E. Millikan, W. Woodson Wallace, Leo Silverstein, E. F. Nordgren and Charles D. Swanner. The capital stock is placed at $10,000.

A one-story moving picture theater will be erected at once on Telegraph avenue, near 41st street, Oakland, for Frank Mansini. The estimated cost is about $5,000.

BUFFALO MANAGER INVITES BUSINESS.

By Billy Bison, Buffalo Correspondent (229 Oxford Avenue), of Moving Picture World.

PATRONS of the Strand moving picture theater, Buffalo, appreciate Manager Edel's efforts to add a touch of realism to his programs. A recent feature at this house was "Little Sunset," containing an interesting baseball story. The piece was well advertised among local baseball fans and the ushers and other attaches of the theater wore uniforms of the national game. Bats, baseballs, gloves and other paraphernalia were neatly arranged in the lobby. Each patron was given a rain check under the direction of Assistant Manager Hyman and the whole atmosphere of the diamond was carried out to the letter. This offering was followed by "The Woman," a film dealing with the life of a telephone girl. Special invitations were sent to hundreds of telephone operators in the city to see the play. In the lobby was placed a special telephone booth containing a central switchboard. The mechanism was explained by an experienced operator.

MARCUS MANAGING HIPPODROME.

In a special write-up of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, in the Moving Picture World of May 8th, the name of Henry Marcus, the present manager, was inadvertantly omitted. Mr. Marcus is an experienced showman and has a valuable knowledge of what the Buffalo public wants in moving picture features. He was orchestra director of Shea's vaudeville theater, Buffalo, for several years. Under his supervision the Hippodrome orchestra therefore is highly efficient.

BUFFALO BRIEFS.

The name of the Programme Magazine, a Buffalo publication, has been changed to the Photo-Play Vogue, which is circulated among patrons of the Strand, Palace, Victoria and Regent theaters, Buffalo, and the Strand theater, New York City. Besides giving the programs of these houses, the magazine contains breezy fashion news, short stories, humorous articles and human interest items of moving picture stars. The editor is conducting a scenario contest, which has a long list of entrants.

P. W. Webster, of the All Theaters Film Co., of Buffalo, recently gave a screening of "Beulah," featuring Henry B. Walthall. This is a product of the Alliance Program. Michael Shea, owner of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, who witnessed the screening, booked the film for four days.

William Leyser, manager of the Marlowe theater, Buffalo, has taken on the Paramount Service with four changes of programs a week. His first offering was "The Warrens of Virginia."

Harry Somerville, formerly manager of the Poli Strand, Waterbury, Conn., has become manager of the Family, Happy Hour and Airovict theaters, owned by the Meyer Amusement Co., Buffalo. While in Waterbury, Mr. Somerville and W. C. Parker, formerly a photographer for the Pathe Weekly, are conducting the Meyer Weekly Review. They feature moving pictures of local events and show them in the five Buffalo theaters of the Meyer Co. Their pictures of the Buffalo Consistory and the Velodrome races in that city are being shown. Mr. Parker recently returned from Mexico.

Fred A. Rice, a Warsaw, N. Y., merchant, has decided to devote all his time to the moving picture business in that village.

A voting contest favorable to Sunday shows was recently conducted by Manager Kenneth Marvin, among the patrons of the Strand theater of White Plains, N. Y. Mr. Marvin will run a series of local pictures at his house.

Mayor Smith of Utica, N. Y., has stated that the opening of any moving picture theater in that city on Sunday would be stopped by the authorities. An injunction recently prevented the Sunday opening of the Bender theater in that city.

Moving pictures on the preservation of health were recently shown in Buffalo at the 109th annual meeting of the Medical Society of New York State.

A moving picture theater will be built in Williamson, N. Y., by the Williamson Amusement Co. The officers of the concern are president, C. I. Trimble; vice-president, F. W. Lockley; secretary, E. R. Scott; treasurer, A. H. Williams.

H. N. McArthurs has been succeeded by Mr. Robins of Toronto, Ont., as manager of the Griffin theater in Welland, a Canadian town near Buffalo.

F. E. Bennett has opened a moving picture show at Ulysses, Pa.

F. F. Peters will enlarge the Majestic, Hornell, N. Y.

A moving picture theater will be built at West Lawrence street and Madison avenue, Albany, N. Y., at a cost of $30,000.

J. J. Hurley has bought the Idle Hour theater, Cambridge Springs, Pa., from W. F. Workman. S. V. Wallace will continue to manage the house.

The Warren theater, in Hudson, N. Y., is being repaired.

Sylvester Nicolette will build a theater in Potsdam, N. Y. The house will run moving pictures, stock companies and other attractions. The theater will have a capacity of 1,012, with 976 seats in the orchestra and thirty-six boxes.

IN THE GULF STATES.

Lee Lanier, manager of the Bunkie (La.) Record, is about to open up a new modern picture house, showing six times a week.

The New Orleans First City Criminal Court, Judge Fisher presiding, ruled last week in the case of Frank Davis, manager of the "Magic," on trial for assault and battery, that the manager was not only in the right in throwing out the patron who, it is said, was becoming rowdy, but that it was the duty of the management to quiet disturbers, even using force where necessary. The district attorney abandoned the case.

Wiggins, Miss., is to have the realest thing in floor slants in the new picture theater being erected by W. A. Reed. It is being built on the side of a hill and simply slopes same as the hill.

The William Fox Film Co., New Orleans office, will shortly double its floor space in the Weis Building and add two new employes to its already large staff, according to recent announcement by S. T. Stephens, New Orleans manager. Abraham Carlos, general representative for Fox, was in New Orleans recently in this connection.

"The Clemenceau Case," Fox feature, was on private view for the exhibitors, some forty of whom attended, last week at Pearce's Tudor, for which theater the picture is booked.

Exchange Men Organizing

New Orleans Exchange Managers' Association Expected to Be in Working Shape by Middle of May—Needs Only Approval of Work of Committee by Membership—What the New Organization Hopes to Accomplish.

By Trades Press, New Orleans Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

An early date has been set for the completion of the organization of the New Orleans film exchange managers' association, and it is expected that it will be a going organization by the middle of May. The preliminary work, entrusted to a committee of two, Messrs. Paul Ford, of the United, and Mr. A. G. Shear, of the Consolidated, has been completed, and needs only to be formally approved by the membership, at the time of which approval officers will be elected and the plans of the organization given out in detail.

Probably the first piece of legislation that will be worked for by the exchange men's association, according to authoritative information, will be a state legislature bill to make the sub-renting of films by persons not properly authorized so to do a misdemeanor. This law would be aimed at certain of the less responsible exhibitors, who, according to exchange sources of information, make a practice of holding out films on some pretext and booking it to neighboring houses.

Such action by the offending exhibitors, say the exchange managers, not only diverts rentals which should properly come to them, but disarranges legitimate bookings, especially on circuits where the film is sent out booked to a number of exhibitors in succession. This evil, it is reported, is encountered in a slightly lighter form in certain suburban houses, certain exhibitors arranging to swap film during an evening.

This swapping of film not only deprives the exchanges of certain rentals, but is not unlikely to prove a hardship to the more careful exhibitor who pays for all his film instead of for only a part of it. This swapping has been detected a few times lately and in several cases the offending exhibitors have sent in their checks without demur on learning that the exchange manager was aware of the situation.

Booking of film by exhibitors to other exhibitors has also been discovered on several occasions and in certain cases the exchange men concerned have been forced to bring suit to collect, the offense being only a breach of trust under the present Louisiana law and not actionable except civilly. The exchange men expect the hearty co-operation of the better classes of exhibitors in their fight against such procedure.

WAR PICTURES AT ATHENAUEM.

The German war pictures, taken under German army supervision, will be shown in New Orleans April 27 and 28 at the Athenauem, as a part of the bazaar for the benefit of the German widows' and orphans' fund. The music for these pictures, and for the rest of the entertainment, will be the best that New Orleans' German colony can produce, both instrumental and vocal, the singing societies lending their full aid. A number of the larger breweries have donated quantities of beer for the Bavarian garden and it is expected that the pictures will be seen by a great number of people. This will probably be the enly exhibition in New Orleans, as the pictures are controlled by the Fatherland Corporation and are released for charitable purposes only, which is taken to mean German benefits.

V-L-S-E WILL OPEN OFFICE IN NEW ORLEANS.

The Vitagraph - Lubin - Selig - Essanay combination, "V-L-S-E," marketing agency for the larger features of the four organizations, will shortly open an office in New Orleans, according to Walter W. Irwin, of the New York office of the company, who was in New Orleans recently.

JANE MILLER PLEASES JACKSON FOLKS.

Jane Miller, playing the lead in William Fox's "Valley of the Missing," was given an ovation in Jackson, Miss., the other day that would have been music to the ears of the greatest legitimate star; it was no "picture show" audience at all, if one is to understand by that term a cold, still house. The reason, or at least the big reason, is that Jackson is Miss Miller's home. Previous to her entrance on her picture career she had lived in Jackson for a number of years and was very popular there. H. D. Bowers, manager of the Majestic, at which house the screen vision of Miss Miller appeared, made the most of this popularity and every one in the smart little town, aristocrats and cabbies, was glad of it.

GUERINGER BACK FROM TEXAS.

W. H. Gueringer, general manager for the Fichtenberg interests, with headquarters in New Orleans, returned to New Orleans recently from a trip through Texas, where he purchased film for the several Texas houses of the company. He had considerable to tell of his trip and of things to be done in New Orleans, but he was not allowed to tell of them immediately, for on arrival home he was accorded a demonstration in the way of a rip-roaring banquet at Kolb's German Tavern, one of the smartest places in New Orleans, by a crowd of film friends.

Among those present were Al Shear, of the Consolidated; Bert Hadfield, Mert Lawrence, Jack Palmer and Bob Eberle, of the Mutual; Harold Goldenburg, manager of the Tulane; Carl Goldenberg, manager of the Alamo; Barney Mulligan, manager of the Dreamworld; William Dunn, manager of the Plaza; Gaston J. Dureau, Jr., assistant to Gueringer; Bob Murphy, the "Knut," singing at the Alamo; Rube Chisholm, booking "After the Ball" in the Southern territory; Don Williams, booking "The Christian" through Louisiana and Mississippi, and Dr. P. M. Godchaux.

GULF STATE NOTES.

Fichtenberg's "Isis," at Houston has been remodelled, the chief changes being the addition of a smoking gallery, the ventilation of which is said to be perfect, and the installation of boxes in the orchestra; both of these features are new to Houston and have excited much favorable comment. Harry Van Demark has just taken charge of the "Isis" as manager.

Plans were being prepared for the remodelling of the Picto, New Orleans, the cost to run into several thousand dollars. The house will be one of the most modern and beautiful in the city after the contemplated work has been completed, according to the Fichtenberg office. The seating capacity will be increased to 400 and the height of the ceiling will be doubled. The lobby and front will be changed completely.

"The Diamond from the Sky," the new Mutual serial, is being booked throughout Alabama by W. L. Lawrence, special representative. The first and third episodes of this picture were shown at a private view for exhibitors only at Fichtenberg's Alamo the other day.

LUBIN MUSIC IN JACKSONVILLE.

By Leon Louiso, Jacksonville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

A VISIT to the Lubin studio recently might well be described something like this: On approaching the studio there issued forth blatant but harmonious sounds of music. What was this, the Salvation Army paying a visit? But on entering all such thoughts were easily disposed of, for it was none other than the Lubin comedy band in rehearsal. Billie Reeves, who a few years ago played the itinerant cornetist in the London production of "The Slums of London," which was a stage version of Dickens' work, has not forgotten his musical knowledge and he was busy. Billy Potter, of the vaudeville act, Potter & Hartwell, is known internationally as the original man with the two heads. He is a member of the company and much of his spare time is spent either playing the mandolin or the piano in the studio. Chas. Griffiths, who has been in the Fred Karno productions for nineteen years, and who played the old man in the box in the "A Night in an English Music Hall," is a member of the band. Johnny Doyle, who played the boy in the box in the music hall act is another one of the band company. Robin Williamson, who has been with the Lubin company for a number of years, is playing characters. Ben Walker, who has been with company for the past few years, is also in it.

Director Arthur D. Hotaling may put the comedy band in one of the band contests the first opportunity that is presented. A few more rehearsals will get the band into good condition for contest work.

Studio Jottings.

Director Kenean Buel is making a three-reel picture, "The Bond Woman," with Vera Mellish. Miss Mellish recently appeared in "Under Cover," the big Metropolitan success, and also in "Nobody Home." It is one of the Broadway favorite pictures.

Director Guy Coombs is making a two-reel picture, "The Sacrifice." Anna Nilsson and Guy Coombs play the leads. Robert McGauhey is doing the camera work.

Director Robert G. Vignola is making the eighth of the "Ten Commandment Series." Alice Hollister, Harry Milarde and Arthur Albertson are playing the principal parts. Mr. Vignola will then make a four-reel picture. The English actor, Lawson Butts, who recently appeared in the New York production of "The Lie" with Margaret Illington, will come for the picture. The play is from the work, "Don Caesar De Bazan."

A life-size oil portrait of Alice Hollister was painted recently by Mr. Chas. K. Owen of the Kalem studio. The portrait is a good likeness and is another of Mr. Owen's excellent portraits made since he came to the Kalem company at Jacksonville. The portrait will be on display at one of the theaters advertising the Kalem release, "The Destroyer."

L. N. "Babe" Hardy has gone to New York City on business. He was recently with the Lubin Southern Studio, where he worked in comedy pictures. He is one of the well known "fat" men and is considered very clever by his many admirers who have seen his work.

NEWS LETTER FROM MINNESOTA.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

MANAGERS of moving picture houses in Minnesota will be asked by Mrs. C. L. Atwood, state president of Women's Clubs to show public health films. These pictures, which will be made by the social service committee of the St. Paul Commercial Club, will show actual photographs of the incubation of germs taken from filthy places, of the making of microscopic slides, and the classification of germs. The films will also show cultures taken from the same areas, after being cleaned, showing that there is no menace to health when sanitation is provided.

The Milo theater, at Little Falls, seating 415, has been sold to the Careys, of Willmar. Mr. H. Carey will be resident manager.

The Schuman building, at Elgin, will be remodeled for a moving picture theater.

Marshall now has three show houses. W. R. Chittenden has reopened the old opera house with pictures at 5 and 10 cents. He will also have stock companies.

Work of remodeling the Gem, at Owatonna into a larger and handsomer house, seating 600, has begun.

E. J. Spiegel has been having the Bessetti building, at Buhl, remodeled into a picture house.

The Park theater, in St. Paul, is now under the management of Joseph and Charles Friedman and George W. Grandstrom, of the Strand.

Women of St. Agnes' Guild sold tickets and candy and added a musical program to share in the proceeds from showing "The Heart of Lincoln," at Dreamland, at Willmar.

W. J. Themar, of Carvar, has opened a picture show at Eden Valley.

NORTH CAROLINA NOTES.

By Clarence L. Linze, North Carolina Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE restoration of confidence in future good business is causing considerable construction work in the various theaters. In Reidsville the Grotto theater is undergoing extensive repairs. This house is now being conducted by Nick Jones, formerly of Greensboro, who intends to give the Reidsville fans a first class place of amusement and will use a service of high grade. The house was formerly under the management of Cabell Davis. Two Simplex projecting machines have just been installed.

The Crystal, in Burlington, has also just been remodeled and improved to meet the requirements of an increased business which necessitated the addition of a balcony. C. Cooley, manager of this theater, is receiving many compliments on the fine appearance which the Crystal now presents and upon the attitude taken by him of there being nothing too good for his patrons. He is giving a four-reel program of pictures.

The Grotto theater, in Burlington, N. C., has also been recently overhauled with the result that it is one of the most modern theaters in the state. E. May, who operates this house, is well known to the exhibitors in this section by reason of his activity in connection with the work of the State League.

W. E. Stewart, who for the past three years has conducted the Pastime, in Concord, has completed a new house in High Point, which he has named the Point theater. This is a model house in all respects, for Mr. Stewart is a live wire exhibitor and knows how to take advantage of all opportunities offered him to increase his business.

Charles O. Moss, manager of the Charlotte, N. C., branch of the United Film Service, has returned from a visit to Washington, D. C., where he attended the opening of the firm's new building in that place. He is enthusiastic over the many new innovations made to facilitate shipping and the handling of accounts, enabling him to give his patrons in this territory even better service than that which has previously been possible. He made many suggestions based on his knowledge of local conditions which will greatly aid him in giving good service. Quick deliveries will follow the numerous improvements.

Charles S. Manning, who recently resigned as manager of the Charlotte branch of the Mutual Film Corporation, has opened offices in the Realty Building, where he will conduct a supply business. Mr. Manning has had a wide experience in the film business and by reason of his faculty of making friends at every point, he is practically assured of success. His relations with the exhibitors has ever been cordial and he has been promised support from many. He is succeeded in his position as manager of the Mutual exchange by A. B. Cheatham.

INDIANAPOLIS BANS SUNDAY VAUDEVILLE.

Special to Moving Picture World from Indiana Trade News Service.

MAYOR BELL, of Indianapolis, has issued orders that the exhibitors of the city who attempt to give vaudeville on Sunday will be arrested. The Mayor has permitted the houses to put on a musical act with Sunday shows, and to have music with the pictures, but has drawn the line on artists in the flesh. The order was precipitated by one theater of the city advertising its week day bill for Sunday.

GIVE UP SUNDAY OPENING IN HARTFORD CITY.

The exhibitors of Hartford City, Ind., have given up the idea of running open on Sunday, and Prosecutor Lee F. Sprague, taking them at their word, has dismissed cases that were pending against Al Radabaugh, former owner of the Palace theater, now running a house in Dunkirk; Arend Rosenbush, of the Royal theater, and "Pop" Fuller, who formerly owned the Star. One case against E. P. Fuller, who was arrested at the same time, was tried, and Fuller was fined and paid. The other exhibitors were satisfied with the judgment and have since made no effort to keep open.

SCRAP TO SHOW THE SUFFRAGE PICTURE.

George Bertha, of Lafayette, running the Grand motion picture theater, at Logansport, Ind., is between two suffrage societies. Bertha agreed to run the suffrage film "Your Girl and Mine," and the Equal Suffrage workers were to put it on. Then the Franchise League, made up of another and younger set of girls, "butter in," so to speak, and taking the matter up with the New York office, succeeded in getting them to cancel the appearance of the film in Logansport. Then the Franchise League got busy some more, and Bertha is advised now that the film is to be released to the League. Bertha don't care what happens, but he is listening to a lot of mean things that the would-be voters are saying about each other.

INDIANA BRIEFS.

The Lincoln theater, Valparaiso, Ind., will be reopened May 3. Thomas Polk is in charge and he announces a five-cent program Monday, Tuesday and Thursday, and one for a dime on all other nights.

The Wells Bijou, Evansville, Ind., has taken on the Mutual Master program and is now carrying an orchestra of twelve pieces and running a ten-cent show, continuous from 1 to 10.30 p. m.

The Henderson Film Company, of Fort Wayne, Ind., is getting out a Fort Wayne Movie Monthly film of events and places of interest in Fort Wayne.

J. M. Culbertson, who has operated the Princess theater for several months, has leased it to Tom Waterall, who is now in possession. Mr. Waterall comes from Boston.

John Stark, owner of the Rex, Decatur, Ind., has sold his Celina, O., house to Celina people.

Valparaiso, Goshen and Hammond are all claiming "Happy" Harry Benham, of the Thanhouser Photoplay Company, as a home boy, and all of them are right, it seems. Benham was born in Valparaiso, educated in Goshen and thrust upon a cruel world and told to hustle in Hammond.

Browin & Strobe, of Greencastle, are putting up an airdome at Plainfield, Ind. Pictures and vaudeville will constitute the Browin & Strobe summer menu.

Haney & Davis have opened an airdome in North Vernon, showing the World Film Corporation feature "The Adventures of a Boy Scout."

Ace Kelley is rushing the construction of his airdome on North Meridian street, Muncie. Last year Kelly did not open until the middle of May.

Stories of the Films

A CORRECTION.

On page 984 of last week's issue May 8—there appeared under the head of United Film Service two Mutual Masterpictures, entitled "The Victim," a three-part Majestic feature, and "The Absentee," a five-part Majestic. This error was not caught in proofreading, and exhibitors will kindly observe the mistake in referring to these stories.

VITAGRAPH.

THE JARR FAMILY—(Series No. 7)—"Mr. Jarr and the Dachshund" (May 17)—On arriving home late from lodge meeting, Mr. Jarr, feeling a little hilarious from a couple of rounds of liquid salutations, experiences considerable trouble in locating the front door keyhole. When he finally gets, in his wife gives him a scolding, tells him not to wake the children, then asks him to please put the goldfish aquarium, in which Willie had been fishing, back in the dining room where it belongs. Disaster overtakes Jarr at once and he and the goldfish tank come to grief in one wild, involuntary leap over the doll baby carriage lurking in his path. The children get a goodly portion of the water and wake up bawling. Mrs. Jarr rushes in just in time to help her husband pick the goldfish out of the neck of his shirt, while keeping up a rapid-fire talk. The following day, to make amends for the destruction of the goldfish, Jarr buys a handsome little dachshund dog as a pet for the children. By chance Ivan, a big Polack coal-heaver, also buys a dachshund exactly like the one Mr. Jarr purchased, which he brings home to his happy and numerous family. While Willy is out with the Jarr dachshund, Izzy Slavinsky, the glazier's boy, succeeds in swiping the dog without Willie's knowledge, leaving a dead kitty in its place. Izzy's father sees the Polack's dachshund and tells Jarr, who naturally things Ivan stole it, so, backed by his friends, he sallies forth to the Polack's domicile. After a battle-royal they return triumphant. On entering his home Jarr is staggered to see their own dachshund safe and sound.

THE AWAKENING (Special—Three parts—May 18)—While on a tour of investigation through the tenement district Roscoe Thane, a prominent and wealthy surgeon, engaged to Vivian, a conceited, selfish society girl, meets Jo, a beautiful girl of the slums, and Jim, her crippled brother. After an examination Dr. Thane announces that he can cure Jim of his lameness. The operation is performed and to everyone's joy, proves entirely successful. Jo's gratitude is very touching and it develops into an intense love and devotion for the young doctor. Thane, on his part, finds he is in love with Jo, and spends many weary hours fighting over his love, and the ties which bind him to Vivian. His important experimental work in connection with a tubercular serum turns out a complete success. Elated, he asks Vivian to come to his laboratory to view his triumph. Unwillingly she comes, dragging some lady friends with her. Her lack of interest and childish remarks chill Thane, and after the party has gone he experiences an awakening to the true character of Vivian. He then sends for Joe and her brother, and their enthusiastic, sincere interest is like water to his parched soul. He takes Jim under his tutelage, to make a doctor of him, and feeling he is called to work among the poor and needy, they go to live in the poor quarters of the city. Vivian visits him there, and is disgusted at everything. A few days later Thane is overcome by a contagious fever. Vivian is sent for, but on learning the nature of the malady, the lady politely but firmly refuses to go near the place. Jo nurses Thane back to health, and when all danger is passed and Vivian condescends to visit him, she finds Jo in Thane's arms. With a disdainful air she leaves the two to their happiness.

ALMOST A HERO (May 19)—With the descriptive name of Archibald Masher, a fresh traveling salesman, arrives in Slumberville and registers at the hotel about the same time as a meek, inoffensive looking little man, who simply signs himself, "Mr. Jabb." The two men are assigned to rooms across the hall from each other. Masher's room number is 13 and Jabb's 15. Masher later meets Lill, the village flirt, on the main street, and when her shoestring becomes untied, accidentally-on-purpose, he gallantly ties it for her, then the two walk off arm-in-arm. But her "steady beau," Si Hanks, sees this and, wild with rage, pursues the couple. Masher shows that he is in reality a coward, but the girl saves him from a thrashing. Meeting Jabb, Masher asks the little fellow if he will exchange rooms with him, saying he is very superstitious about the number 13, and adding the promise of a ten-spot as an inducement. The real reason is because he has learned Si and his friends intend to kidnap him from his room, then ride him out of town on a rail. No sooner have the two men exchanged rooms than Si and his backers creep up the stairs and into room 13. Then follows an indescribable riot, at the whirlwind finish of which scrappy little Jabb knocks the three men down in order, then throws them down stairs. Jabb then tells Masher he wants his own room back—and gets it. Next morning the news of Masher's supposed heroism spreads and he is made the subject of much hero-worship by the town's inhabitants. But his triumph is short-lived, for Jabb shows up for his ten dollars, inadvertently revealing what really happened the night before, adding that he is "O. Whata Jabb," a champion prize-fighter. The girl then gives Masher the "cold shoulder" while the crowd grab him and carry out Si's original intentions of giving the fresh drummer a railride, after which Lill is glad to rest her head on Si's manly bosom.

DIMPLES (May 20)—Not having sold a car in weeks, Van Dyke, agent for the "Flivver" car, feels pretty blue, so he decides to go out for a little spin. On the Boulevard his poor little car breaks down and Dimples, in her own big car, comes to his rescue. Her brother Bing asks in a fresh tone if "he can't put it in our car and take it to some poor family," but Dimples reproves him and tows Van to the favorite stopping place of the "Flivver," a repair shop. There Van meets her father and receives an invitation to dinner. Van and Dimples fall in love, his visits become regular and Van asks Mr. White for his daughter's hand in marriage. Her father will not hear of it, explaining that no man could make a living for his daughter selling "Flivver" cars. Dimples spiritedly announces that she can sell "Flivvers." Her lover is rather skeptical, but she meets success from the start. After interesting a couple of wealthy old gentlemen in the car, and a demonstration ride, before she gets through talking, Dimples has sold a car to everyone in their families. Despite Van's prospering business, Mr. White still proves obdurate, so one day, while the big car belonging to Mr. White and the little "Flivver" are standing side-by-side, Van steals Dimples and is off at full speed. Mr. White, sputtering angrily, with difficulty turns his big car and follows in hot pursuit. Of course it would have been a short race, but with the aid of Bing and a stroke of luck at a railroad crossing, Van and Dimples escape. At a fork in the road Van whispers to his companion that the minister lives on the road to the right. She says, "Yes," so they turn in that direction.

CUPID PUTS ONE OVER ON THE SHATCHEN (May 21).—When Sadie Feigenbaum shows off her wedding trousseau to the widow Greenberg, that lady expresses the wish that her own daughter, Rosie, could find a nice young man for a husband. At Mrs. Feigenbaum's suggestion Mrs. Greenberg goes to Shatchen Meyer's to arrange for a match for her daughter. The Shatchen is a sort of marriage broker, and after a little argument over the size of the advance fee, Meyer places Rosie's name on file. While Mrs. Greenberg is there Mr. Goldstein, a widower, whose son Benny works in the same office with Rosie and is in love with her, enters, and after registering his son with the Shatchen, is introduced to Mrs. Greenberg. The two become friends at once, and both promise to have a long talk with their respective son and daughter. When Benny and Rosie are broached on the subject of a prearranged marriage, however, both go up in the air and refuse to hear of it. Neither parent mentions the name of the party they have selected, so the young people elope, wiring to their parents, "Am married and coming home for forgiveness." Both Mrs. Greenberg and Mr. Goldstein rush off to the Shatchen's, wild to think of that gentleman receiving their perfectly good money for nothing and allowing the match to fall through. The Shatchen does not let go of the money very easily, but they finally talk him out of it, and the two melancholy parents wend their way to Mrs. Greenberg's to "have a good glass of tea." While they are commiserating each other the repentant elopers return to the Greenberg home. Hearing voices they steal into the parlor, and after recovering from their astonishment, hear them express their sorrow at not having consummated the match between their children. Then Rosie and Benny step forward and after a joyful reunion, preparations are soon under way to celebrate the event with a regular marriage feast.

IN THE DAYS OF FAMINE (Broadway Star Feature—Special—Three parts—May 22).—Jan De Bar, a young French-Canadian, is sent out from the Hudson Bay Company's post at God's Lake to perform the perilous task of burning the plague-stricken cabins of those who have died of the dreaded smallpox. In one of them he finds Jeanette, a little girl, who, by some miracle, has escaped the plague. Knowing that by entering the cabin he has exposed himself to danger of the disease, Jan builds an isolated camp and puts up the red flag of warning. After making sure he has not caught the plague, Jan returns to the post, and having grown very fond of the child, he brings it up as his own. Five years later Jeanette, now a beautiful young lady, returns from school, her education finished. Walker, a young sergeant in the Royal Mounted Police, has fallen in love with the girl and Jan, noticing this, is awakened to the first pangs of heartache in the realization that he no longer cares for Jean in a fatherly manner. He fears she could never think of him otherwise, and feels it his duty to hide his love, taking it for granted her preference would be for the younger man. Apparently he is not altogether successful in concealing his affection, for Jeanette purposely devotes more attention to the young officer, just to see what effect it will have on Jan. It makes him feel very badly, but he still keeps silent. Just before the two men start out on a long journey she places a note, confessing her love, in what she supposes is Jan's sack. Walker finds it in his pack and Jan then gives up all hopes. Later, a thief of the North steals their guns and food and Jan breaks his leg. Jan, telling the man he must live for Jean's sake, persuades Walker to go on to the post alone. There Walker hears from Jeanette's own lips that the note was intended for Jan. He is heartbroken, but manfully leads the rescue party back to Jan, who has kept alive almost by sheer grit. Jan is overwhelmed by his great joy when Jeanette, looking into his eyes without wavering, tells him her note was for him—Jan.

ROAD O' STRIFE—No. 7, "Into the Night" (May 17).—Supposing Alene, Dane and Abner Gray to have died in the trap set by Clara, Gilbert Jerome and the woman leave the village. Their train is wrecked and Clara is killed outright. Gilbert is also reported killed, though he is in fact uninjured and proceeds to his home, taking the silver cup with him. Dane's financial ruin is complete, and it is necessary that he find employment. Thinking that no further danger menaces Alene, he enlists the services of a kindly old lady who promises to look after the girl, and departs for the city. Believing that Alene's fancy for him has already died, Dane thinks it will be best for her as well as for himself to allow her to forget him, and does not even inform her of his address.

It is not long after Dane's departure that Alene is told that Doctor Duncan and his wife are dead, and the Duncan home is seized by the sheriff on behalf of Duncan's creditors. The timid old lady engaged by Dane is incapable of rising to the situation, and leaves Alene to the disposition of the officer, who brutally tells her that she is to go to the poor-farm. Surely Robert Dane will take me now, she soliloquises, and with simple faith steals away to seek him. She does not even vaguely comprehend the magnitude of the undertaking. She knows only that Dane has gone to the city, and has been told that the highway from the village leads there.

In the city Dane is vainly striving to put from his heart the love which he thinks can only bring him sorrow, and Gilbert Jerome is savagely cursing the fate which, as he thinks, has made him secure in the possession of his stolen fortune but robbed him of the girl of his desire. When darkness falls Alene is far along her lonely road, weary, penniless and utterly ignorant of the ways or dangers of the world.

A LUCKY STRIKE (May 18).—"Bill" Meyers, a rich miner, longs for a home and a wife, and inserts an ad. in an Eastern newspaper. Nellie Crehan and her niece, Elinor, see the ad. and, in a spirit of fun, decide to answer it. The letter arrives, together with an offer from an Eastern firm making Bill an offer of a million dollars for his mine. Bill has visions of a happy home and a life of contentment. Both letters are from the same city, and Bill decides to answer them in person. Arrived at the firm's office he begins negotiations for the sale of the mine, and hurries away to seek the writer of the other letter, before completing the sale.

Arriving at the house he informs them who he is. The aunt and niece decide to carry the joke further and to have Nora, the cook, pose as the writer of the letter and the mistress. Nora reluctantly consents and is dressed for the part. She receives Bill, who is favorably impressed and who proposes at once. He is promised an answer that afternoon. Gray and Vincent, the financiers, wishing to close the contract, which Bill had forgotten for the time, trace him to the house. The aunt, dressed as the maid, admits them. Securing Bill's signature to the contract, they hand him a check for a million dollars, much to the surprise of Nora, and to the chagrin of the aunt and niece who have been overhearing all.

Realizing the opportunity she has lost, the aunt indignantly exposes Nora's identity and dismisses her to the kitchen. Having truly fallen in love with Nora, Bill refuses to believe that she is the cook. To convince him they take him to the kichen where Nora is at work. Seeing a freshly baked pie, Bill helps himself to a slice and is delighted with it. He decides that whoever can bake a pie like that shall be his wife. He asks Nelle if it was she who baked the pie and she scornfully denies it, and points to Nora. Bill is delighted, proposes and is accepted.

IN THE DARK (Special—Three parts—May 19).—Rex Mansfield, an artist, has achieved fame through hard work and his economical wife. Though they have been companionable in the days of their poverty, the arrival of wealth and fame estranges them, and Edith is left at home while Rex spends his days at work upon a wonderful portrait of Julie Duval, a beautiful foreign actress. Edith is dissatisfied. She does not yet distrust Rex, but it seems to her unjust that she must be forced to give him up to his work, after having struggled so long to help him. Then Leo Lechmeer comes into her life. He had been instrumental in getting Rex the commission to paint the portrait, and had been a devoted admirer of the actress, but when he meets Edith, he seems to find in her a more congenial companion. Craftily Lechmeer plants in her mind the seeds of distrust, and though Edith knows that she loves Rex, she is slowly slipping into the clutches of Lechmeer.

During the sittings at the studio Julie has fallen deeply in love with Rex and takes his admiration as evidence of his love for her. When the portrait is completed she throws herself into his arms. Rex is dumfounded. He tells Julie bluntly that she has misunderstood him—that his admiration has been only that of the artist. In a mad desire for revenge for her injured pride, the actress seizes a bottle of etching acid and throws it into Rex's eyes, completely blinding him. Then she leaves him. Rex phones the specialist, Dr. McVicar, who treats him, but who gives him no hope of recovering his sight. Rex makes the doctor promise to keep the truth from Edith and to say that it was all an accident. Though Edith is heartbroken, she yet feels that Rex is holding something back, and comes to believe Lechmeer's insinuations that Rex was in love with Julie and is shielding her. In anger Edith smears the portrait of Julie and agrees to go away with Lechmeer.

Dr. McVicar learns of a new operation which might cure Rex, and starts for the studio. Edith has gone to Lechmeer's home that morning, and he has just started out to get steamer tickets. Directly in front of the house he is run down by the doctor's car, and McVicar, who is unknown to Edith, carries the dying man into the house, where he sympathizes with Edith, thinking her the wife. Then he goes to Rex. Edith believes herself trapped and contemplates suicide. Looking for a revolver, she comes upon evidence of Julie's love for Lechmeer. Realizing the truth, she rushes home, where she finds that Rex's sight has been restored. She is also confronted by Dr. McVicar, and knowing that he has recognized her as the woman in Lechmeer's apartments, she feels certain of discovery. Again she attempts to end her life, but is saved by the doctor, who tells her the true story of the accident, proving Rex's innocence. She rushes to him to find that he has ripped the portrait from its frame without discovering that Edith has already ruined it. Rex never learns of Edith mistaken escapades with Lechmeer.

A DECISION OF THE COURT (Special—Two parts—May 20).—Judge Hall sentences a youth to a long term in the penitentiary for a grave offense, but he makes a lifelong enemy of the culprit's widowed mother, who convinces herself that she owes the judge an injury. A year later she receives word that her son has died in prison. Years pass before Madge Cord, the widowed mother, and Judge Hall meet again. She has prospered and remarried. She and her second husband live at a fashionable hotel and among their associates are Tim Burke, a political fixer, and George Booth, a broker. To this hotel comes Judge Hall, who has just been appointed to the Federal bench in the city where the Cords live. Accompanying the judge is his son, Elwood. Mrs. Cord discovers Judge Hall's presence without his being aware of her existence. Her hatred for him is revived. She makes the acquaintance of his son, Elwood, planning to ruin him by teaching him to gamble. This is to be her revenge. Before the plot has progressed far Mrs. Cord finds a way to take her revenge and at the same time turn a profit for herself and her friends.

A case involving railroad rates has been heard by Judge Hall, who is about ready to render decision. The opinion will have a tremendous effect, one way or the other, upon the stock market. Young Elwood Hall has become heavily indebted to Burke and Cord through gambling and cannot pay. Mrs. Cord, together with Burke and Booth, use these debts as a threat to force Elwood to obtain secretly an advance copy of his father's forthcoming decision. With this valuable information they prepared to make a clean-up on the stock market. All the money they can raise goes into the pool. The conspirators watch the ticker. For a while everything goes in their favor.

Mrs. Cord, feeling that her hour of triumph has come, cannot resist the temptation to gloat over her enemy and calls on Judge Hall. She identifies herself to him and calmly proceeds to relate how she has ruined his son and clouded his own decision. Meanwhile, something has gone wrong on the stock exchange. Cord, Booth and Burke see their stocks take a drop. It is the arrival of the newspaper extras which causes the sudden reversal, but it comes so quickly that there is no way for them to protect themselves. The newspapers arrive at the home of Judge Hall just as Elwood, whom the Judge has called in to confront Mrs. Cord, admits that her story is true and that he gave out advance information. Through his story Judge Hall learns that it was an early draft of the opinion which Elwood gave out. He shows Mrs. Cord the news story which indicates that the decision rendered was written before new evidence had come to light and is the opposite of the original. Mrs. Cord realizes that she and her friends are ruined—crushed—and Judge Hall calls a servant to show her the door.

JUST RETRIBUTION (May 21)—Will Duncan, a wealthy man, has a dissolute nephew. May, his daughter, is in love with the old man's lawyer, Harry Campbell. The match is sanctioned by the father and he dies shortly afterward. A will is made out on his deathbed bequeathing all to the daughter; if she should die before having an heir herself, it would revert to the nephew. Meanwhile the nephew, finding himself the tool of an unscrupulous gang, allows them to plot to put the girl out of the way. She is abducted and held prisoner in an old house that the nephew and his pals have made a secret meeting place. The lawyer gets a clue and learns where she is imprisoned. The night when the men argue with the nephew about getting the girl out of the way the lawyer secures a ladder and enters the upper part of the house near the door behind which the girl is prisoner. His footsteps are overheard by the men. They go upstairs to kill the girl, but being afraid, go back.

Meanwhile a quarrel has arisen downstairs and a lamp is thrown which sets fire to the house. The men go upstairs to get the girl, and learn of the lawyer being there, too. They figure they can make away with both and the fire will blot out the crime, but the lawyer blocks the door. The fire, gaining headway, the gangsters give up and run for their lives. They stand outside the window and take pot shots at the two each time they come near the window, so the lawyer breaks down the door and drags the girl through the fire and smoke to the side porch where the men will not see them. Using the ladder, he gets the girl down and away. The men think the two have not been able to escape and when the building is falling they leave. The nephew makes application for the estate. He is told to come back and when he does he is surprised to find the lawyer, the girl and policemen awaiting him. The happy pair conclude to marry at once and are happy at last.

THE CLUBMAN (May 22).—Billy Reeves once again demonstrates his surpassing skill in the acrobatic comedy act made famous by him in this country and England. He is the ridiculously inebriated man about town who is summoned home by his wife during the course of a wild night at his club. He zig-zags homeward. Billy's tour of inspection of his rooms leaves in its wake the desolation of an earthquake. He is hard on the furniture and bric-a-brac. He wanders to the music room and becomes entangled in a tiger-skin rug. The thing coils itself around his leg and Billy's foot somehow gets between its jaws. His wife, awakened by her husband's frenzied howls, hurries downstairs to encounter Billy deliriously endeavoring to escape the beast. He finally succeeds and so frightens his wife with it that she scampers upstairs. After battling with a pillow and becoming almost stifled by the clouds of feathers which rise from the scene, Billy silences the innocent chirp of the canary by eating him and, exhausted, falls into deep sleep.

BIOGRAPH.

A MUCH NEEDED LESSON (May 10).—The young wife dislikes the demonstrative affection of her adoring husband, and continually snubs him. But when he pays gallant attentions to her friend she is furiously jealous. Her conduct becomes so unbearable that her father proposes a plot which shall teach her a much needed lesson. Her husband and friend protest, but finally agree to flirt with each other. This they do so convincingly that the wife orders her friend from the house and upbraids her husband. Her father then steps forward and discloses the plot, whereupon she is so mortified that she promises meekly to endure her husband's loverlike attentions as a good wife should.

THE CONFESSION (Special—Two parts—May 11).—Paul Howard was four years old when his mother gave her life for her second child. The tragic circumstance embittered John Howard, father of the two children; it made him hate the daughter whose coming robbed him of his wife. Fleeing from his grief, he went abroad, accompanied by little Paul. The girl remained in care of Dr. Morton and his wife, a trained nurse, who attended Mrs. Howard in her last illness. Howard arranged that the Mortons should rear the child in ignorance of her parentage, and regularly sent remittances for her maintenance. Mrs. Morton, in course of time, gave birth to a daughter.

Three years later John Howard's unfortunate daughter died, and the Mortons, fearing lest the remittances stop, concealed the fact from Howard and the world. Paul grew up in Paris, where his father's indulgence permitted him to cultivate ill acquaintances and worse habits. He really had a talent for art, but spent little time in his studio. At length John Howard became aware that his son was going to the dogs. At the suggestion of his friend, Scott, he sent the boy back to America. Scott knew the Mortons and, falling in with them, introduced Paul Howard. Bessie Morton took a keen interest in the young artist, and under her influence Paul was soon weaned away from his bad habits. Love followed, naturally, and one day they were quietly married. Returning home, Paul was overjoyed to meet his father, who, tired of his loneliness, came to see his boy. Scott's good reports of Paul and the news of his love affair pleased Howard. But when he entered Bessie's studio and saw on the easel a portrait of his dead wife, a dreadful misgiving seized him. "That is my mother," said Bessie proudly; "I painted it from this miniature of her." "Oh, God!" said John Howard. When he could trust himself to speak, he told Paul and Bessie that they were brother and sister. They slunk away like wounded animals. Mrs. Morton came in and saw Howard. When he told her what had passed, she went swiftly to Bessie's room, and was just in time to snatch from the girl's lips a fatal dose of poison. Then followed her own tremendous struggle with herself, when she fought the fears of what John Howard might do to those who cheated him. In the end it was her mother love which forced her to confess. John Howard raised her from where she cowered at his feet. "There is nothing to forgive," he said. "Look—you have made these two young ones happy!"

THE SHERIFF'S STORY (May 13).—While fishing for trout in a mountain stream, a young man from the city meets a queer old hermit and, becoming interested in the man's strange actions, follows him to his cabin. The hermit threatens him with a rifle, and the young man decamps. Later he meets the sheriff of the county and from him learns the hermit's tragic story. In youth, the man had lived with his pretty young wife in the cabin he now occupies. Indians had attacked them, and they had made a desperate stand within the cabin until their ammunition ran out. Then the wife implored her husband not to let her fall into the hands of the savages, and with his last shot he killed her. Cowboys, drawn by the shooting, arrived and dispersed the Indians. When they entered the cabin the girl was dying. The realization that he had shot too soon deprived the man of his reason, and ever since that day he has been a morose hermit, fondling a dummy dressed in her clothes. "Heartrending?" the sheriff concludes. "If you'd 'a' stood with us by her grave—"

THE LITTLE SCAPEGOAT (May 14).—Alone and in poverty after her father died, she came to live with her rich relatives and was coldly treated. They made a servant of her, which had one good result—the old butler could risk being kind to her. A wealthy young man and a foreign fortune-hunter were suitors for her rich cousin's hand. The count proposed an elopement, and after a petulant tiff with Jack the girl consented to meet him under the trees on the night of the bridge party. The little scapegoat saw the scene between them, urged her cousin not to be foolish, and took her place—just in time to avert the wrath of her mother, whom Jack brought to the spot. The ruse worked temporarily, but Jack's suspicions lingered, and the butler, stepping in when he heard the little scapegoat blamed, told what he, too had seen. Both he and the scapegoat were discharged, and promptly re-engaged by Jack. At his home they found a far different atmosphere, and in time Jack took courage to ask the big question of the girl he had come to love under such odd circumstances.

THE ORIENTAL RUBY (May 15).—On the night when Charles and Lola plighted their troth, their fathers parted in anger. The cause of the quarrel was a gem which one of the curio collectors declared to be a rare Oriental ruby, while the other maintained that it was nothing but colored glass. Charles pacified his father and persuaded him to return to his friend's house to ask his forgiveness. Entering the room, the old man found his crony murdered. The terrible thought that he might be accused of the mysterious crime caused him to steal away without giving the alarm. In the morning the dead man's Hindoo servant aroused the household, and on the strength of the quarrel Charles' father was held for trial. Lola, who had seen him leave the house, sent Charles word that she would never testify against his father. He went from the court room to her home, and found her struggling with the Hindoo. Grappling with the man, he was being overcome when detectives, summoned by Lola, arrived. The Hindoo, a notorious crook in disguise, confessed having slain his master to gain possession of the ruby. After committing the crime he was unable to find the gem. Lola, using a candle to seal her letter, had revealed the hiding place.

THE CANCELED MORTGAGE (May 17).—Two road agents hold up the stage coach and rob the passengers. In making their getaway, one of the road agents is shot by the stage driver. They stop at a lonely cabin, where a miner's widow lives with her little daughter, and ask for aid. The widow dresses the wound and gives the men supper. They learn that she is about to be dispossessed by a harsh landlord, and, in gratitude for her kindness, give her enough of their loot to pay off the mortgage. As they ride away, a humorous idea strikes them, and they proceed to put it into execution. They watch the old skinflint approach the cabin and emerge with his money. In a lonely bend of the trail they hold him up and take the money away from him. Running for his life, he falls in with the posse which is seeking the stage robbers, and guides the riders to the scene of the holdup, where they pick up the trail of the kindly road agents and soon capture them.

FELIX HOLT (Special—Two Parts—May 18).—Bycliffe, a prisoner of war in France, and rightful owner of the Transome estate in England, is visited by his wife and baby, Esther. He takes the place of another prisoner, who is about to be exchanged, and returns to England. His fellow prisoner, George Scaddon, is a forger and because he dares not set foot on English soil, permits the other to take his place. Arriving at home, Bycliffe interviews Matthew Jermyn, manager of the Transome estate, and claims his right. Jermyn, seeing an opportunity to gain his own ends, denounces Bycliffe as the forger, Scaddon, and throws him into jail, where he dies. Mrs. Bycliffe, poor and alone, is found wandering in the forest by Rev. Rufus Lyon, who succors her and, after her death, adopts baby Esther. The girl grows to womanhood in ignorance of her parentage. Felix Holt, a young watchmaker who holds radical political opinions, falls in love with her. His condemnation of her favorite author, Byron, estranges them. Harold Transome, son of Mrs. Transome, present holder of the estate, stands for parliament and employs Jermyn as his agent for electioneering purposes. Felix Holt condemns Jermyn's methods, and accident serves him with an apt illustration of his own theories. A starving waif collapses on the threshold of the hall, and Holt cries to the populace: "This man Jermyn says he can save England, but turns a deaf ear to a starving waif!" He takes the boy home with him and, by his tenderness, arouses Esther's love. After a stormy meeting at the vicarage, where Jermyn has called and openly sneered at Holt's theories, Felix finds the agent's pocketbook, and not wishing to do the man a favor, asks the vicar to return the wallet to Jermyn. Mr. Lyons opens the pocketbook and finds in it a locket containing a picture of Esther's mother. In returning the pocketbook to Jermyn, he tells him of the dying woman he found in the forest and implores the man not to let Esther know that she is not his daughter. Jermyn, thus informed of Esther's rightful claim to the Transome estate, uses the knowledge for his own ends. Harold Transome has been defeated in the political campaign and has accused Jermyn of robbing the estate. Jermyn now holds Esther as a club over Harold's head. Harold and Mrs. Transome go straight to the vicarage, inform Esther that she is the Bycliffe heiress, and take her home. She is wretched because Felix Holt has been arrested, at Jermyn's instance, for killing a bailiff in an electioneering riot. On the day of Holt's trial Esther goes to the courtroom and is overjoyed when her lover is acquitted. Jermyn, thwarted and furious, denounces Felix, whereupon Esther claims the attention of the crowd, and, in a dramatic speech, renounces all claim to the Transome estate. Rising to a climax, she denounces Jermyn as the man responsible for riot and death. The crowd, convinced of Jermyn's perfidy, pursue him and take summary vengeance, after he begs Harold Transome's protection in vain. Esther and Felix Holt are happily married.

FOR HER HAPPINESS (May 20). To support her invalid husband and give him the care he needs, the young wife seeks employment. Applying for work in an office, she meets with no success and is turning disconsolately away when a friend of the manager, standing near, asks permission to speak. He is an artist, in search of a certain type of female beauty. She is just the type he is looking for, and he offers her employment as a model. Her husband deplores the necessity, but she reassures him that the artist treats her with the utmost consideration. The picture completed, she again faces the problem of employment; for the artist has professed love for her and made further sittings impossible. Her husband, realizing that he is a handicap, secretly spills his medicine, so that he may die and leave her free to marry the artist.

BOBBY'S BARGAIN (May 21).—He had so many toys that they bored him. What he wanted was a baby brother or sister. Chance threw in his way a tremendous bargain—a perfectly good baby for exchange, cheap. It came about in this way: The pretty lady at the kindergarten asked the children to bring toys for distribution among the kiddies who had no playthings. One little girl had nothing to offer but her baby sister. When teacher refused the gift she went home tearfully. Bobby met her on the way and bartered his duck and rabbit for her baby. With the aid of his grandfather he put baby to bed and got milk from the kitchen to feed her. The baby's mother, who worked out by the day for Bobby's mother and other housekeepers, would not abide by the bargain and claimed her child. They found baby, Bobby and grandpa asleep, and told Bobby that the deal was off. Nothing daunted, he claimed the little girl for playmate, dressed her in one of his clean white rompers, and came down to dinner, where they all had a glorious time, including baby and her mother.

THE FIRST PIANO IN CAMP (May 22).—Rumor reaches the camp that the stage driver is bringing a box containing the bodies of three men who have been killed down the gulch. But when the box is opened in the saloon its contents prove to be an old square piano. The instrument is set up and a reward offered for a piano player. One of the loungers, named Driscoll, remarks that his brother Bill, whom he has not seen in years, is a great player. Presently a tattered old man enters and, sitting down before the piano, draws from it music which kindles the memories of all present, including the bartender. The saloonkeeper invites the aged man to rest on the sofa behind the bar, and, on learning that his name is Driscoll, runs to call his friend of that name. Returning, they find the till looted, and a pack of cards mockingly displayed in place of the money. Realizing that this is the work of a gambler well known to them, they hasten to his cabin and find there the disguise which Driscoll's mention of his long-lost brother had suggested to him as a clever means of committing the robbery. The gambler, by this time, is far from the camp, hurrying along obscure trails toward a new scene of activity, suited to a man of his abilities.

THEIR OWN WAYS (May 18).—Elizabeth has just written a letter to her mother to the effect that she and her husband intend to motor upstate Friday and spend the week-end with the old folks in the country. Accordingly, they arrive. At supper, Elizabeth remarks that her mother looks tired out, and then helps with the housework. The old couple are persuaded to go back to the city with the young people and prepare to make the trip.

In the city, Mr. Gray has the first chance to dress in evening clothes. The starched bosom of his dress shirt sticks out and Mother Gray, after some difficulty, pushes it into place. When Mrs. Gray appears in a low necked dinner gown, her husband will not have it and ties a scarf about her neck to make up for the missing section. At dinner, Mrs. Gray sends out for a shawl, and her husband places it about the shoulders of one of the guests whose gown is of extremely low cut. When the couple wishes to go for a walk, the limousine is always waiting. City idleness makes the Grays extremely uncomfortable and they decide to return home surreptitiously. While the young couple are out at the matinee, they leave the house and are driven to the railroad station in a grocery wagon.

When their absence is noted by Elizabeth and her husband, the conclusion is arrived at that the couple has returned home. They hastily motor to the country and arrive just at 10.30 o'clock as the old couple are about to drink a toast together in celebration of their wedding anniversary. The party is augmented by the two young people and the quartette drink the toast.

CHINKS AND CHICKENS (May 19).—It is about midnight. A gathering of sports is watching a cock fight. After two "rounds" the small game cock whips the big "rooster" and the party breaks up. Waddy and Arty, farm hands, are in the neighborhood of the chicken house early the next morning when Nora calls them to mail a letter. In the meantime, Mr. Rogers, owner of the place, observes the many chinks in the chicken house and leaves a notice for the men, which he tacks up on the house. It reads: "Close up all the chinks in the chicken coop."

After delving into various lexicons and soliciting opinions from the authorities on the place, Waddy and Arty decide that "close up" means to "shut up" and "chinks" means "Chinamen." Accordingly, they corrall a Celestial and lock him up in the chicken house. The unfortunate Chinaman has a battle with the big rooster with the honors about even. Then the farmhands go in search of another chink. They find him and after a chase succeed in getting him into the chicken house. As they push him in, however, Chinaman No. 1 slips out and there is another chase. The native of the Orient proves to be quite an acrobat, and even a tight wire walker.

He is captured in front of the house he has entered by way of an upper window, after walking along a telegraph wire at a dizzy height. After knocking him unconscious in a very indifferent manner, the farm hands carry him back to the chicken coop. While they are busy making the last catch, Nora has hied herself to the henhouse for eggs. The entrapped Chinaman uses her for a target when she opens the door and "spills" a few eggs all over her. Mr. Rogers appears on the scene as the farm hands reappear with the unfortunate Chinaman. Explanations are in order, and when the farm hands learn their stupidity, there is a very ludicrous scene. The Chinamen, having found money dropped by Mr. Rogers, are rewarded by him as the farm hands gaze with open mouths.

THE WRONG WOMAN (Special—Three Parts—May 21). Arthur Dane, whose father owns a sanitarium in India, has just returned to India from London. He manifests his love for Marion Orn, a nurse, who believes in him until she catches him in a compromising position with Ivy Fairfax, daughter of a patient in the sanitarium. Dane has learned that Ivy is the niece of Sir Marcus Richardson of England and is to be his sole heir. Despite the fact that Dane assures Marion that he is only trifling with Ivy, he marries the latter. Subsequently, Dane and his bride embark for London with Marion, whom Ivy has invited to go with them. There is a terrible storm at sea, during which the ship catches fire. The three get on to a raft and are washed ashore on Desert Island. In an exhausted condition, Ivy lies down on the beach and Dane, seizing the chance, removes the locket containing a photograph of Ivy's mother, since deceased, and Sir Marcus, from her neck. He tells Marion that Ivy is dead and proposes that she become Ivy Fairfax. A ship is hailed and they board it, leaving Ivy on the island.

At Sir Marcus' home Marion is received with honor. She immediately endears herself to Sir Marcus. Allen Mostyn, a paleontologist, acquainted with Sir Marcus, becomes enamored of Marion and his affection is reciprocated. While on a cruise, Mostyn lands on Desert Island and finds Ivy, almost insane from hunger and loneliness. He reassures her, and she consents to return to England with him. She regains her memory and when presented by Mostyn at Sir Marcus' home, demands that she be recognized as the real Ivy Fairfax. She is not taken seriously, and Marion, secretly pitying her as she really believed she was dead, will not give her any encouragement. Dane, having been told of Ivy's appearance, plans to rob the Richardson home and make a getaway. He is shot dead by Mostyn while prowling through the house. With Dane out of the way, Marion makes a full confession. Mostyn realizes her sacrifice and forgives her, while Ivy is firmly installed in the Richardson home.

A HAZARDOUS COURTSHIP (May 22).Thaddeus and Timothy are ill at ease in the company of ladies and their discomfort is evidenced even during the brief stay of the laundress, who brings the laundry weekly to the bachelor apartment. Thaddeus begins to change his attitude toward women when he notes the domestic tranquillity in the family of his nephew, and is almost envious as he sees the young couple shower each other with kisses. Thaddeus gets a letter of introduction to a prominent member of the Eureka Athletic Club for Women and after Timothy has tried in vain to deter him, goes to the club and presents the card.

Having apparently read some highly imaginative author's love philosophy, Thaddeus decides that music is the avenue to a woman's heart and buys five copies of a love ballad that would estrange any loving and devoted wife from her husband. At the club, he hands a copy to the first he meets. She sings to an accompaniment by a tramp cat on a nearby fence. Thaddeus next presents a copy to another statuesque woman athlete. She, too, bursts into song, and soon a dog sets up a wail closely resembling that of a professional mourner. Still another gets a copy and then Thad. forces his attentions upon the weight thrower of the club, a woman, freakish in appearance. She consents to chant his love song, having strength enough left for that.

Thaddeus then decides to get the heavyweight of the club. He follows her down the road, where she has gone to run off some of her superfluous flesh. She continues to run, reaching for the music and whatever else he has to offer. She goes on running and reading, with Thaddeus at her side, proposing vigorously. Finally she turns around without stopping and poor Thad is exhausted. At the club the five women decide to send for Thad and exercise on him. Upon the receipt of a letter from one of them, asking him to call at the club, he goes and is not there more than a couple of minutes when his clothing is in tatters and he is pretty well beaten up. He confides in Timothy that he has had enough love making, and his nephew agrees with him.

BY THE SEA (April 29—Charles Chaplin Picture).—Charles Chaplin, with his big feet performing their usual mirth-provoking perambulations, wanders down to the sea shore. There is some wind blowing, so Chaplin anchors his hat to his head with a cable. He meets a pedestrian whose hat is similarly attached. The two bump, their hats fly off and they scramble for them. When the hats finally are recovered, each has the wrong one. This causes considerable embarrassment when the two cables go taut as the two men separate. Anger soon takes the place of embarrassment when the cables become hopelessly entangled, and they battle all over the beach. After they have fought themselves weary, they shake hands and decide to have a drink. They get ice cream cones and each insists the other have the honor of paying for them. This is unsatisfactory to the drug clerk and another row starts. They smear each other with ice cream and incidentally bespatter a six-foot dandy, which precipitates still more trouble. While the battle is still in progress Chaplin leaves his new-found pal in the lurch and slips off to flirt with the sweetheart of the dandy. His perfidy is discovered, however, and the result would stir the risibilities of the most forlorn gloom.

MANNERS AND THE MAN (May 17).—A club discussion results in a wager between Jack Forsyth and Kent Harding that Harding can pose as a butler in a rich man's home without fear of detection. Kent, to win the wager, takes service in the home of Mr. Westevelt, who has advertised for a butler. Clare Westevelt, the daughter of the house, has seen Kent in college. She recognizes him and, having learned of the wager from Jack Forsyth, determines to become a maid in her own home. This is possible because of the absence of her father from home. Kent falls in love with the new maid and affairs are progressing finely when the old gentleman returns. He sees his daughter in maid's costume and demands an explanation. He is not satisfied and Clare leaves the room crying. Meeting Kent, she tells him that her employer has scolded her without reason. Kent, angered, goes in and reprimands Mr. Westevelt. Then he asks Clare to marry him. She consents and they elope under Mr. Westevelt's nose. He tells her he is not a butler and she confesses. Kent loses the wager but wins a bride.

A LESSON IN ROMANCE (Special—Three parts May 18).—Richard Walton, a wealthy society man, disgusted with the schemes of every marriageable woman to get him into their net because of his wealth and social standing, flees from the city. He goes to the home of his friend, Sidney Wright, who has a beautiful sister, Emily. She, however, is romantic and has no use for social lions. She leaves a note for her mother saying she prefers gypsies to society men and goes to her aunt. When Walton discovers she is running away from him, he thinks she must be the girl for him and pursues. He kidnaps her and takes her to a gypsy camp, where he poses as the chief of the gypsies. After her first anger she falls in with the spirit of adventure and, dressing in gypsy costume, tells fortunes.

Finally she tires of it and the climax comes when two women accuse her of stealing a watch. Walton knocks the sheriff down, confiscates an auto and takes the girl home. She has learned to love him, but does not want to marry a gypsy after all. Great is Emily's surprise on entering the reception room that evening to find her gypsy in conventional clothes. She finally becomes his wife.

SWEEDIE'S HERO (May 20).—Sweedie gets a job as mop artist in a hotel. She starts out from home encumbered with baggage and a pet dog of uncertain ancestry. Arrived at the hotel, she is given two pails and a mop and she starts to work. The first thing she does is to mistake the train of a woman's gown for a mop and then she overturns a dining table when she is pushed into the dining room by an irate clerk. The bellhop in charge of the elevator will not let her ride, so she walks up ten flights of stairs and falls down the whole ten again. She goes out on a ledge on the steenth floor of the hotel to wash windows. She loses her balance and almost falls. The bellhop appears and pulls her back to safety and she falls on his neck calling him "My Hero."

OTHERWISE BILLY HARRISON (Special—Two parts May 22). The newsboy sells a paper to his favorite customer, a little girl who lives in a big brick mansion. She glances over the paper and, he looking over her shoulder, sees that the government has offered a big reward for the apprehension of a ring of dope merchants. He day dreams. He is Bill Harrison, a government detective, sent out to catch a ring of crooks that are selling drugs. The girl is a reporter on a big metropolitan newspaper. The city editor sends her out to get evidence against the same band. She is captured by the crooks in a lonely house. But who should be lying on a bench, pretending to be asleep, but Bill Harrison himself. He rescues her with the aid of Ayura, his faithful Japanese valet. Later he is taken prisoner by the band and this time the girl turns the tables by rescuing him. Finally both the girl and he catch them red-handed after a long chase. Bill kisses the girl and wakes to find he is really kissing the little lady who buys his papers. She runs away and he goes along on his route.

THE BOX CAR TRAP (Episode No. 25 of the "Hazards of Helen"—May 1).—Shortly after Charlie secures a position for Jim in the power house, an epidemic of fitting thefts breaks out. Later, Charlie discovers that his chum is the culprit. Jim is placed under arrest but makes his escape by knocking his captor down and hiding in a box car. It happens that the box car is to be used to test out a newly invented brake. Jim is aware of this and maliciously determines to ruin this test. Shortly afterwards, the car is sent down hill. Inside the car, Jim removes the flooring and ruins the brake apparatus. The box car runs wild. Too late, Jim learns that he is caught in his own trap. Unable to get out of the car, a fearful fate awaits him. Meanwhile, Helen is notified of the runaway and ordered to side track it, if possible.

The terrific speed at which the car travels causes a hot box. Before Helen can side-track the runaway it makes Elbow curve and shoots off the track, overturning as it topples down the embankment. By the time Helen reaches the spot, the box car is afire. Screams of agony reach her ears. The girl telegrapher learns that Jim is trapped inside the burning car. Smashing a hole through the side, she braves the flames and crawls into the car. Jim, frightfully burned, drops unconscious just as she reaches him. Exerting all her strength, Helen drags him to safety. By this time the railroad officials arrive. But Helen's heroism goes for naught. Fatally injured, Jim dies in her arms.

IT'S GOOD BUSINESS

to make the right impression at the Box Office

To represent your theater properly the Box Office must look the part. You must make the right impression first at the Box Office—no pulling or checking of tickets—it's out-of-date and too slow.

Delays displease patrons and errors displease you—eliminate both.

The AUTOMATIC will work twelve hours a day without a moment's delay or a single error. From early morning till late at night it clicks absolutely the right count and records exactly the right amount of cash. You can consult these records at any time and obtain itemized report.

If there could be any more efficient method to manage Box Office business we would like to know about it.

If, on the other hand, you have any doubts let us put you right. We have thousands of unsolicited testimonials from every section of the country—may we show you some.

the latest four-reel Reliance Master-Picture

You remember the story—the secret marriage of Bertie Errol, the young English officer, who, in order to save the property he is to inherit from his uncle, establishes his wife on the estate of his dear friend, Lord Strathmore—

How Lord Strathmore quarrels with Bertie over a woman with a shady reputation,—the resulting duel and the death of Bertie.

And how the shock of Bertie's death kills his wife and leaves his child to be taken care of by Lord Strathmore.

As advertised in the

You remember this beautiful daughter of Bertie Errol, the ward of Lord Strathmore, falling in love with him and finally marrying him—

When you read Ouida's book you felt the remorse, the sorrow and suffering of Lord Strathmore—the man who murdered his friend, the father of the girl he marries.

And yet how everything turns out happily in the end—

You never forgot the story because it was so intensely human—

And now your patrons can see it in a great Master-Picture—played by such well-known actors as Charles Clary, Elmer Clifton, Francelia Billington, Irene Hunt and others.

AN INNOCENT SINNER ("Broadway Favorites" Feature-Special—Three Parts—May 3).—Dr. Jacobs, an eccentric English physician, falls in love with Hinda, an orphan, and employs her. Tom Bridges also falls in love with the girl. Hinda, however, is attracted by Tom's younger brother, John. She is unaware of the fact that John is engaged to marry Peggy. Tom, learning that his brother is trifling with Hinda's affections, compels the boy to promise to marry her. Dr. Jacobs overhears all that passes between the two and is filled with jealous rage. The physician possesses an hypnotic influence over Hinda. While Tom and John go for the marriage license, Dr. Jacobs and Hinda visit Mrs. Bridges, the boys' aunt.

Later, while the doctor and the orphan are on their way home, a thunder storm arises. The two take refuge in the woods. Tom and John, on their way home from the town hall, are also caught in the rain. The elder brother dashes for a nearby farm house, while his brother elects to take refuge in the forest. A flash of lightning reveals John to Dr. Jacobs. Insane with hate, the doctor hypnotizes Hinda and has her slay the man who had blasted her life. Laughing Ann, the village disgrace, witnesses the crime.

The murder is discovered the following morning. Laughing Ann's story brings about Hinda's arrest and trial. Placed upon the stand, Hinda convinces the jurors of her innocence and is acquitted. Jacobs asks the girl to be his wife, but, convinced that he is in some way to blame for the dreadful experience she has undergone, Hinda spurns him. Tom presses his suit and eventually makes her his wife. Overcome by a desire for revenge, Dr. Jacobs informs Tom that Hinda was guilty of John's death. The scoundrel hypnotizes the girl and while under this influence, Hinda goes over the details of the crime.

Horrified, Tom attacks Jacobs and administers so severe a beating, that the physician becomes paralyzed. Convinced that Hinda had murdered John, Tom determines to divorce her. His wife is ignorant of the confessions she has made while under Jacobs' influence. Bewildered by Tom's behavior, she begs him to reconsider his decision. In the meantime, Dr. Jacobs, now a hopeless cripple, finds that death is near. The man is brought to the realization of the misery he has caused. Filled with remorse, he determines to clear Hinda and take the blame upon himself. The doctor is carried to the Bridges' home where Tom and Hinda are just about to sign the separation papers. Then comes the confession which reconciles the couple. A moment later, Jacobs dies.

"HAM'S" EASY EATS—(May 4).—On the verge of starvation, Ham and Bud hold up a grocery boy and take his basket from him. Finding nothing but potatoes, the adventurers heave them at their victim. The missles, missing the boy, hit a policeman. Terrified, Ham and Bud flee. To get food, Ham tries the famous old "starving beggar" trick. A crowd that sees him grab a piece of bread from the sidewalk, gives Ham a hatful of money. Bud, however, steals the collection and disappears. Taking pity upon poor Ham, Mrs. Manning and her daughter Nellie place him in their auto and take him to their home.

In the meantime, Bud gets into a crap game and loses all his money. Later, he is arrested by a policeman and carted to jail. While Bud languishes in the cell, Ham is being royally entertained. Ham makes a big hit with Nellie. Ham endeavors to sing for his kind friends, but his barber-shop chords prove too much for them. They invite him out for an auto ride. For awhile everything is lovely. Then the butcher boy and the policeman assaulted by the adventurer, see him in the machine. Giving chase, they overtake the Manning auto and drag Ham out. Poor Ham's castles in the air come crashing to the ground. Turning coldly from him, the Mannings drive on. Ham is taken to the police station and thrown into a cell. To his intense delight, he finds that Bud is his cell-mate. Seizing hold of his diminutive chum, Ham whales away at him for dear life.

THE CLAIRVOYANT SWINDLERS (Episode No. 15 of The Girl Detective Series—May 5).—A shrewd man in ordinary business affairs, Brandon, through his interest in the occult, falls an easy victim to a gang of clairvoyant swindlers headed by Rilando. The latter gives Brandon advice "from the other side," in which the financier is ordered to invest in stocks sold by Kelly. This man, also a member of the gang, had been discharged from the police force because of crookedness.

Unable to convince Brandon that he is being swindled, his daughter Ray appeals to Bertha, the girl detective, for help. Accompanied by Talcott, her assistant, Bertha attends one of Rilando's seances. She speedily discovers the man to be a fakir. Later, a further investigation reveals secret telephones through which the "clairvoyant" receives the information from his assistants which enables him to mystify his dupes.

Bertha enters the house by the rear door and cuts the wires of the secret telephones. As the result, the seance breaks up in confusion. Rilando attempts to escape through a secret passage, but is confronted by Bertha, armed with a revolver. The fakir's assistants are captured by Talcott and several policemen. The girl detective and her assistant hasten to Kelly's office. There they find Brandon in the act of handing a large sum of money to the crook. Kelly is placed under arrest after a hard fight.

THE ACTRESS AND THE CHEESE HOUND (May 7).—His desire to secure publicity for Lillian Bussel causes Blight, her press agent, to invent a yarn about her wonderful $10,000 cheese hound. Frightful Fogerty, a gentleman crook, swallows this story, hook, line and sinker. Forthwith he determines to steal the valuable dog. Hastening to the hotel in which Lillian is stopping, he tries hard to annex the hound. At the same time, the actress, siren-like, has bedazzled Fossil, a muchly-married man, into paying for her costume. While poor Fossil is admiring the costume, Fogerty steals the dog.

The gentleman crook hides the hound under his coat. Blight comes along just then. Frightful Fogerty's actions fill the press agent with suspicion and he follows the thief. In his desire to escape, Fogerty enters Mrs. Fossil's room. The woman, who has been lying in wait for her husband, knocks the intruder down before she discovers her mistake. Fogerty scrambles to his feet and departs from the room in haste. In the meantime, the fleas infesting the cheese hound desert the dog in favor of poor Fogerty. At the same time, Mrs. Fossil discovers the affair between her husband and the actress. She seizes the poor man and belabors him. Blight catches Fogerty, who is now making desperate efforts to get rid of the dog. Knocking the crook down, the press agent gives him the beating of his life.

THE WILD ENGINE (Episode No. 26 of the "Hazards of Helen"—May 8).—Because it is his belief that women are prone to lose their heads in cases of emergency, Division Superintendent Marks announces his intention of discharging the girl telegraphers. It is only because Chief Dispatcher Bond promises to be responsible for Helen, that the girl retains her position. Shortly after a train filled with excursionists leaves Balfour, an engine runs wild. Helen is informed of the danger which menaces the excursion train. Mounting a motor cycle which stands just outside the station, Helen speeds down the track to warn the excursion train of its danger.

Nearing the Larkin River Trestle, she fails to notice the posted warnings which tell of the repairs being effected upon the structure. The draw raises just as she reaches it. Before the brave girl can bring her motorcycle to a halt, it hurtles into the river. Undaunted, Helen swims to the opposite bank the moment she comes to the surface. The girl telegrapher flags the excursion train in the nick of time. Her message causes the engineer to run his train on a siding just a few minutes before the runaway dashes by. The engine of the excursion train is cut off and the runaway pursued. The latter is overhauled and brought to a halt. Helen thereupon climbs into the cab and drives it back to Balfour. Division Superintendent Marks learns of Helen's heroism and promptly discards the opinion which had almost brought about Helen's dismissal.

A SISTER'S BURDEN (Special—Two Parts—May 10).—Compelled to keep house for her father and her younger sister and brother, Martha is deprived of all the pleasures of youth. Ned, who loves her, begs her to elope with him. Martha yields, but while on the way to the minister, decides that her duty lies back home with her father. Heart-broken, Ned leaves for the city. Hemsley's sudden death throws upon the girl's shoulders the task of rearing the younger children. Fifteen years pass. Maud, the younger sister, marries and moves to the city. Arthur, the brother, is worthless and shiftless. He marries, Ida, the lazy good-for-nothing.

Martha, feeling it to be her duty, keeps house for this pair. Later, the elder sister receives an invitation to spend a few weeks in the city with Maud. Despite the protests of Arthur and Ida, Martha avails herself of this invitation. Shortly after arriving at her sister's home, Martha is introduced to an elderly bachelor who makes his home with Frank and Maude. To Martha's intense surprise, she finds herself confronting Ned. The old love reawakens and she promises to be his wife.

The following morning, Martha receives a letter from Ida imploring her to return. Again the elder sister lays aside her chance of happiness for what she deems to be her duty. When Ned returns that evening, he learns of what has occurred. Filled with indignation, he follows Martha to the country. There Ned finds that RUSHING THE LUNCH COUNTER (May 11).—Joe Bush, the waiter of the lunch counter at the Wayville station, quits his job in somewhat of a hurry. It is well for Bush that he can outrun his employer, Harvey. The latter most earnestly desires to shed Joe's blood. While Bush and Harvey are hotfooting it through town, Ham and Bud enter the lunchroom. Anxious to provide nice, comfortable homes for stray meals, the adventurers attack the lunch counter with a will. They barely finish satisfying their hunger when Harvey returns.

The latter offers Ham and Bud employment. The two accept. The first customer is a wild and woolly Westerner, who takes what he pleases and threatens them with a huge pistol when payment is demanded. Just as the man departs, Ham and Bud discover that the pistol is nothing more than a clever toy fan. Filled with righteous indignation, the adventurers arm themselves with sledge hammers. Solemnly marching after the Westerner, they knock him over the head and return to the lunch counter.

A train pulls into the station and the hungry passengers rush the counter. Although Ham and Bud hustle about, they accomplish nothing. Infuriated, the hunger-filled customers attack the waiters and a battle royal ensues. Harvey enters in time to get a smash in the face with a custard pie. Ham and Bud finally fight themselves clear. Fleeing for their lives, they make for the freight yard with the maddened men close behind. A handcar proves the adventurers' salvation. Climbing aboard, they speed out of town at a neck-breaking clip.

SCOTTY WEED'S ALIBI (Episode No. 12 of "The Girl Detective Series"—May 12).—The clever manner in which a number of robberies have been perpetrated leads Chief of Police Harding to venture the opinion that they are the work of Scotty Weed. Hearing of this, the crook impudently visits the chief and warns him of a libel suit, should he repeat the statement. Jean and her assistant meet the crook. The Girl Detective notices a peculiar mark on the man's hand. Shortly afterward the detectives are assigned to attend a masque ball given by Mrs. Winlow, a wealthy widow. Scotty Weed, having heard of Mrs. Winslow's diamond tiara, determines to attend the function.

After establishing an alibi, the crook makes his way to the Winslow mansion. His presence is discovered by Jean, but not until after the man has stolen the tiara. As the result of the theft, the guests are ordered to unmask. Confronted by Jean, Weed holds the guests at bay with a revolver and escapes. The detectives, knowing at which hotel he is stopping, follow. To their surprise, they are informed that Scotty Weed has not been out all evening. Nevertheless, Jean and Warrington enter the crook's room. They find him in bed. Weed protests against the intrusion, asserting that it was a double who impersonated him at the ball.

Warrington, however, finds the costume which the crook had worn. In spite of this, the man asserts his innocence. A search for the tiara proves futile. A mysterious short circuit plunges the room into darkness. An electrician traces the cause of the trouble to the electric chandelier. An investigation proves it to have been caused by the tiara, which is brought to light. Weed is arrested.

THE BLACK RING (Special—Three Part—May 14).—The daring thefts perpetrated by the "Knights of the Black Ring" terrorize society. The Darnell's chauffeur, a member of the band, cleverly steals the magnificent necklace which Jean receives from her father. The crook hides his loot in the machine. Before he can recover it, he is discharged for drunkenness. Jack Baldwin, a wealthy young man, takes the crook's place. The Darnells are unaware of Baldwin's identity. Jack finds a black ring and carelessly places it on one of his fingers. He and Jean fall in love with each other. Jack finds a rival in Count Barnoff, who succeeds in fascinating Jean. Awakened one night, Jack sees the discharged chauffeur coming out of the garage. He follows the man and is guided to the rendezvous of the Black Ring.

The young clubman peers through one of the windows and sees the man he had trailed pass Jean's necklace over to a masked man. Jack discovers the latter to be Count Barnoff. By a daring piece of work, the young man secures the necklace and makes his escape. Jean and her father, suspecting Jack of being the original thief, endeavor to have him arrested. To their surprise, the detectives recognize the man and laughingly refuse to take him in charge. Jack learns that Count Barnoff and his gang plan a wholesale jewel robbery to take place on the night of the Darnell ball. Detectives posted by the young man take note of the thefts. Disguised as a Hindu fakir, Jack tells the fortunes of the guests and thus unmasks Barnoff. The latter escapes, closely followed by his rival and the detectives. The black ring worn by Jack enables him to enter the "Knights'" den and he brings about the capture of the entire gang after a furious struggle. Jean later consents to marry her "chauffeur."

A FIEND AT THE THROTTLE (May 15).—Struck on the head by a falling beam, Hopkins, engineer of the passenger train, drops unconscious. The man is carried to a cottage near the track. The doctor warns the engineer's nurse that he must not be disturbed by noise. The following day Rita is notified that a freight bearing explosives is due to pass her station at 3.10. Twenty minutes before the freight is due, Hopkins is awakened by the shrill blast of a locomotive whistle. Insane, the man jumps out of bed, eludes his nurse and rushes toward the track.

Finding a substitute engineer in his place, Hopkins hurls the man from the engine and pulls the throttle wide open. The passenger train rushes down the track toward the oncoming freight. Rita learns what has occurred. Leaping aboard a handcar, she speeds down the track just ahead of the passenger. The latter gradually overtakes the handcar and crashes into it. At the same instant, Rita leaps for the cowcatcher and barely escapes death when it hurls the handcar aside. Climbing toward the cab, Rita gives battle to the fiend at the throttle until help arrives. Hopkins is overpowered. Knowing the freight train is to be due, Rita sidetracks the passenger just in time to avert a terrible wreck.

THE INGRATITUDE OF LIZ TAYLOR (Special—Two Parts—May 10).—Jimmie O'Meara, an orphan newsboy of ten, has an abiding love for Liz Taylor, a pretty girl of twenty, who is kind to him. Jimmie adopts a stray dog for a pal. Through Jimmie's ingenuity, Liz Taylor and Ben Bradshaw, a comely young man out of a job, find employment in the overall factory.

Doyle, the foreman, admires Liz and annoys her, but she dare not give up her job because of poverty and is afraid to tell her troubles to Ben, who works in the packing room. Jimmie hides in the office, and sees Doyle forcing his attentions upon Liz, and with a hammer he fells Doyle to the floor. From that time on Doyle makes Liz the prey of his hatred.

Liz contracts pneumonia and Jimmie is instrumental in helping to save her life. Doyle is fired and Ben is made foreman in the factory. His happiness is complete, for he can now marry Liz. Jimmie is also making matrimonial plans. Armed with a big bouquet, he visits Liz and proposes marriage to her. Liz and Ben, although convulsed with laughter, look upon the little fellow with love and compassion. Liz kisses his cheek and tells Jimmie that when she and Ben are married, he will live with them.

Stunned with his great love, and the thought of all that he has already done for Liz, Jimmie cannot see it nor understand. Slowly, he and his pet dog, Sport, go out. Down stairs on the doorstep he sits down to think it over. Still there is only one thought in his mind. With his arm thrown around faithful Sport, Jimmie exclaims: "Ain't that the ingratitude of a woman!"

THE YELLOW STREAK (May 11).—Ed Merritt is a profligate son and his father tells the mother that the scapegrace must go west where he can make or break himself. Nancy is the toast of the far western town. In a dance hall Ed is introduced to Nancy by a cowpuncher. Nancy tries to turn him from the gaming table.

After a year Ed receives a letter that his father is dead and his mother wants him to return and take his father's place in the world of affairs. He deserts Nancy, leaving a note, telling her it will be useless for her to try to find him. Ed assumes his dead father's place in the eastern firm.

In the meantime, a son is born to the deserted wife in the west. After seventeen years Ed Merritt is told to go west for his health. Nancy saves him from shooting his own son, and the father pleads for forgiveness, which is denied him.

THE LAST OF THE STILLS (May 12).—To avoid a collapse, Benton, a business man, is ordered to the wilds just as energetic revenue officers start uncovering moonshiners' stills.

Old Burt, a moonshiner, has a beautiful daughter, named Mary. Benton and Mary meet and are mutually attracted. The moonshiners believe Benton to be a revenue spy. He escapes, and long years pass. Mary attends school and again meets Benton. Benton's business is closed out and he renounces allegiance to the law. He returns to the wilds where old Burt takes Benton into partnership in the moonshining business.

Old Burt is shot, and a messenger is sent to the city to bring Mary home. Mary, in the meantime, has put Benton's business into order again. Mary returns home and recognizes Benton. The last of the stills is destroyed and Mary and Benton start a new life.

A MATRIMONIAL BOOMERANG (May 14).—Grace, a school teacher, supports a delicate mother, and accepts a position to teach the Coyoteville school. When she arrives she is driven to a boarding house by Tom Champion, the sheriff, who falls in love with her. Jack arrests Big Bill and other cowboys for gambling and they swear vengeance.

Seeking refuge from a band of half-drunken cowboys, Grace rushes into a notion store kept by Mrs. Leslie, a broken-down actress. Mrs. Leslie tells her that she is too beautiful to be safe and disguises her as a hideous old hag, so that she may walk home unmolested. Tom Champion is taken prisoner by the cowboys. Big Bill sees Grace, disguised as a hideous old hag, coming along the road. He has an inspiration and gives Tom the choice of being hung to a tree or married to the old hag. Tom, of course, chooses the latter. A marriage license is issued and the ceremony performed and later it is found that the old hag is in reality the pretty schoolma'am. The cowboys are beaten at their own game.

MINA.

ONCE IS ENOUGH (May 27).—As per custom, Harry gets himself into trouble. This time the scene is laid at his wedding feast. His bride flirts outrageously with the minister who is delighted with the outcome of his "lady-killing" proclivities. Not so with Harry, who shows his objection to the proceedings by ejecting the preacher via a nearby window. Harry's wife is angered at her spouse's conduct and retires to her room, locking the door. The situation has also embittered Harry, who, to drown his sorrow, resorts to the flowing bowl.

Three "second story" men visit Harry's home. At the point of a revolver they compel him to help carry away his own belongings! When the house is depleted Harry is permitted to return to his wife. His knocking at her door brings to her visions of burglars, and in alarm she cries at the top of her voice. The police come and arrest Harry, taking him to the police station. He explains that he is master of the house from which he is taken and that the real burglars have escaped. To substantiate his claim, a policeman is dispatched to bring Harry's wife. Attired in night dress and seated on the handle bars of a bicycle she is brought to the station. There she falls in the arms of her persecuted spouse, and while the officers look on in astonishment the newlyweds flee from the place of detention to the railway station, where they catch a moving train leaving the officers behind minus their coup.

NATURE'S TRIUMPH (April 25).—William Conway, a slave to drink, is at last told by his wife that he will have to leave her for their own good and her own health and happiness. She urges him to fight against the craving for liquor and to try to overcome it. If he succeeds, she promises to take him back and start life over. He accepts the terms and goes to the distant mountains to fight it out alone.

In the mountain resort lives Beth, the daughter of the hotel keeper, who has a childish love affair with Charles Vassar, a boy of the mountains. Upon the arrival of Conway, Beth appoints herself his guide. They become firm friends but Charles grows jealous, imagining it a love affair. After several weeks, the story of his trouble is told to Beth by Conway. She sympathizes with him and in a burst of affection throws her arms about his neck. Charles, seeing this, is driven wild with anger and charges Conway with having stolen his sweetheart, at the same time attempting to shoot him.

Conway grabs the gun and, pulling a telegram from his pocket, which he has received that morning from the city, shows it to the boy. The telegram reads: "Come home. Your wife and new-born son need you. Lovingly, your

ONE KIND OF A FRIEND (May 23).—Bill Wescott is a civil engineer in Her Majesty's service, far out on the desert. Cecil, his wife, is with him. There are several men in their camp, among them Danny Bowen, a friend of Wescott's. Bill Wescott becomes somewhat of a drunkard during his monotonous life on the desert. Danny notes the neglect of Bill's wife and constitutes himself as a friend of hers. Bill, on one of his drunken rages, becomes very jealous and strikes Cecil. She finally decides to leave him and, writing a note which she places where he will find it, sets out across the desert.

Bill finds the note and is scarcely sober enough to understand it but momentary contrition overcomes him. Danny happens in at this time and at once understands the situation. Dashing out and leaping on his horse, he leaves to search the desert for the distracted wife. Bill becomes more jealous and rages in his drunkenness as he is in no condition to pursue his wife and her supposed lover. Danny brings Cecil back and she goes to bed. That night Bill is tortured with a terrible nightmare. In the morning Cecil and Danny wake him and to their surprise he is a new man. Before they notice the change, he goes to pour himself out a glass of whisky. He suddenly stops and pushes the bottle away from him. This leads to a happy reconciliation between husband and wife.

AT THE BANQUET TABLE (Two parts—April 30).—Sheerl Jones, a young business man, gives a banquet to his bachelor friends. In the wee hours of morning many of the guests at the banquet wander from the table while some are bundled off in taxicabs. Sheerl falls asleep while a few of his guests still remain at table and dreams.

He meets in his dream Bill Coles, a young naval officer, who has returned home after a long voyage in the Pacific with the fleet. The young officer is so delighted to feel the streets of New York beneath his feet that he forgets wife and child at home and joins his friends in a celebration. The young officer and his friends journey from bar to bar, and to every cabaret. The officer thinks he sees his wife in every cabaret girl he meets and makes violent love to them all. His friends notice that he is somewhat inebriated and determine to take him home. They endeavor to obtain the officer's address from him. He mumbles something which they cannot understand. One of them, however, remembers the street in which the officer lived when he last visited him and, although he does not know the number of the house, orders the taxi driver to drive slowly along until they reach a familiar looking residence. The cabby finally draws up in front of two houses which are almost exactly alike in every respect. The friend cannot remember which house it is the young officer lives in but, not caring to awaken the neighbors, decides to put the young officer through a back window of one of the houses, in the hope that he will find himself in his own home on awakening in the morning.

Mrs. Jones is sitting up beside her baby's crib when she hears some one tampering with a window in the rear of her home. She quietly takes her revolver and fires twice at a heavy pair of curtains behind which she believes the burglar is concealed. The shots awaken Mrs. Coles, who lives next door. Mrs. Coles is the wife of Bill Coles, the young naval omcer. After her two shots, Mrs. Jones parts the curtains and sees what appears to her to be the form of a dead burglar on the floor. Believing she has murdered a man, she calls up her husband at the club and then runs across the lawn to Mrs. Cole's home and tells the latter of her experience. Mrs. Coles calls the police on the 'phone and then runs over to view the burglar's dead body. She is horrified when she discovers that it is her husband. She hysterically accuses Mrs. Jones of shooting her husband. Meanwhile, Jones leaves his club in a hurry. So confused is he that he fails to notice that he has grabbed some one else's overcoat in the excitement.

The police notice him running at top speed through the streets and decide to search him. Jones gives them his right name, but when they find a different name in the lining of the overcoat he is wearing they decide to lock him up. The police have just received word from Mrs. Coles of the mysterious burglary and decide to hold Jones for further examination. In the interim Mrs. Coles, while taking care of her husband's "body," is startled to hear her supposedly dead spouse snoring loudly behind the curtains. She again looks him over carefully and finds him unhurt but smelling strongly of cocktails. She pours cold water on him and Coles quickly revives. Jones, meanwhile, is given the third degree by the police and is having visions of the electric chair when suddenly he awakes. He finds himself sitting in his chair at the club with a smoking cigar still clutched in his fingers. The remnants of the banquet lie on all sides about him and as he shakes himself together he receives a 'phone message from patient wifey who is awaiting him at home. Relieved to find that his experiences all have been a dream, Jones bids good night to his guests and takes a cab for home and wife.

COURT-MARTIALED (Three Parts—May 21).—Jules, the scapegrace son of General Bleriat, overhears a conversation between his father and a messenger about some precious military secrets. At "The Stag," a roulette club, where the son spends the evenings, he again loses heavily. On his way home he is accosted by a masked stranger, who, having learned of the valuable papers at General Bleriat's house and desiring to possess them, volunteers to give Jules a handsome sum if he will obtain the papers. Fearing exposure by De Vorchien, to whom he owes a considerable sum and being reminded of this fact by the stranger, Jules agrees to the other's demands. The son, masked, is about to get the military secrets when his father awakens. There is a struggle in which the son is wounded on the arm with a knife. The son, later, escapes with the papers and exchanges them for the gold.

The general the next day makes a report of the assault, and declares that the person who attacked him wore a uniform and received a wound on the arm. Greatly worried, Jules goes to the home of his sweetheart, Marie, where he finds his rival, Jeffry Le Bland. He observes the ring on Marie's finger, and knows that he has lost. A diabolical scheme is evolved by Jules which will jeopardize his rival in the eyes of Marie, and he determines to put it into effect. He takes a knife from his pocket under the pretext of killing himself. When Jeffry goes to stop him, Jules stabs his rival in the arm.

At the barracks, Bleriat, who has learned of the enmity between his son and Jeffry, has the latter put into the military prison under suspicion. At the trial Jeffry swears innocence, and testifies that the wound was received in an encounter with Jules. But this assertion is refuted by the son, who, under a terrible nervous strain, leaves for home and confesses everything to his mother. She goes to the barracks and tells her husband, who frees Jeffry. The mother pleads with her husband to spare their son, even if his act involves a scheme whereby he will be enabled to get into another country never to return. The old general, to satisfy his wife, consents; but in reality he remains obdurate and resolves to adhere to the law. He forgives his son for his attack on the night the papers were stolen, but the disgrace of treason is constantly in his mind. At sundown the son is executed. The general, unable to witness the affair, is at home with his wife, who is happy in the thought that her husband has seen to it that blank cartridges were substituted in place of bullets and that their son has feigned death and escaped.

JOKER.

A HINDOO CREATION (April 19—This educational picture is on the same reel with "The Fatal Kiss," a story of which was published on page 454 of April 17 issue). This subject shows a Hindoo high-caste native buying logs of wood to cremate his wife. The wood is weighed on primitive scales. From the woodyard the logs are carried by bullock to the crematory. In the distance a train with English coaches dashes by.

Other scenes show the mourners along the street chanting their songs of mourning and glaring sullenly at the cameraman. One native sits atop the load of wood with an umbrella over him.

Non-Hindus are not permitted to enter the cemetery to witness the burning of the body if the mourners do not wish it. The body of the person to be burned is carried, heavily swathed in linens, on a pole borne by two mourners. As the body passes, spectators, probably as a survival of the custom in plague times, hold their noses and bow their heads.

OVER THE BOUNDING WAVES (April 26).—Schultz was all right as a love-maker until the husky steamer captain came along. Schultz's attempts thereafter proved flat failures. Duty called the captain, however, and he sails away, after a tearful leave-taking. Schultz sees the captain go away. With renewed hope he continues his proposals. The widow is waving her farewell to the ship. Schultz does not interest her. He determines to die, and is about to plunge into the bay when the widow, in the nick of time, saves him from the fatal dive. They struggle in each other's arms. The captain from his ship takes a last peep through his telescope. To his horror he sees the widow with her arms about Schultz. Mistaking the situation, he is filled with jealousy. "Turn the ship around and put back to port at full speed!" he yells to the steersman. Upon arriving back, he throws Schultz into the bay. He then urges the widow to accompany him on his voyage. She agrees. But the captain does not reckon on the persistent Schultz, who swims to the ship and stows himself away on board. Now sailing on the voyage is the owner of the steamship company, accompanied by his daughter, Dolly. After a week at sea the famished stowaway is obliged to come out from hiding. He is discovered. The captain takes advantage of his position, making poor Schultz earn his passage, scrubbing decks. Dolly tries to intercede for Schultz. Her effort is useless. Finally, to the horror of the steamer's owner, it is reported to him that, owing to the neglect of the captain, who spends his time spooning with the widow, the ship is sailing the sea in circles.

The owner makes a proposition to Schultz to appoint him captain of the ship. Urged by Dolly, and considering his opportunities to get back at his rival, Schultz accepts. And Schultz certainly does get back at the ex-captain. The widow, she turns again to Schultz, but she gets a mighty chilly reception, for Schultz has now won Dolly's heart.

A DAY AT THE SAN DIEGO FAIR (May 17).—The Shultz family arrives at the fair grounds. The two kids scheme a way of gaining entrance without paying. It works grandly and all enter. The beautiful panorama bewilders them, which results in the party running afoul of the little electric observation chairs. These chairs have been dubbed "chicken scoops." They make a decided hit with Shultz. He decides to save shoe leather, and hires one. But the pesky thing becomes unmanageable and tears through the grounds with all hanging on to it for dear life. Little Heinie falls off and before joining them again, has an experience with the Indians. Heinie finds the folks surrounded by hungry pigeons. He joins the family in feeding them. The tame birds eat from their hands and even from their mouths.

In an ice-cream parlor, Pa Shultz is attracted by a flirty little miss who invites him for a stroll through the "isthmus." Of course Pa goes. But Ma gets wind of his action later and dashes in search of him, leaving the kids to themselves. The kids take advantage and have great fun among the many concessions. Shultz is having a high old time with the flirty miss when wifey finally locates him. He escapes, however, running away to avoid her infuriated blows. His attempt to hide among the concessions only brings more disaster to him. At last, becoming desperate, he sees a balloon preparing to go up and makes a wild run for it. The kids witness Ma's distress and join her in rounding up their side-stepping Pa. Shultz reaches the balloon in the nick of time. He clutches the basket and is just soaring upward when the folks arrive. Chagrinned and horrified, they watch the balloon until it disappears in the clouds with Pa Shultz waving back in derision.

honest living. Dr. Shultz soon came to this conclusion. Although patients were scarce in Grizzly Gulch, women were still more scarce. It was for this reason that the men folks made much of Dr. Helen Hurtmore when she arrived and nailed out her shingle. Dr. Shultz soon noticed with interest, that competition had come to town. But he should worry. The very idea that she should expect to find business in such a healthy locality tickled him. But Grizzly Gulch suddenly becomes unhealthy; that is, apparently. The boys discover themselves afflicted with unknown ailments, invented as excuses to be served soothing syrups by the new lady doctor.

Dr. Shultz witnesses the extraordinary actions of the male populace, and determines that his business rival shall not corral all the business. Taking advantage of his physical qualities, Dr. Shultz disguises himself as a charming lady. He then announces himself as Dr. Gertie Cutup, successor to Dr. Shultz. His disguise completely fools the boys. He flirts outrageously and soon has them all abandoning the prudish Dr. Helen Hurtmore and flocking to his office for treatment. Business hums. The real lady doctor, however, inquires into the situation and is not long in exposing to the astounded boys. Their astonishment soon changes to resentment. They string Dr. Shultz up on a rafter then and there. But, before it is too late, the lady doctor's heart softens. She cuts down her rival. "Whats the use of opposition," they decide. So they join their hearts and their sign-boards.

LOVE AND SOUR NOTES (May 19).—Billie was playing a cornet and thought he was the only fellow making a noise. Oscar, his rival, however, was blowing a trombone in the near vicinity and the girl evidently preferred sonorous notes to light airy ones, as she picked Oscar and left Billie blowing flat notes. This made him sore and he attempted to throw Oscar into the creek. They both fell into a sand pile. Her ill feeling was not helped when Oscar got a job playing solos in the village meeting house which Billie had been trying to land for a month.

Billie took a lemon to the concert, however, and when Oscar commenced his solo, Billie sat in the front row and squeezed the sour fruit. This so puckered Oscar's tonsils that he couldn't blow a note. The concert was upset and Oscar chased Billie onto the roof. Billie thought he was going to escape in the bell, but he didn't know Oscar was going to ring it from below. Neither did Oscar realize the roof was going to collapse when he chased Billie out on it. Also the girl did not realize the roof was going to fall on her, nor did the congregation want to get hit with plaster. But they all did.

NESTOR.

WHEN CUPID CROSSED THE BAY (May 18).—The old man and his daugther are crossing the ferry from Oakland to San Francisco. The boys are on the same boat. They flirt with Billie, the "Peach," which arouses the old man's ire. Later, they meet in Golden Gate Park and one of the boys adroitly gets a note from Billie saying that she will meet them in five minutes, by the lake. She slips away while the first boy takes her place on the park bench. The old man, meanwhile, has been taking a snooze. When he wakes he discovers the trick that has been played on him. Pursuit follows, the irate father calling in a policeman to arrest the young men, but when the girl says that she will go to jail, too, the father forgives them and the story ends.

THEY WERE HEROES (May 21).—Mr. Smith and his wife each decide to invite a friend to spend his vacation with them. Mr. Smith's friend, a boyhood chum, comes on one train, while Mrs. Smith's friend comes on another, each from a different part of the country. Smith is slow getting ready and when they finally start out they have just a few minutes to make their respective depots. Smith hurries to the wrong depot and is pulled for speeding. He and his wife are taken to the police court.

Meanwhile, at one depot his friend arrives and, seeing no one to meet him, sets out for the house. At the other depot, Mrs. Smith's chum arrives and decides to make for the house. She arrives first and finds the house locked. She manages to make her way inside and goes up to a room where she is refreshing herself, when she hears a noise below. It is Eddie who has just arrived at Smith's house and found a window open. He is on a tour of investigation, thinking burglars are inside. He creeps upstairs, where he hears a noise and peeks in the keyhole. The girl sees no way to escape and is busily packing up her presents and valuables. Eddie locks the door and rushes down stairs, telephones the police that a burglar is robbing the house. She decides to slip out the window. Eddie sees two policemen passing and hails them, telling them he has captured a woman burglar and has her locked upstairs. Meanwhile, Mrs. Smith has gone to meet her friend and finds the train has been in some time. Fearing her friend is lost, she sets out for home. Smith, too, has tried to locate his friend, but has no success, and starts for home.

Things at the Smith's home have been moving swiftly. The cops have arrested the girl and are taking her to jail, when they meet the police she had 'phoned for. Then they take Eddie into custody, too. Mrs. Smith arrives home and finds the place in confusion, and the 'phone bell ringing. Her girl chum calls her up and tells her to come get her out of jail, which Mrs. Smith hastens to do. Smith comes home, finds the house open, rooms in disorder and the 'phone ringing. It is his friend, wanting him to come get him out of jail. Smith promises to come right down.

Mrs. Smith gets her chum out and they arrive home, the girl tells of her resourcefulness when confronted with a desperate masked burglar and how she saved the house. Smith gets his friend out and is astounded when he tells him how he saved the house from being plundered by a desperate woman Raffles, and how he captured her. They arrive home. Smith takes him in to introduce him to his wife. He comes face to face with his "burglar girl," who has been helping Mrs. Smith in the kitchen. Both try to escape and beg each other not to shoot. The story closes when Mr. Smith and his wife come in and make the two "heroes" acquainted and, as each of them has something on the other, there is a chance that they will be able to get along amicably in the future.

DIAMONDS OF FATE (May 22).—Doris Westley is an artist's model posing for Phil Valentine. Horace Grant, another artist, who occupies an adjoining studio, meets Doris and the pair soon become interested in each other. Francis Hargreave, millionaire man-about-town, uses his alleged love of art as a means for gratifying his evil passions. By loaning Valentine a considerable sum of money, he places the young artist in his power. Through him he meets several models. Among them is Doris Westley, whose beauty attracts him immediately. Valentine is, in reality, a gentleman burglar, his work as an artist in reality being a blind. On one of his night prowls he is observed by Hargreave coming from a house, which he has robbed. Thus he is doubly in the latter's power.

Horace Grant and Doris Westley give a party at the former's studio to announce their engagement. Hargreave and Valentine attend. The millionaire tells Valentine that unless he can place Doris into his hands, he will expose him. Valentine returns to his own studio intent upon making a get-away, but in going over his stolen plunder, he conceives a wild scheme to place Doris in the power of Hargreave. He takes a stolen necklace to her, asking her to wear it that night and saying that he had borrowed it from a friend, a pawnbroker, in order that she might wear it on this occasion. Getting Hargreave aside he informs him that Doris is wearing stolen jewels. Hargreave takes the hint; goes to Doris and tells her the necklace she is wearing was stolen and that unless she leaves with him immediately, he will cause her arrest as a thief.

Perplexed and bewildered, the girl leaves with Hargreave, hoping something may intervene to save her. Horace Grant, her sweetheart, misses her, leaves his studio and in the hall finds her handkerchief and some hair-pins, which she dropped on the floor and thus realizes that she has left the building. In the street he learns from a chauffeur that she has just gone away with a man answering Hargreave's description. He follows to the latter's apartment and breaks in upon the pair. Doris tells him what has happened. A policeman, finding the window smashed, enters and on the demand of Grant, places Hargreaves under arrest. They return to the studio and capture Valentine as he is making his get-away.

THE DANCER (Three Parts—May 18).—Gerald Temple falls heir to his uncle's fortune and is celebrating the event with a number of his friends, when he chances to meet the celebrated dancer, Stella. Both are infatuated with each other. He calls to see Stella many times. Gerald has as a rival, Leo Marcel, Stella's dancing partner. Upon one occasion, just as he is proposing marriage to the dancer, he receives word that his mother is dying and rushes to her bedside. It is his mother's dying wish that Gerald marry Myrtle, his foster sister, and although Gerald knows what it will cost him, he gives his consent, that his mother may die happy.

Gerald and Myrtle are married, but it is with difficulty that he is able to remain away from the woman he truly loves. Gerald finally returns to the dancer, casting all discretion to the winds. Unknown to Gerald, the dancer is a mother. She left her babe, which she was unable to care for herself, on the steps of a mansion in Wilshire, and it is now that all the longing of her mother heart returns in full force. She takes the matter up with a private detective agency, which bends all efforts toward locating her daughter. Meanwhile, the affair between Stella and Gerald has been progressing rapidly. Gerald finally decides to elope with her. Leo Marcel through jealousy, informs Gerald's wife, Myrtle, of the affair and the latter calls upon the dancer. A spirited scene follows, but the dancer is more determined than ever to have the man she loves.

Gerald calls later, after a long wait at the rendezvous he has appointed with Stella. By this time, however Stella has received a communication from the detective agency which tells her the whole truth. Myrtle Temple, Gerald's wife, is her own daughter. When Gerald asks the reason for her delay, Stella very coolly refuses to have anything more to do with him. He is driven nearly mad by this sudden disappointment and leaves the dancer's apartment in a rage. Gerald returns to his sorrowing little wife. Stella accepts a contract with a London Music Hall which she has been putting off for a long time on account of her affair with Gerald, not being able to tear herself away from him, but, before she goes, she cannot restrain one last look at her daughter, whose happiness she so nearly wrecked. As she gazes in at a window of the Temple mansion, she sees husband and wife in loving embrace. She leaves them without knowledge of either her presence or true identity.

BABY (Two Parts—May 17).—Breakfast is ready and the wife patiently awaits her husband, who is shaving. While shaving he thinks of his baby and leaves his shaving to play with the baby. His wife calls impatiently. The husband rushes back to his shaving and is so startled upon hearing the angry tones of his wife that he cuts himself. Finally he comes down. Everything is cold, but he doesn't care. He is in such a hurry to get to the office that he fails to kiss his wife goodby. At the office his manager is angered beyond words at Harry's non-appearance. Presently the door opens and Harry enters. The manager, Mr. Vale, scolds him. Harry tells him of his baby. Mr. Vale, in absolute disgust, goes to his desk. While absorbed in work, Harry takes his baby's photo, sees a vision of his wife and laughs aloud. Mr. Vale, annoyed, glares him back into his seat. The next day Harry's wife decides to cure him and telephones for a maid. When the husband returns at noon, he encounters many queer looking people entering his home. His wife selects one of the women. The husband rushes into the house and wife tells him she is the new maid for the baby. He orders her out, but wife commands her to stay. He disinfects the maid for fear of contamination. At work again, he sees wild visions of the maid spanking the baby. In the midst of his work he rushes home only to find her feeding the baby. So overjoyed is he that he was mistaken that he remains at home playing with the baby until Mr. Vale 'phones him and says if he doesn't come back immediately he can look for another job.

That afternoon his wife 'phones him to meet her at the theater. Upon his arrival at home, the baby again takes up his time, and he forgets completely about his wife, who, after waiting until 9 o'clock, goes home wild. She tells him that unless he leaves the baby alone entirely, she will leave him. He does not believe this, but when the maid informs him that his wife is packing, he rushes to her and promises. He lives up to his promise, never to enter the baby's room, but is so ill, that he cannot eat, or sleep. One night he goes to the baby's room. His wife awakens and follows him. Instead of the scolding, which he thinks he shall get, she whispers in his ear, and they joyously exit. Several days later, he is telephoned by the maid, who says, he is wanted home "by three." Thinking of course she means three o'clock, he explains to the clerks, that his wife is expecting a new baby, and cheerfully exits. Upon arriving at home and going to his wife's bed room, he finds instead of one new baby, three of them. He falls out of the window.

THE OLD DOCTOR (Two Parts—May 23).—Obscured by modesty and the ethics of the old school, old Doctor Jones, a master of his profession, pursues his practice in the village of Condon. A shunner of publicity and fame, his wife's work is wrapped up in promoting the welfare of his fellow-beings. Blackie, Jones' old horse, occupies a warm spot in the old man's heart.

Richard Carleton, a young doctor, just starting out on a career, arrives in Condon with a view to locating there. He bears a letter to John Emerson, Condon's most influential citizen. Carleton meets Enid, Emerson's daughter, and a mutual affection springs up between them. The advent of a brother doctor is welcome news to Jones, as the increasing practice has become too much for one of his years. Jones pledges his friendship and assistance to the young doctor, a snobbish type, believing himself above all, and curbs his good intentions. In order that the outside world may benefit by his genius, Jones is a contributor to the leading medical journals, but will not permit the use of his name, using the non de plume of "Old School," and Carleton little realizes that the man whom he regards as a "has been" is the author of articles which have startled the medical world, and which the lading specialists have learned to look to for solution of knotty medical problems.

Emerson takes a liking to Carleton and establishes him in an elaborate office. Slowly the remunerative patients, impressed by Carleton's fine office and up-to-date methods, go over to him, while to Jones falls the lot of caring for the non-payers, who are not welcome at Carleton's office. Poverty descends upon the old doctor but he is too proud to admit it. By self-denial, Jones manages to keep his wife and Blackie from want, and this is his contentment. The friendship of Carleton and Enid ripens into love and they become engaged. To Emerson, the happiness of his daughter means everything, and as he has always looked to Jones for council on weighty matters, goes to him to ask his opinion as to Carleton's worthiness. Even though he has been ridiculed and insulted by Carleton, Jones, who can think badly of no one, gives him a clean slate.

In the midst of a reception attendant upon the announcement of her engagement to Carleton, Enid is suddenly stricken. Carleton's petty skill is inadequate to combat the case, but he is unwilling to admit his incompetence. He scorns Jones' offer of assistance and, as Enid steadily grows worse, and he is forced to admit his helplessness, he sends to Cleveland for two eminent specialists. A consultation discloses that an operation is the only hope, but the case puzzles even the specialists and they hesitate. Happening to rest his eyes on one of the "Old School" articles in the medical journal, Warren, one of the specialists, advises, as a last recourse, that they attempt to secure the aid of the contributor. Emerson places his wealth at their disposal, to take any steps in order to save his doughter. A telegram is sent to the editor of the journal, who, in answer, refers them to Jones. The master hand of the old doctor is successful in staving off death and the incident is the means of joining together the practices of the old and the young doctors.

A FIRESIDE REALIZATION (May 20).—Richard Thornton is so absorbed in literature that he unknowingly neglects his wife. One night LeRoy Madison, a friend of Thornton, meets him on the street and invites him to the theater. Thornton refuses as he has some research work to do on a book which he deems very important. That night at dinner, his wife asks him to take her to the theater, but he refuses on account of the work in question. She presses the point and when he refers to the reading he has to do she reminds him of the promise he made to her before they were married; that he would give up books so as not to neglect her. He tells her she can go if she wants to, but he has reading to do and she goes to her room to ponder over the mistake she has made, while he settles down at the fireside to read.

In looking over the books he finds a diary of his younger days and as he reads has visions of his courtship, marriage, his early struggles with his wife at his side, also of their good luck which enabled them to move to the city and live in luxury. He falls asleep and dreams that Madison calls with the tickets, Thornton excuses himself again but tells his wife she can go if she wants to and she does. After the theater Madison takes Thornton's wife to a tango restaurant and while she is flush with excitement persuades her to run away with him. She steals into the house, goes to her room, packs a few things and leaves a note for her husband on the dining room table. Thornton finds the note. His rage blinds and chokes him and he wakes at the fireplace in a coughing fit. As he wakes he looks around bewildered. He then rushes to his wife's bedroom and is surprised to find her there. He tells her to hurry and get dressed as he is going to take her to the theater. She cannot understand his sudden change of mind. As they are about to leave the house Madison calls with three tickets to take them to the theater. Thornton tells him he has just had an awful nightmare about him and just for that he is going to take his wife to the theater himself and will not take any chances with a third party.

WHEN LOVE IS LOVE (Two Parts—May 22).—Amy Wood awakens from her dream of a career devoted to art to find herself stenographer at Day Smith's Department Store. Her auburn curls are derided by the girls of the store and they nickname her "Red-head." Will Braddon, the cashier, rebukes the girls for their rude conduct. Amy silently worships him from that moment.

Will's brother, Dick, is buyer for the store, but is always in difficulties. At last he gets into serious trouble over a bogus check. Will gives him his savings, but they are small compared to the amount of the check. But Dick does not worry. He goes carelessly on his may, making love to his employer's daughter. Will also cherishes fond hopes in that direction, but Sylvia shows her preference for Dick. Amy sadly watches the brothers vie for the favor of Sylvia Smith. A lottery man goes his rounds of the store. Amy buys a ticket; Will is also induced to buy. He tosses the ticket into a drawer in his desk and forgets it. Amy places her's carefully in her purse.

Dick is threatened with jail by Dan Reeve, who holds his bogus check. In order to pay his debts Dick goes into his brother's office and steals the money. The theft is witnessed by Amy. Will discovers the loss later, and accuses his brother, who confesses. Thoughts of their aged mother's love for Dick come to Will, and he decides to shoulder the blame. Amy, in perusing the newspaper, finds that her lottery ticket has drawn the capital prize. At the office the next day, Will receives word from his employer that he and his partner wish to balance accounts. Will, distracted, knowing that exposure is imminent, goes out to buy a revolver, with which to end it all. Amy, who has watched him closely, makes a search and discovers the letter he had written the night before when contemplating suicide. On the impulse of the moment. Amy changes the lottery tickets, placing her winning ticket in Will's desk. Surprised by hearing the approach of some one, she bangs the drawer shut, catching one of her long curls. To her consternation she finds she is a prisoner, held by her hair. She hastily cuts the curl and frees herself, leaving the telltale lock of red hair—mute evidence of her sacrifice.

The lottery man enters and tells Amy the winning ticket is the one sold in that office; he sees the one she holds is not the number and just as Will is returning to the office, despondent and desperate, the lottery man tells him he has won the capital prize. Will is overcome at his good fortune, but his happiness is short lived, for he sees there is some mistake—the number is not the same as on the ticket he purchased. He accepts the temporary relief the prize money affords, but determines to solve the mystery. Money's magic touch is soon felt by Will, for now Sylvia smiles on him, turning a cold shoulder on his brother. Glancing through his desk for a document, he discovers the lock of red hair in the drawer in which he had placed his lottery ticket. He glances toward Amy. She becomes conscious of his intent and shows confusion.

The hours he spends with Sylvia begin to lose their charm, for he is ever haunted by Amy's sweet face and the remembrance of the sacrifice which he is pretty sure she has made for him. At last he saves enough to replace the money he has used, and writes a check for the amount of the prize money which he presents to Amy. She asks him how he found her out and he shows her the curl. She is reluctant to accept the check, but he closes her hand over it and tenderly draws her into his arms.

WHEN BEAUTY COMES TO KOSKOB (May 22).—A very charming young woman opens a beauty parlor in the small village of Koskob. The villagers flock to her for treatment, but are very careful not to let each other know of the fact. The treatments often are severe. However, the attractiveness of the beauty doctor offsets all that. One farmer has his nails manicured. The town belle, becoming jealous of the newcomer, buys her out. Meanwhile the farmer's fingers have become so sore that he vows vengeance. He sneaks into the beauty parlor and mixes the contents of all the bottles. When the town belle, now the owner, treats her friends, the results are horrible and unexpected.' The villagers raid her establishment, drench her with her remedies and leave her to her fate.

FERDY FINK'S FLIRTATIONS (May 14).—in the small city in which he always has lived, Ferdy Fink is as much an institution as the tablet to the memory of the heroes of the Revolution. He has danced attendance on several generations of young ladies, and still, at an advanced age, is a gay beau. At last, however, determining to marry and settle down, he is considerably surprised to find that none of the sprightly maidens to whom he pops the question will have him. One Monday, passing an apartment house, he sees, many stories up, a woman leaning out of a window and waving to him. Ferdy dashes into the house and up to the apartment. A brutal giant of a man bursts open the door and throws him downstairs. Ferdy is convinced that here at last his romance awaits him. But he doesn't see the damsel in distress again till the following Monday. Then she appears as before at the window, waving her handkerchief. Ferdy's chivalrous spirit burns to rescue her. He is none too anxious, however, to face the man of the house. So, gaining entrance to the building across the way, he ascends to the window on a level with the casement of the fair one opposite. Then Ferdy nearly faints. For "the damsel in distress" proves to be a darkey maid, and the "handkerchief signal" the white cloth with which she is cleaning windows. As for the irate gentleman, her employer, he was only venting upon Ferdy his rage at having received a comic valentine.

LOVE AND MONEY (May 9).—A French nobleman of broken fortunes pays ardent court to a rich American widow, sojourning with her attractive daughter in Paris. He determines to win the widow's money, but plans to marry the daughter. Celia, however, has an American lover who, one day, arrives with his uncle, a wealthy rancher. The uncle is just as much in love with the widow as his nephew is with the daughter. The Frenchman plots to put through his own schemes. He tells the widow that he loves her for herself alone and begs that she transfer her wealth to her daughter, so that he may marry her without being thought a fortune hunter. Meanwhile, the widow has refused to let Celia marry the young American. Knowing this, the nobleman tells the girl that if she will consent to marry him secretly, she then may immediately divorce him, and, with the family fortune in his hands, wed the man of her choice. Both the widow and daughter agree to Count Nervi's suggestions. The money is put in the girl's name, and she and the Count are married. The ceremony is but scarcely over, when the nobleman tells Celia that, without her husband's consent, she is powerless to achieve her freedom, and that he has no idea of giving her up to another man. He exults in his cleverness in winning both the girl and her mother's money. At this point, "the minister" who has performed the rites, snatches off his disguise, revealing himself as the young American. He and the girl had been married in secret the day before, and had conspired to bring failure and disgrace upon the nobleman. The widow weds the ranchman who is rich enough for them both. And Celia and the American keep their fortune.

AT THE STROKE OF THE ANGELUS (Two Parts—May 16).—As John Ford left his dying sister and little girl in their stranded emigrant wagon to scout for help, he placed a little girl, the last survivor of the neighboring wagon, by his sister's side. His sister, separating her watch and fob from the chain, gives it to John to carry. She places the chain about the neck of her own little girl, who later dies. Outlaws ransack the wagon. Pedro, the chief, takes the chain from the neck of the dead child and places it about that of the living one. She becomes his foster daughter.

Twelve years later, this child, Anita, a lovely girl, is the accomplice of the outlaw in his thieving career. She meets and loves the now wealthy "Gringo," John Ford. He is beloved by the aristocratic Senorita Ynez, who discovers his infatuation for the street dancer, Anita. Anita refuses to accept Ford's love, as she is so far beneath him, but he persists and goes to her hut. Pedro, the outlaw, warned by Ynez, follows and is about to kill the "Gringo." Anita saves Ford's life, gets the stiletto, and, denouncing Pedro for degrading her to his level, making her unfit for the love of Ford, is about to stab Pedro, when the Angelus bell strikes. She drops the stiletto, draws her crucifix and kisses it. The crucifix

Pedro, loath to lose Anita as a money-earner, makes an attempt to retain possession of her, but as he is wanted for petty thieving, he hides in the Mission Church. Here, after an attempt to rob the altar, his conscience makes a coward of him. Dying, he confesses of the changing of the neck chains on the children years before, which proves Anita not to be the neice of Ford, but the little girl belonging to the neighboring emigrant wagon, whose life he saved. Free to love and marry, the last scene is laid in the Mission Garden, with Anita and Ford receiving the blessings of the Padre.

THE ELECTRIC ALARM (May 18).—An electrical engineer is installing a fire alarm system in a small town in Pennsylvania, and has about completed his work, with the exception of connecting the wires from the different alarm boxes to wires which operate a large bell in the City Hall tower. His sweetheart and her mother go to a nearby town to spend the day, intending to return on the evening train. The girl discovers that she has brought her opera glasses along in her handbag, and not wishing to take them with her, turns them over to the electrician to keep for her until she returns. On his way to work the electrician meets one of the village policemen, who evinces a desire to learn how the new alarm works. The workman explains things to him and shows him how to open the box and send in an alarm.

Wishing to finish the job that day, the electrician and his assistant work quite late and succeed in making all but one connection, when they run short of wire. Needing only a short piece of wire, the assistant is sent for it, while the electrician sits down to wait for him, and for lack of something better to do, he surveys the surrounding country through the opera glasses. Upon looking in the direction of the railroad tracks, he is horrified to note that the trestle over which the evening train must pass, is a roaring mass of flames. Glancing farther along the track he can faintly see the smoke of the approaching train on which are his sweetheart and her mother. He looks for his assistant, but he is not in sight. He sees the policeman on the street below and a desperate plan comes to him. Calling to the officer, he tells him to turn in an alarm and grasping the loose ends of the wires in each hand, he completes the circuit with his body. The alarm is sounded and the fire department arrives at the trestle in time to prevent a wreck. The electrician suffers untold agonies as the current passes through his body and the wire burns his hands to the bone. He hovers between life and death for a time, but passes the crisis in safety. The railroad company shows its appreciation of what the electrician has done by presenting him with a check large enough to allow him and the girl to marry.

11.30 P. M. (Two Parts—May 23).—An old farmer lives in the country with his wife and daughter. One day a banker from the city comes along, sees the wife and is infatuated with her. He persuades the farmer's wife to leave with him for the city. The old farmer comes in the house and finds a note which she has left, saying that she is going to divorce him and marry the banker. The old farmer vows that he will trace and find them in order to be avenged. Later there is a murder committed. A policeman on the beat imagines that he hears a scuffle. He looks at the clock in the tower and sees that it is 11.30. He hears no more of the noise of the scuffle, and thinks he must have been mistaken.

The next day the same policeman is standing on a corner talking to one of the detectives from the central station, when the old farmer rushes madly up to him and says that the banker has been killed. Thereupon the detective goes and investigates the case. He calls the coroner and presents evidence that the lover of the old farmer's daughter, who is now grown to womanhood, is the guilty party, he having been seen with a poker in his hand by the housemaid. Also suspicion is thrown upon the butler by the detective finding a button from the coat belonging to the butler.

The coroner orders the butler and the lover held for the murder. The detective decides to look further into the case and investigates the spot where the murder took place, and finds upon the ground the imprint of a man's hand, which looks as though it had got there by a man putting his hand out to save himself in falling. The little finger in the imprint upon the ground shows that that finger was mangled in some manner. The detective takes these findings into the house and begins to examine the hands of those suspected of the murder, and finds that they are not the parties who made the print upon the ground. He then goes out to examine the body of the banker and finds that neither of his hands has a mangled finger. The old farmer comes through the arch from the living room of the house, and the detective asks him for a match, with which to light his cigar. He then notices that the owner of the mangled finger is the old man. This clears the name of the lover and of the butler, and the old farmer, who had been failing in health for a number of years after the death of his wife, is suddenly attacked by a fit of coughing, and his life passes out.

ETHEL'S ROMANCE (No. 23 of the "Bill" Series—May 16).—Ethel and Ed are engaged and Ed promises to take her to a swell cafe for lunch. On the day to meet her at noontime, Ed is stopped by a young lady who is having trouble starting her new auto. Ed offers to help her. He gets into more trouble than he counted for, but finally gets the car started and the young lady, believing Ed to be a wonder around autos, begs him to drive her home. To be polite, he does so; but unfortunately Ethel sees him getting into the auto and driving away. She believes Ed has deserted her.

After escorting the young lady and her machine home, Ed rushes to the office, realizing that he is late for his engagement with Ethel. He finds her in a fury and is unable to square himself. She gives back the ring. It happens that Bill, the office boy, has eaten too much lunch and, having heard the quarrel between Ed and Ethel, he is inclined to fall asleep. Bill wakes up to the fact that he is madly in love with Ethel. He proposes to her and she accepts him—more to spite Ed than anything else. Bill leaves a note to Hadley, his boss, to the effect that his office force is going to get married.

Bill and Ethel have some trouble in getting a license, Bill being so young, but he manages to get away with it by using stilts and a moustache. Hadley gets the note and notifies Ed. They rush to prevent the wedding but arrive too late. Ed is almost frantic and nearly chokes Bill to death. Luckily Bill wakes up about this time and finds that he has been dreaming. Ed manages to square himself with Ethel.

THE RIVALS (May 23).—Georgie, six years old, loves Nell, but sees that Willie, by his superiority in the love-making art, has the inside track. Also a soapbox automobile. George buys a book to learn how to make love. In the meanwhile, however, Johnny, owning a real two-foot power auto, comes along and lures Nell away. Willie plans revenge.

That afternoon he overhears Johnny and Nell planning to elope that night, and arranging to meet at eight at an old barn. After being put safely to bed, Johnny sneaks out to meet Nell. Willie lays in wait and gets to the barn before Johnny and locks Nell up in the barn. Putting on Nell's extra dress (carried in her eloping dress suit case), he waits for Johnny. Unsuspectingly, Johnny puts Willie in his auto and off he pedals. In the meanwhile George is wandering about and sees the barn is on fire. Nell has kicked over a lighted lamp in her struggle to free herself. George runs to the rescue. Willie has been discovered by Johnny in the meantime and they are fighting furiously.

They see the fire, too, and rush back, arriving just in time to see the despised George kissing Nell goodnight at her gate. Johnny and Willie, disgusted, shake hands and solemnly swear that they "are off 'wimmen' for life." Nell slips back to bed, unnoticed, as does Johnny, whose mother never could understand how he got such a scratch on his nose, since it was not there when he went to bed.

THE MISSION OF MORRISON (May 3).—Douglas Kent sends his secretary, Arnold Morrison, to Iviswold, the Kent country home, as the bearer of a valuable necklace, his wedding present to his niece, Dora Kent, engaged to Count Luigi. Dora does not love the Count and does not wish to marry him, but her mother desires her to have the title and insists on the match taking place. Dora, in order to avoid the loveless union, decides to run away. Morrison arrives at Elmville, the nearest railroad stop to Iviswold, and starts out for Iviswold on horseback. Night approaching and a storm coming up, he stops at the Mountain Inn for the night. It is at this Inn that Count Luigi has planned and executed many crimes with the assistance of Smiley, the rascally innkeeper. Morrison, in ignorance of the true character of the place, gets a room, and prepares for dinner.

Dora, in escaping from her home, is thrown from her horse and is forced to stay for the night at the Mountain Inn. Dora and Morrison are in the dining room together at dinner. The Count, who is watching from a corner, comes to Dora and tries to force her to return. She breaks off the match and when he persists in his attitude Morrison steps in. A fight follows, in which the Count is beaten. During the struggle the necklace falls to the floor and Smiley sees it. Later he tells the Count.

Morrison, fearing for the safety of the necklace, turns it over to Dora, unaware of her identity, and asks her to keep it for him until morning. In the night Morrison is attacked by Smiley and the Count and is thrown in the cellar. Failing to find the necklace in his possession, they try to gain entrance to Dora's room, for they suspect her of having it.

In the meantime Dora's mother has discovered her daughter's absence and telephones Douglas Kent, who starts out at once for Iviswold. While the conspirators try to get in her door, which is barricaded, Dora rushes to the window and cries for help. Kent in his auto, on the way to Iviswold, hears the cry and he and the chauffeur rush into the hotel in time to overcome Smiley and the Count as they are breaking into Dora's room. Morrison is released from the cellar and he and Dora discover each other's identity. Kent thinks the necklace may be a wedding present after all and gives it to Dora.

MIKE'S ELOPEMENT (May 14).—Mike, an Irish boy, aged 12, reads of an elopement. He decides to get Bridget, his girl, to elope with him. They plan the elopement and Mike brings his automobile to her door the next morning. As they are passing through the country they meet a band of gypsies. Pete, one of the gypsies, decides to steal the children. While Mike and Bridget are eating lunch they have a fight, and Mike deserts Bridget.

Pete finds her crying and entices her to the gypsy camp. Mike wanders into camp and squares himself with Bridget by returning her puppy to her. An old gypsy woman sees trouble in the cards and warns Pete not to steal the children. He laughs at her fears, so she warns Mike and Bridget to run away. Pete sees the children running away and tries to catch them. While Mike is trying to defend Bridget, he falls over a high bank and is thought to be dead by Pete and following gypsies, who become panicstricken and run away.

Bridget returns and carries Mike to his home. When he regains consciousness, Bridget gives Mike her puppy as a reward for bravery, and they decide to wait until they are older before eloping again.

GRIDLEY'S WIFE (May 19).—U. S. Marshal Gridley, with his wife, Mary, child, and mother, reside on the United States border. He receives a letter from the man who gained him his appointment, asking him to take on as a Secret Service agent, Clarence Kirby. Gridley is forced to go away to look after opium smugglers. As soon as he is gone, Gridley's mother, who is jealous of Mary's influence on Gridley, vents her spite on her and makes the young woman's life very unhappy. Kirby arrives, meets Mary, falls in love with her, and tries to win her affection. Gridley's mother notices Kirby's attentions, and becomes greatly worried over them. Mary likes Kirby in an innocent manner, as he is the means of brightening her otherwise dismal existence, until one day she goes too far. Gridley's mother forms the worst suspicions from this and sends Gridley a letter by messenger, requesting him to return at once. He receives the message twenty-four hours later, and while at first scoffing at the mother's suspicions, he at last begins to worry over the situation and starts off on his return. Next day Kirby calls again upon Mary and Gridley's mother being present, he writes and forces upon Mary a note, asking her to leave the front door open that night as he will call at midnight for he must see her alone. Mary is at first shocked and angry, then comes to a determination.

Gridley's mother discovers the note and sets a watch upon Mary. Mary unlocks the door that night, and Mrs. Gridley slips out and waits for her son. When he arrives she tells him the painful news and shows him Kirby's note. Gridley, his trust in his wife utterly broken, lays in wait for Kirby, intending to kill him. Kirby arrives. Mary meets him with Gridley's deadly revolver trained upon him. As he is about to fire, Mary tells Kirby how much she despises him, and at the point of a revolver compels him to sign a confession of his evil intentions. Gridley then enters the scene and compels Kirby to drink to the health of "the best and truest wife a man ever had." Kirby slinks out. Gridley's mother, who overhears, enters and begs Mary's forgiveness, which is readily given.

THE MAN OF IT (Two Parts—May 22).—An austere man of the mountain takes a miner boarder into his cabin. The man becomes interested in his babies. The jealous husband reads into his actions an affair with his wife, puts the man out, and later orders his wife from the cabin. She leaves her babies.

Years later the girls are grown. The oldest objects to the rigid rule of her father. A cattle dealer happens in the district and, attracted by her, makes his way to the cabin. The girls have discovered a small chest containing their mother's treasures. They find a miniature picture of her. The cattle dealer comes in at that time, followed by the father. The cattle dealer escapes, but is seen by father. It is the younger girl's first love. There is a quarrel between her and father, and she resolves to leave with the cattleman, taking her mother's miniature

Far from home in another mountain district, the truth breaks on the self-willed, ignorant girl. She leaves the cattleman and is protected by a woman, who has to board with her a young surveyor, who is going through the wild mountain district surveying for a railroad. The woman agrees to keep her secret concerning the runaway with the cattleman. A love affair springs up between them. Back in the mountain the sister suffers her father's treatment and longs for her lost sister. Some time later the young surveyor marries the girl and is called some distance away to the very mountain district from which the girl came to survey for a certain tunnel. He leaves a note behind explaining his mission.

His wife realizes he will meet her sister and will perhaps learn something of her past life. The woman comforts her, hears her story, sees the miniature, and realizes the girl is her daughter. The girl decides to face the truth and writes a letter with her mother to the husband, telling him to find the sister and bring her back with him. The letter arrives just as the husband is about to return after the survey. He has met the sister and wronged her. When she comes to him, he puts her off and shows her the letter and a picture of her sister and her mother. She realizes the impossibility of marriage—her sister is the wife of the man. The mountain lover has overheard, tells the father and they pursue to see justice done. Her own honor at stake and wishing to save her sister, the pangs of her husband's death, she sacrifices her life for him. Her mountain lover seeks out the man but finds him with his wife and baby, and, for their sake, the husband goes unharmed.

THE GREATER STRENGTH (Two Parts—May 17).—The need of a professional man to live among and care for the physical needs of the miners at Big Creek mines in strongly emphasized following several accidents in which the first aid methods and willing but crude help of the miners proves to great advantage. It is decided to advertise for a practising physician. In reply there comes a young doctor of great physical strength who is installed as medical advisor. Dr. Hart had recently unintentionally crippled a dear acquaintance in a friendly wrestling bout and is seeking a life which will detract his mind from the incident. He has already made a vow never to us his strength on any occasion except to save life, but he is sorely tempted among the rough and ready characters at the mines.

As usual, the mining camp is possessed of a bully and coward, but strange to say, the man's one honorable thought is for his little child, whom he worships above all else in the world. The doctor and the camp's pretty school teacher are naturally drawn together, but their friendship is resented by the bully, who makes insinuating remarks regarding the teacher. Remembering his vow, the doctor allows the bully's utterance to go unchallenged, much to the displeasure of the school teacher, who looks up to him as a protector. However, when diphtheria breaks out in camp, the physician proves himself a hero and his greater strength stands by him in more ways than one. The first to be ill with the dread disease is the bully's little child and the man becomes frantic at the thought of losing her. When the doctor arrives he finds that immediate action is needed to save the little life, but the father, remembering his uncalled-for remarks, thinks that the doctor will allow his child to die to get even with him and tries to prevent the use of a serum needle. Realizing that it was a question of life or death to the child, the doctor uses his great strength to quickly overpower and bind the father and injects the serum in time to kill off the deadly germ. News of the doctor's actions reaches the school teacher. She is brought to an understanding that moral strength is far greater than mere physical power, and she nobly seeks the doctor to ask forgiveness.

AT THE EDGE OF THINGS (May 19).—A sudden drop in the price of a popular copper stock threatens ruin, financially, to Tom Carter, who has invested his life savings in margins, and if the market drops another point he will be a ruined man. Mrs. Carter learns of her husband's predicament and decides to appeal to her father. As her father had recently written her that he would not give her any money to be squandered in gambling, she decides to see him in person. Leaving a note to her husband explaining her absence, she starts on her journey. Later Carter finds the letter from her father, in place of the one left in explanation of her departure and, already in the depth of despair, thinks that his wife has left him in his hour of need.

Despondent, he plans suicide.

In the meantime Hawkins, his butler, has also invested his all in the same stock. In his own apartments the butler also decides to end it all, but at the last moment remembers that there is enough money in his master's safe to save his small investment, although not enough to be any use to Carter. Having finished a farewell note, Carter is about to commit suicide when the burglar-butler seizes him. After binding and gagging his master, the butler ties him to a chair, rifles the safe and leaves. During one whole day Carter is helpless in the library while the stock he invested in recovers and mounts higher and higher until his investment is a fortune.

The butler, unable to withhold the good news, hurries to his master's house, and, feigning surprise and regret, unbinds his master, telling him his good fortune. When her father refuses her request for money, Mrs. Carter hurries home, preferring to face poverty with her husband than to accept her parent's offer of a home. She enters the house just as her husband has found her misplaced note of which nothing is said by the happy husband. Carter again becomes master and Hawkins, although there seems to be a knowledge between them of the doings on the eventful day, sees to it that the facts are never mentioned, and the Carter home resumes its place in the world of happiness.

BEAUTY.

NAUGHTY HENRIETTA (May 18).—Living up to her reputation as a flirt, Henrietta gives cause for keen competition among three male admirers as to who shall take her to a dance. Her friend, Alice Wren, who is visiting her, holds opposite views regarding men and when at the dance Henrietta voices her admiration for Dan Mathews, Alice tells her chum that he is a different kind of a man and cannot be caught by the wiles of a coquette.

Not being introduced, Dan pays little attention to the charming Henrietta, which causes the flirt to become more determined to interest him. Next morning she forms a plan, sending him each month a calendar tastily arranged on her photograph. Beginning with February, Dan receives the photo-calendar with indifference, but as each following month brings another, his curiosity is aroused. Dan's room has become a veritable picture gallery with the poses of Henrietta greeting the view from every side.

In the meantime Alice becomes engaged to Bob Henshaw and Henrietta is chosen as maid of honor at the wedding. Dan being Bob's best friend, is naturally selected as best man. While the two men are talking in Dan's apartment, Bob notices Henrietta's pictures and teases him for concealing his romance. Dan explains that he has never met the sender of the calendars, whereupon Bob tells him as she is to be the maid of honor at the wedding, he will soon have the chance. Following the ceremony Dan secures a confession from Henrietta that she is the author of the calendar plan and makes her heart glad by a proposal of marriage which, it is needless to say, is quickly accepted. When the engagement is announced, Alice is anxious to learn how it was brought about, but Henrietta keeps her secret to herself and settles down to a life of happiness.

THE HUMAN OCTOPUS (Two Parts—May 14).—John Kelcey is a supposedly wealthy gentleman, but in reality is president of the Beggars' Union, an organization composed almost entirely of phony cripples, blind men, etc., who prey upon the sympathy of the public. He has a daughter, Ruth, who is in love with Tom Horton, a reporter. Kelcey orders Horton from the house. Horton is later assigned to investigate graft conditions in the Tenderloin for his newspaper. He goes disguised as a tramp. While there he falls asleep and some boys place the card of a blind man upon his chest. Later a cripple comes along and through him Tom is made a member of the Beggars' Union. Later Tom gives information to the police which results in a raid. Tom watches for the appearance of the president and trails him to a cheap hotel. There he looks over the transom and recognizes John Kelcey, who has taken off his disguise. The story ends in the threatened exposure of Kelcey by Horton, and Kelcey's consent that Horton pay attention to his daughter.

DOMINO.

THE SHOAL LIGHT (Two Parts—May 13).—Ezra Tucker, for thirty years keeper of the lighthouse, receives a letter from the Government stating that he has reached the age limit and asking for his retirement. Tucker, who has a real personal affection for the light, which he regards as his own, is heartbroken. His sorrow, however, is soon replaced by a feeling of deep resentment toward the new keeper. When Coates, the new keeper, arrives at the lighthouse, Tucker refuses to meet him in a friendly manner. This angers Coates, and the two old men become hostile toward each other. Coates' son, John, a young captain of a fishing vessel, arrives in port and, not knowing the way to the lighthouse, inquires of Hattie, Tucker's daughter, the right path. John makes a favorable impression on Hattie, as she also does on him. Several days later Hattie sets out in a small boat for the village. The boat overturns and Hattie is rescued by John.

John dismisses Adamson, his first mate, for drunkenness and greatly infuriated, Adamson seeks revenge. On a very foggy night, he visits the lighthouse, overpowers old Coates and turns off the light. When Tucker goes out to bid good night to his light, he is amazed to find it is not burning, and feeling that there is some trouble, he and Hattie start for the lighthouse. They find Coates bound and senseless. Hattie is put through one of the windows of the lighthouse, climbs the stairs and lights the light, thus saving John's boat from being wrecked. Adamson, who has gone out onto the big rock out in the sea, in a row boat, loses his boat and is drowned by the rising tide. When John reaches the lighthouse the next morning a happy reconciliation takes place between all parties, and the picture finishes with a love scene between Hattie and John.

THE OPERATOR AT BIG SANDY (Two Parts—May 19).—Nell Oakley lives in Red Rock, Ariz., and has a dissipated father. She goes in search of him in a gambling hall and tries to get him to return. The old man, being drunk and gambling with Jack Ransom, refuses. He loses and bets his daughter's hand against $500 of Ransom's money. The old man loses and in the argument which the girl puts up she is backed by Bill Palmer, a young miner. The gambler is generally unpopular and after a big melee makes his get-away.

Nell leaves home and goes to Big Sandy, where she is taken in by Tom Loomis and his mother. Tom is station agent there and his mother is an invalid. He teaches the girl telgraphy. Meanwhile Jack Ransom and his band, plot to rob the train. Tom is captured, but, Nell, who has seen the bandits at the window, enters the telegraph office during their absence. She sends a message of warning to Red Rock, countermanding the false one the bandits forced Tom to send. The treasure train is amply protected and the bandits routed, Jack Ransom being killed. The young operator receives promotion and the story ends happily.

WHEN E. R. Anderson and Chas. Hetzel die we will possibly admit that some day somebody might approach the excellence of the Minusa Screen—somewhat. But Hetzel has two leather lungs, and Anderson is in love and can't die, so there seems to be no hope; so naturally Minusa Screens will always lead. Anderson keeps just about ten years ahead of the field of screen makers. He built the first gold fibre. It was a good screen then—there was nothing even nearly as good. But it is as marbles to money compared to the Minusa Gold Fibre built today by Anderson and Hetzel's new process. Strathmore that she is thoroughly bad and not really Vavasour's wife at all. They quarrel and fight a duel in which Erroll is killed. He has left a letter to Strathmore, explaining that Lucille, the daughter of exiled but noble Russians, is really his wife though he has kept the marriage secret for fear of offending his family and wealthy uncle.

When the news of Errol's death is brought to her, Mrs. Errol dies of shock and Strathmore adopts and rears the daughter of this match who has been named Lucille for her mother. Lord Strathmore drives "Lady" Vavasour from society and completely exposes her, for he holds her responsible for the trouble between himself and Errol. As the years pass, Lucille grows into a beautiful girl, and when the Comte de Valdor proposes for her hand she refuses him, revealing that she loves Strathmore. Because he has killed her father, he hesitates, but in the end he marries her. "Lady" Vavasour, affected by the girl's happiness, foregoes exposing the truth of her father's death.

RUMPELSTILTSKIN (Five Parts—New York Motion Picture Corp.).—Rumpelstiltskin, a wicked little dwarf with magic power, covets the miller's daughter, Polly. He offers the miller two bags of gold for her and is angrily kicked out of the mill. The dwarf vows eternal vengeance. The King, whose coffers are empty, having heard of the magic power of the dwarf, sends for him and commands him to refill his coffers. The dwarf, in vengeance, tells the King that the miller's daughter can spin straw into gold. The King sends for Polly, places her in a room full of straw and commands her to spin it into gold before dawn, else she, her father and the dwarf will lose their heads. The dwarf tells Polly he will spin the straw for her if she will promise him her first born, if it is a girl. Polly, in order to save her father, promises.

Prince Cole, disguised as a hunter, seeks a girl to love. He sees Polly and falls in love with her. She agrees to meet him in the forest, but is captured by the dwarf and taken to his cave, where the Dragon is set to watch over her. With the assistance of the Good Fairy, the Prince rescues Polly. The King places the Prince in a dungeon because of his love for Polly. The Good Fairy helps Polly to liberate him and he and Polly step on the magic carpet which the Good Fairy has given Polly and wish themselves far away. They are transferred to th woods, where they are married and a baby girl is born to them. The dwarf searches for Polly and the Prince, finds them and steals their child. The Good Fairy again comes to their assistance and the child is restored to them. The King, whose treasure is exhausted in the search for his son, commands the miller again produce his daughter so that she can spin some more straw into gold for him. The Prince and Polly appear before the King, by whom they are joyfully welcomed. They tell the King the story and the dwarf is condemned to spinning straw the rest of his natural life.

THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY (American—Episode No. 1—May 3—Two Parts).—Tied hand and foot to a stake, around which savage redmen danced, their warhoops piercing the stillness of the calm Virginia forest, Sir Arthur Stanley, soldier of fortune, and scion of the noble house of Stanley of Warwickshire, England, resigned himself to the fate he knew he could not escape. Suddenly the shouting ceased; the dancing halted. In the heavens, far off, as Stanley and the Indians stood in silent awe, there appeared a great ball of red. Nearer and nearer it came, leaving in its wake a great cloud of smoke. Then, with a mighty thud, the meteor struck the ground a short distance from the stake. Sir Arthur stood, free, amazed, as the savages crowded about him in various attitudes of homage. He was free, they told him, the Great Spirit having so willed, by the coming of the ball of fire. A week later, when about to depart, Sir Arthur paused to examine the meteorite that saved him. Before him, imbedded in the igneous mass, was a great shining something. With his knife he quickly dug it from the rock. A diamond! The diamond from the sky—it became thereafter a charm against all harm to those of the house of Stanley who possessed it.

Two centuries and a half later the Stanley family, then represented by Judge Lamar Stanley and Col. Arthur Stanley, his first cousin, held sway in Fairfax County, the first coveting power, as represented by politics and property, the latter seeking nothing more than a son and heir, that he might retain possession of the diamond from the sky and bring unto his house the earldom of England. Judge Stanley was the father of a son, to whom the diamond and the title would fall unless the Colonel's wife about to become a mother, delivered unto him a male child. At the very hour the Colonel's wife sacrificed her life bringing a daughter into the world, Hagar, wife of Harding, the nomad and gypsy who pitched his tent on the Colonel's property, became the mother of a son. Disappointed, Colonel Stanley decided he must supplant his baby daughter with a male child. Dr. Lee, a righteous man with an elastic conscience, but a friend of many years' standing, agreed to participate in the fraud. Within a few hours, Harding, for a bag of gold, had torn his son from its mother and delivered it to Dr. Lee. Thus the baby boy, son of a social outcast, became the heir of the earldom and the diamond, while Judge Lamar sought to bury his chagrin in the wine cup.

Four years later, Hagar, mother of the pseudo heir, returned to Fairfax, seeking to fill her great heartache, in the recovery of her son. Silently she stole through the window into the Stanley home to behold the master of the house alone. With a cry, the Colonel leaped to his feet, faced her and then, with a gasp, fell dead at her feet. Clutching the diamond from the sky, the vengeful mother placed it in her bodice and hurried to the room where her child slept. Revenge filled her heart. In place of her son, whom she left to enjoy the wealth and position of which she deemed him worthy, she took with her the Colonel's baby girl. And, in the years that followed, Esther never for a moment doubted that the gypsy woman was her mother.

Dr. Lee, who kept his secret well, consented, at Hagar's request, to adopt and rear Esther, only with the understanding that the diamond from the sky be placed in his keeping. Hagar agreed, and within a few months the youths of Fairfax, were rivaling each other for the favors of this beautiful girl. Blair Stanley, son of Judge Stanley, now dead, and Arthur Stanley were her favorites, with the usurper of the diamond and title occupying the more favorable position. The enmity between them, already of long years' standing, grew apace; increased by the oft-repeated story told Blair by his mother, concerning the diamond from the sky, then held, it was generally believed, by Arthur Stanley. Blair swore the diamond would be his. Leaving the home of Dr. Lee one afternoon, Blair paused to peer through the window opening on the veranda. His eyes bulge and great beads of sweat covered his forehead as he placed his face close to the pane, riveting his gaze on the form of the white-haired doctor, seated at the table with the diamond from the sky before him.

A COUNTRY LAD (Two Parts—Ideal—May 10).—Fascinated by the lurid description of a sensational novel, Jed Perkins, a country lad, gives up his country sweetheart, and decides to go to the city. He meets an adventuress, who forces Jed to join a gang of thieves and to lead a life of a nature so foreign to that formerly lived in Hickville and on the farm, that he longs to get away. After a time, sick of waiting for the return of her former love, Ruth, the country sweetheart, goes to the city with her big brother. The brother is overpowered and Ruth is taken prisoner by the very thieves with whom Jed has been living. Jed finally succeeds in rescuing his country sweetheart after a series of thrilling escapades. He awakes to find himself in the kitchen at home, and to realize that the cities' lights and temptations had appeared to him only in a dream. But the dream was sufficiently powerful to make him give up his city notions.

Their Initiations (Superba—May 11).—Mrs. Bumpson finds Mr. Joiner's card of admittance to her husband's lodge and determines to disguise herself and go in his place to find out what keeps her husband away from home two nights every week. Assisted by her Ma, she locks Bumpson in his room and goes to the hall, where she is accepted as the new member and is put through the initiation rough stuff which puts an end to all of her curiosity. In the meantime, Bumpson escapes from his room by a rope of bed sheets and is arrested as a burglar. On her return home, Mrs. B. is arrested for trying to break into her own house. When they meet at court next day and are fined $150 between them for resisting arrest and for parading in men's clothes, Mrs. Bumpson concludes that if her husband can stand two nights each week at lodge he is welcome to it.

IN HER DADDY'S FOOTSTEPS (Two Parts—Grandin—May 12).—Ethel Lake is thwarted by her father in her desire to marry Jack Burton. One day she finds a letter addressed to her father, in which he is asked to meet a friend at a gambling resort. Ethel's venturous blood is aroused and she decides to follow her father. Disguised in her brother's clothes and a mustache, she goes to the gambling house, too, after telling her mother she is going on a visit. The place is raided, and Ethel, along with her father, is caught and sentenced to ten days' hard labor. She is placed in the same cell as her father, but he does not recognize her. One day Jack Burton in passing the prison grounds, recognizes Mr. Lake. After the ten days are up, and Ethel has returned from her "visit," and Mr. Lake from his "business trip," Jack calls at the house and, asking to see Mr. Lake privately, demands the right to marry Ethel. On the old gentleman's refusal he tells the father that he had seen him at the prison and threatens to expose him if he does not give his consent. Father acquiesces, but when the changes in his attitude towards Ethel's lover arouses the comment of his wife, Ethel at last comes forth with an explanation of what has transpired, and matters are settled satisfactorily for the entire family.

HOW ALLOPATH CONQUERED BONEOPATH (Luna—May 13).—Dorothea, who has just returned from medical school to the small western town, where she hopes to practice medicine, finds a rival in Pete, who, taking a course in "Boneology" from the Bunque School by mail in the hopes of curing an ailment of his own, thinks that he is a finished doctor and tries to practice on everything on the ranch which possesses bones. He makes himself such a nuisance that in desperation Dr. Dorothea and the cowboys decide to play a game on him. They summon Pete to the bedside of a cowboy who pretends to be sick, and who likewise pretends to die as a result of Pete's rough treatment. Pete is required to sit beside the dead man all night and the weird and spectacular things which happen are enough to cure the would-be doctor of his mania, and to leave the field open to Allopath and Dorothea.

TOUGH LUCK (Starlight—May 13).—Louie gets an idea. He tells Heinie he will marry an heiress. He does and leads her to the altar in her own drawing room. Getting sore at the wedding because the best man kisses the bride, Louie swats him. They clinch and destroy the wedding supper. Louie sneaks out on the porch and is kidnapped by serenaders and carried twenty miles away. On his way back he meets Heinie and a pal who insist on food. Louie invites them home with him. They steal a goose for the occasion. Arriving home, they cook the goose without cleaning it. It blows up, fills the house with smoke and feathers, and wakes the family. The cop, who has seen them steal the goose, arrests Louie. Heinie and the bum escape and Louie, seeing that the jig is up, dives through the window and beats it. Rejoining Heinie, they go to the country, following the road called "Nowhere."

THE EDUCATION OF FATHER (Two Parts—United—May 14).—Father is sadly spoiled, and when his son announces to him his intention of marrying his sweetheart, father throws a fit and refuses his consent. Father determines to interfere with his son's love plans permanently, so he decides to go to the masquerade that night, disguised as a Scotchman. The son and his sweetheart are discovered by father buying their costumes for the ball, but they, realizing this, decide to change costumes with each other. At the ball father corners the wearer of the costume hired that afternoon by his son's sweetheart and makes her promise that she will never marry his son. To liven things up for the irate gentleman, the real sweetheart conceives the idea that the son be taken down with smallpox, and at the first announcement of the fact that one of the guests is ill with the dread disease, father trundles home and fumigates himself. The next morning he receives a letter saying if he wants to save his son from a horrible death he must be present at a certain spot with $1,000. He goes. The bandit is the sweetheart, who leads father blindfolded to his son's bedside, where she tells the father that the boy will die unless he can marry her. Father at last gives his consent and as a mark of his forgiveness gives the make-believe bandit the $1,000.

THE STRONGER MIND (United—Two Parts—May 15).—A crook and his pal are disturbed while attempting to rob a bank. The crook, fearing capture, leaves and takes up his residence in a western mining town where he meets the girl—the girl being one of those "Good Angels" that minister to the wants of others in distress. The crook assumes the guise of a minister of the gospel and owing to the good influence of the girl determines to shun all crime. He writes his pal to this effect but the pal, declining to accept the decision as final, comes to the town where the pseudo minister has chosen to stay and travel the "straight and narrow" path. The "stronger mind" is that of the second crook, who persuades the first to forego his good intentions and induces him to make an attempt to rob the local bank where the girl's father is employed as watchman. The denouement which results in the death of the second crook and the redemption by the girl of the weakling, who could not resist him, complete a perfect story of heart interest.

WHERE CAN I GET A WIFE? (Cameo—May 16).—Jim Haskell, the pampered son of a rich father, is finding it difficult to live on a large weekly allowance because of his extravagance. Very pleasant is the word, therefore, received from his father, while abroad, that his allowance will be trebled if he marries at a given date. Jim hits upon the scheme of tricking his father into trebling the size of the check through leading him to believe that he has married in accordance with his wishes. His pleasures are rudely interrupted by a cablegram advising that his father is en route for America. In desperation, Jim proposes to the girl of his heart, who, despite her inclination, feels that she must be given more time for preparation. At his wits' end, Jim calls upon his pal, Uncle Dudley, who undertakes to see him through the predicament. Wig, skirts, corset, bustle, dress and all are hustled over the coat and trousers of the genial Mr. Fixit. Jim's father enters at this point and takes quite a liking to the bride. Trouble begins when Jim's real sweetheart enters the room and discovers what, apparently seems to be duplicity. She mixes it up with the impostor and much to his chagrin relieves him of his skirt and bares the plot. Uncle Dudley has a hard time in squaring it with the policeman who takes him to jail.

THE FORTUNE TELLER (Starlight—May 6).—Heinie and Louie become fortune tellers. Heinie tells the fortune of a very rich woman. In the fortune the queen is supposed to be attacked by thugs and rescued by a hero. Heinie describes Louie as the hero. Louie later plans a bogus hold-up so that he may win the good graces of the lady which he does. She lavishes him with money until it so terminates that the rich lady is none other than the Pearl Queen, a notoriour thief. Louie becomes involved to a painful degree as an accomplice, affording amusing complications.

man took up the cry and sent it ringing down the centuries, and as he was given to see more clearly, the words took an increased force, until they became the inflexible dictum of an uncompromising society. Alicia Knight saw the words and laughed. Felix Lynn saw them and shut tight his eyes. Pledged by the law of man to another, he knew the price of his deception. Caught in the irresistible whirlpool of his passion, he followed a force that was older than mankind. Then came the dawn, and with it the knowledge of his offense in all its hideous nakedness. She cared not. She had tasted of Life, and the draught was still sweet on her lips. Once again she was ready to jeer and snap her fingers in the face of Convention. But her arm dropped even as it was raised, for between her and her contempt for things as they are came the sickening realization that he was already wed. For the first time in her life she knew the cost of flouting those terrible words, "Thou Shalt Not ——," and all the force of her rebellious spirit was turned against the man who had wittingly brought her face to face with Reality. Day after day she dogged his footsteps, go where he might, and ever as he turned he looked fearfully into those eyes of dreadful accusation. Her desire for payment knew no satiety until her relentless persecution had driven him to hopeless insanity; then, all too late, se knew deep within her that she loved him dearly. Who Pays?

THE NEW EXPLOITS OF ELAINE (Episode No. 20 "Spontaneous Combustion" Two Parts—Released week of May 10).—His constant failure to accomplish the death of both Elaine and her protector, Craig Kennedy, makes Wu Fang only the more persistent. Money means nothing to him. His enormous wealth enables him to carry out the most elaborate plans for the death of the hated detective and his fair-haired sweetheart. His followers know no word other than their master's, and his Oriental craftiness enables him to keep well out of the law's reach.

He secures a corrupt young girl to help him carry out a plot as fiendish as it is intricate. A fake attack on the girl in front of Elaine's window is excuse for the girl's sad story, which so touches Elaine and her aunt that they take her into their service. Acting on the chemical principle of spontaneous combustion, Wu Fang rigs up a trick chair to hold fast whoever sits in it, and eventually burn its occupant to death. This chair is shipped to the Dodge home, where the new maid receives it and has it put up in the garret, knowing that Elaine will go there shortly to make a selection of her dresses for a charity gift.

Meanwhile, Kennedy learns of the joint in which Wu Fang hides himself from the outer world, and disguised as a heathen goes there to smoke a pipe. How he is tricked by the cunning Wu Fang—how he learns of Elaine's imminent peril—how he manages to outwit the crafty Celestial, and rescue Elaine from the most frightful death—is all so graphically pictured on the screen that a word description fails utterly in its purpose.

JUST TRAMPS (May 1).—Tramps! Just the word itself is sufficient to bring a smile to one's face, but when it is coupled with the rollicking humor furnished by these two gentlemen of leisure, the combination is sure to raise a howl of laughter. These two sons of rest hit town in a "side-door pullman," and proceed to size up the burg in their endeavor to get as many meals as possible without any particular effort on their part. By frequent references to their "code" book they manage to steer clear of many rough spots. Their subsequent trials and tribulations are warranted to dispel the worst case of "blues."

PISA (Picturesque Italy—May 3).—There probably is not a schoolboy in the land but who has read or heard of this busy commercial city of Italy whose chief point of interest is the famous Leaning Tower, one of the Seven Wonders of the World. This tower is 180 feet high and inclines 14 feet out of the perpendicular. For 600 years it has been used as a belfry of a cathedral which dates back as far as the 11th century.

A STUDY IN INSECT LIFE (On the Same Reel).—Soon the earth and the air will be filled with myriad forms of insect life, each pursuing its own method of existence. No more interesting subject for study can be found, covering a range which is infinite. This film presents to the spectator some of the more familiar forms of insect life among which are the Ladybird, the Ant-lion, the Longicorn Beetle, the Owl Moth and others.

WHO'S WHO IN SOCIETY (Four Parts—May 10).—Mrs. O'Brien, newly rich, vainly aspires to social prominence, an ambition in which her common, chess-loving husband does not sympathize. Pretty Mary Ellen, the daughter, and a Jap butler constitute the household. One day Mrs. O'Brien sends out invitations to a party which the Van Dusens and Van Astorbilts refuse to attend. While she is mourning this loss, an automobile breaks down in front of the house, and a slender young man who introduces himself as Lord Algernon Ste. Clair seeks refuge, while his car awaits the repairman. Mrs. O'Brien, scenting a noble match, promptly invites him to stay for the party.

Meanwhile a rough-looking character alights from an automobile, and after a careful inspection of the house, rejoins his friends and disappears. An hour later, immaculately groomed, he enters the club of which O'Brien is a member, and finding the solitary old Irishman playing a lonesome game of chess, offers himself for partner. In this way he obtains an invitation to attend Mary Ellen's party. In due time the guests arrive, consisting of the good-hearted but illiterate Flanagans, their two children and the stranger. There immediately commences a vigorous suit for the hand of pretty Mary Ellen on the part of Lord Algy and the stranger. Mary Ellen shows her preference for the stranger.

That night weird things happen. The stranger who has been invited to spend the night, slips into the library in time to see O'Brien much excited over the appearance of a white hand that has deftly poked through the portiers in search of the electric switch. In another instant the stranger throws O'Brien to the floor, and Lord Algy in hand, stands over them. There is a scuffle and the stranger disappears, gun in hand, through the French window. An hour later Lord Algy, in his room, cautiously draws a string of pearls from his pocket, only to turn and face the gun of the stranger, who raises his head from back of Lord Algy's bed. There follows explanations and the stranger shows his badge as a government secret service agent, long in search of the crook known as Lord Algy. O'Brien rejoices and Mary Ellen slips her hand into that of the "stranger's," while Mrs. O'Brien, thoroughly disgusted, hurls a volume of "Who's Who in Society" into the waste basket.

THE BOSS (Brady—Five Parts).—Michael Regan is of Irish decent and a born fighter. This fighting instinct helps Regan to success. He becomes first of all, a bartender, then a saloon proprietor. Two of his best friends are Sullivan and McCoy. They have been boys together. Sullivan becomes a priest, and Porky McCoy becomes Regan's right hand man. Regan goes in for politics. He also buys up mortgages. His power increases as his field of labor widens. He begins to gain the monopoly of the grain-shipping contracts which before his advent had been under the control of Griswold & Son, an old established firm. Old John Griswold and his son are on the brink of ruin.

Regan has two sides to his nature. The man of iron, hard, merciless and a grafter, and the man who feeds the starving, would give his life for his friend and delight in the smile of a child. While visiting and helping the poor, he meets and loves Emily Griswold. In his hard fighting life, he has seen little of women, and Emily becomes his ideal. When the situation of the Griswolds becomes desperate, they ask Regan to visit them. He comes and offers them relief through an amalgamation of interests. When questioned as to his reason for this leniency, when he has everything in his power, he tells them he wishes to try and win Emily for his wife.

Emily and Regan marry, but her brother, full of hatred for Regan, becomes an agitator, and rouses the men to strike against his brother-in-law. Things become really serious now for Regan. Scanlan, the workman's delegate, comes to Regan and lays down the terms that young Griswold has dictated to them. Regan laughs and defies, and Scanlan becomes abusive. Regan strikes him and he falls. Regan in prison, McCoy comes to him and says his wife insists that he give himself up. Regan will not hear of this, and sends him home. But McCoy goes straight to the judges and makes an affidvait that proves Regan innocent. Emily comes to visit her husband. He gives into her hands the mortgages of all the property, with which to do as she likes. But in Emily's heart a deep love has grown for her husband and before they leave the prison for home, Regan has learned that Emily is a most faithful wife. Regan and his wife never forget the devotion of the faithful McCoy, and are last seen as Godfather and Godmother to his son and heir.

THE CARPET FROM BAGDAD (Selig—Five Parts—May 3).—Mohomed is the guardian of the Sacred Carpet of Bagdad which was placed in the innermost recesses of the mosque, and the story opens at the evening hour of prayer when the Pasha tells Mohomed to guard the Sacred Carpet with his life. Arthur Wadsworth a New York banker, makes the discovery that his younger brother has defaulted to the extent of a small sum. Given his choice by the grasping elder brother of either imprisonment or disinheritance, Horace Wadsworth chooses the latter and loses a million dollars which accrues to the advantage of the grasping brother.

A year later George A. P. Jones, of the firm of Mortimer & Jones, dealers in antique rugs, sails for Cairo, Egypt, on his annual purchasing trip. He leaves his palatial dwelling in the hands of his agent and butler. Horace Wadsworth, now known as "Ryanne," returns from abroad "broke," is refused assistance by his brother, Arthur. The outcast plans revenge. The close proximity of the Wadsworth bank and the Jones home suggests a medium for his vengeance. Horace has become a member of an international gang of crooks, and follows the trail of Jones. Horace learns from some wine-befuddled camelman the whereabouts of the Sacred Yhiordes, known as the Carpet of Bagdad. He persuades Mohomed, guardian of the Sacred Carpet, to permit him to join his caravan to Bagdad. In the meantime, Horace has cabled to Callahan, a confederate, who promises to keep Horace advised as to Jones' whereabouts.

Mrs. Chedsoye, her daughter, Fortune, and Major Callahan, arrive in Egypt. Mrs. Chedsoye and Callahan are also members of the band of criminals with which Horace is affiliated. Fortune knows nothing of her mother's secret machinations. It is plotted that Horace steal the Sacret Carpet. Sell it to Jones for a large sum, and then the party will utilize Jones' home in New York in order to rob the Wadsworth bank adjacent. Horace is taken by Mohomed to the recesses where the carpet is hanging. That night Horace overcomes the guardians of the precious tapestry, after a fierce struggle, seizes the rug and decamps. Mohomed vows by the Beard of the Prophet that he will return the Sacred Rug to the temple.

Jones meets Callahan, Mrs. Chedsoye and her daughter, and immediately becomes interested in Fortune. Mohomed assumes a disguise and watches Horace, who has Jones visit his room in the hotel and shows him the stolen Prayer Rug. Jones' enthusiasm gets the better of his judgment and he buys the tapestry. He then tells Fortune of his purchase. Suspicious of her mother and apprehensive of some crookedness, Fortune is greatly worried. Fortune questions her mother and Major Callahan concerning the rug and of their designs on Jones. Fortune steals the key to Jones' hotel room, enters during his absence and takes the rug from his trunk and hides it in her own room with a roll of steamer rugs.

Mohomed has Horace's name forged to a note to Fortune. He receives no satisfaction from Jones or Horace regarding the Prayer Rug, and plans a wholesale kidnapping to the desert. With his companions, Mohomed kidnaps Jones, Horace and Fortune and takes them, bound and gagged, into the great Sahara. Wallace, another of the conspirators, in the meantime, has started to New York City with forged letters to Jones' agent, so that entrance to Jones' home can be made during his absence and from there a tunnel can be cut into the Wadsworth Bank. Giving Fortune up for lost, her mother and Major Callahan also leave for New York without her and unconsciously take the precious rug with them. In New York, Wallace presents his forged credentials and is given access to Jones' home.

In the meantime, in the the desert, Jones tells Mohomed that he has not the rug. Fortune overhears the statement and says to Mohomed: "I have the rug. I stole it; if I produce it will you let us all go?" Mohomed agrees to this and sends a messenger on his swiftest camel to the hotel. Upon arriving there the messenger bearing a note from Fortune to her mother, learns that the woman has left for New York City. Mohomed resolves to torture Jones, Horace and Fortune to death for apparently lying to him. As Mohomed approaches the cowering prisoners prepared to wreak vengeance a sandstorm arises. Following the storm, the prisoners attract the attention of another caravan which is led by Englishmen and they are saved from death and Mohomed strides away. In Damascus, Jones gives Horace money, and Horace leaves at once for New York, where Fortune's mother, Major Callahan and Wallace have preceded him. Fortune and Jones lost in love, follow on another steamer. In the Jones dwelling, Horace is enthusiastically greeted by Mrs. Chedsoye, Callahan and Wallace. Money is brought into the room where they meet.

. Jones, upon arriving in New York, goes immediately to his agent, where he learns of the forgery that gave a band of crooks access to his home. With Horace's brother, he rushes to the dwelling and, through a window sees the conspirators handling ill-gotten gold and viewing the Prayer Rug. Jones accosts the crooks with a drawn revolver. Horace tells him that he wants his million dollar inheritance. "I will give you all two hours before I notify the police," Jones informs the band, while Horace's brother fondles the money that has been taken from his bank. As the picture closes, with the love light shining in the eyes of Fortune and Jones, away across the seas and into the Orient, Mohomed, former guardian of the Sacred Carpet, stands at the seashore, his eyes strained westward. With true Oriental fatalism, he bows in resignation to the will of Allah. The precious Prayer Rug is gone, never to return. Mohomed did his best. He dare not return to his beloved Bagdad, but he raises his eyes and mutters: "What is to be, will be; Allah be praised."

LITTLE SUNSET (Bosworth-Morosco—Four Parts).—Little Sunset Jones, son of a professional baseball player, is a fiery, red-haired little bantam about six years old, and about three feet high. He "scraps." He "umpires," and his one great hero is a certain famous centerfielder on a major league team. This is one, Gus Bergstrom, nicknamed the country over "The Terrible Swede" for his phenomenal batting and fielding, and said to be the richest player in professional ball.

Little Sunset's father is eventually signed to play shortstop on this famous team, and as Sunset is motherless, his father is obliged to take him on the trips with him. He at once becomes the pet of the players and they make him their mascot and bat boy. As it turns out his one particular "booster" among the players is the Terrible Swede himself, a silent, good-natured, clean-living fellow, who has been in the game for fifteen years, and is tired of it, and is much more interested in his large realty holdings at home.

"Little Sunset" and the noted ball player strike up a deep friendship. They become inseparable companions. The small boy seems to awaken a fatherhood in the heart of the slow, stolid but honest ball player, and he delights to surprise his tiny pal with little gifts and remembrances so dear to boyhood.

In midseason, Bergstrom loses an important game by colliding with another outfielder in playing a fly ball and the manager roasts him. Eager to get out of baseball anyway, the star outfielder quits the team and returns home to devote himself to his business interests. He might have been lost to the game for good but his fellow-townsmen get after him so hard he is driven back to take part in the pennant race in which he is badly needed. But their indignation is nothing compared with the scorn of "Little Sunset," and the big athlete's shame and helplessness before the denunciations of his little pal for deserting the team is a very funny situation. But timely home runs cinching the pennant appeases the fans, and a gold watch and much diplomacy win back "Little Sunset."

WITHOUT A COUNTRY (Four Parts—May 10).—The members of the "Sidi" sect are informed that the Chancellor of State intends to submit to the Prince a bill calling for their persecution. Judith, the daughter of Samuel Hurst, a wealthy jeweler and member of the sect, is in love with the Prince, but is rebuked by her father for being in love with their persecutor. Gregory, a clerk in the employ of Hurst, whose infatuation with Judith is not reciprocated, discovers a letter from the Chancellor asking Hurst to call to do some work for him, and brands him a traitor at the meeting of the sect. A frenzied mob storms the old man's house, but the Prince himself appears and quickly disperses the crowd. That night, observed only by Gregory, Judith elopes with the Prince. Though ignorant of the fact, Samuel Hurst is denounced, but is promised exoneration if, through his daughter, he can influence the Prince to reject the bill. In this he succeeds and is exonerated.

But the Chancellor orders his henchmen to gather all the soldiers they can rely upon. The Prince and Judith, realizing that the joy of life for them is ended, ascend the highest mountain peak, bid "Fare-Well" to the world, and leap to Eternity. The order for the expulsion is put into the effect that night, and as the vast numbers of the sect leave the country, Samuel Hurst comes upon the lifeless bodies of his daughter and her royal sweetheart.

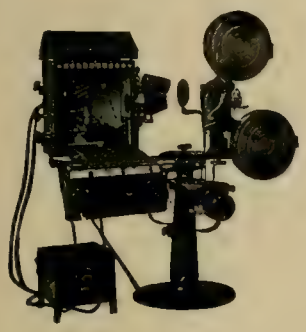
Read letter



April 27, 1915.

Gentlemen:

If you are not now in receipt of two Motiograph Heads for repair you soon will be. I forwarded them to you yesterday. They have been in use for 4 years and I want them thoroughly overhauled, make them as near like new as you can and for the —— sake rush this order regardless of cost, and return by express. I have two new —— machines in their place, but I can't get results. I have a record of having the best pictures in this vicinity and I want to hold it. With the Motiograph I have been able to have a better picture than my competitors have had with —— and —— machines—so please rush the machines back and allow me to hold my record, as my patrons are all kicking about the projection of the new machines.

Please rush, as I am now satisfied the Motiograph is the best machine made.

Yours,

(Signed) (Name given on request.)

If a 4-year-old Motiograph gives better results than New Machines of other make—What about the Late Model MOTIOGRAPH? It will pay you to investigate.

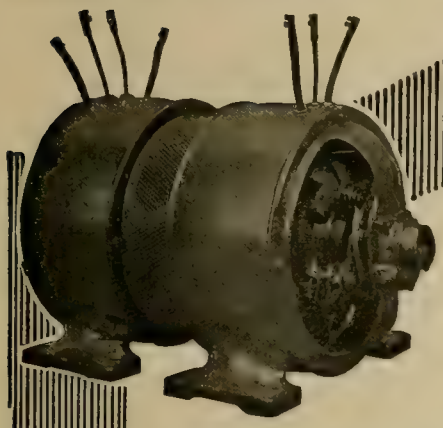
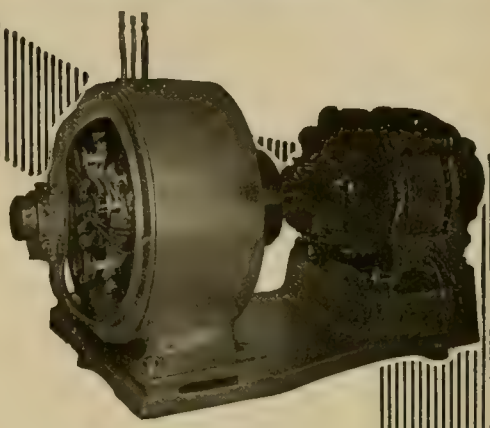
BETTER LIGHT LESS CURRENT



The DC Compensarc lowers the voltage of a direct current supply to that required at the lamp without needless waste.

The AC Compensarc cuts ⅔ from your lighting bill if you use alternating current.



The AC to DC Compensarc will transform alternating into direct current and reduce the voltage at the same time without needless waste.

No matter what current you have---Alternating or Direct---or what voltage or frequency, one of the will enable you to secure a light that will give those clear, bright pictures that everybody now demands.

What's the use of paying extra money for special screens, projecting machines, and first run films and then spoil the whole result with poor light? With the Fort Wayne Compensarcs you can get any kind of light you want regardless of the kind or quality of your current supply.

The Compensarcs will give you

STEADY LIGHT. No flickering, no sputtering, even when changing intensities or from one machine to another.

WHITE LIGHT. No yellow streaks, no ghosts.

BRIGHT LIGHT. Three times the light with two-thirds the current.

They are safe, efficient, easy to operate, fool proof and reliable.

Compensarcs are so commonly found in motion picture theatres that many people now call all current saving and transforming devices by that name.

FILMS

Are the result of persistent effort, backed by the experience of one of the first makers of pictures, to produce the finest one reel comedies possible.

The success of this effort is evidenced by the remarkable vogue MinA Films have attained in a few months.

There is a vast difference between MinA Films and the ordinary run of makeshift funny pictures. MinA comedies are the product of comedy specialization, hence original in conception, individual in construction, and distinctive in creation. They add strength to the program of any theatre.

A single reel MinA released every Thursday on the

Stockton's Scriptwriting Service

To aid those who wish to guard against the formation of bad writing habits, or who wish to estimate their progress, I offer the following service:

Script Criticism For a fee of two dollars for each reel, I will read your manuscript and write a personal letter, pointing out the faults of plotting, technical development, manuscript preparation, etc. Sometimes I can help you to make the script salable, but I do not guarantee a sale. I do not revise manuscript; I do not typewrite it, nor do I offer it for sale. I simply write you a letter that tells you what the trouble is.

Plot Estimates If your stories do not sell and you want to know why, send me five synopses and one full script. I will criticise the script and tell you whether it is your plot or your development that is wrong. The fee for this service is $5 for the five synopses and additional plot. Synopses must not run more than 300 words each. Send a synopsis of your undeveloped plot and fee of one dollar and you will be advised as to whether it will pay you to develop the same.

Please Note My fees do not include envelopes or return postage. Send prepaid and self addressed return envelope and remit in New York exchange; not local checks. I reserve the right to return unread (with fee) any story or plot that does not warrant treatment. All scripts must be typewritten.

Selig

"A-L-L A-B-O-A-R-D!!"

The gentlemanly Conductor, spic and span in white cap and gold-braided uniform with time-piece in hand, stands at attention. He shouts those magical words: "All Aboard"—The Selig Exposition Flyer, a train de luxe of combination baggage car, diner and Pullmans, rolls slowly from the Chicago station to the accompaniment of hearty farewells from friends and relatives of the happy, smiling tourists—

AND WE ARE FAIRLY STARTED ON OUR WAY FOR A SEVENTEEN DAYS' TOUR OF PLEASURE AND PROFIT THROUGH "GOD'S COUNTRY!"

And when "All Aboard" is sounded won't you be there? Don't you know that you owe yourself and the good wife and the kiddies an outing? And such an outing! We'll tour the great cities of Denver, of Salt Lake, of San Francisco, of Los Angeles, of San Diego, of Santa Barbara! We'll ride on San Francisco Bay, take a peek into Chinatown—view Pike's Peak, Grand Canyon, Garden of the Gods! See Cripple Creek and the silver mines—Bathe in the blue and cooling waters of the Pacific Ocean.

AND WE WILL VISIT TWO GREAT EXPOSITIONS, NATIONAL CONVENTION OF MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS, THE SELIG JUNGLE-ZOO, ETC.!

There is the frontier town of Caliente, Nevada, one of the few remaining communities reminiscent of Bret Harte stories—Mr. James Ryan, who might have stepped right out of one of B. M. Bower's novels, owns thousands of acres of cattle land near Caliente. On Ryan's ranches will be found prototypes of "Chip of the Flying U," "Weary Willie," and the rest of the cowpunchers.

AND MR. RYAN AND THE COWBOYS ARE GOING TO ACCORD AN OLD-FASHIONED RECEPTION TO SELIG MOVIE SPECIAL TOURISTS!

Gee, but there's going to be great stuff handed out on the Selig tour which starts from Chicago on Thursday, July 8th! Citizens of Catario, California, are to meet us with wagons loaded with luscious peaches. The young ladies of Santa Barbara will scatter perfumed blossoms along our pathway. Citizens of San Francisco, Los Angeles and elsewhere are preparing special entertainments.

I MUST LET YOU DO THE TALKING FOR ME!

THIS is my "Thank you!" to the exhibitors—everywhere. The letters you are writing me make me feel that my hope and your wish are realized. If the Thanhouser and Falstaff films deserve only one small part of the kind things you have said for them I am pleased—just pleased; that's all I can say.

When I read such telegrams as that from Mr. Graham, manager of Milwaukee's magnificent Butterfly Theatre, who tells me that my product fulfills my promises—why, pages of type become too weak to convey my feelings!

These are the sentiments that the Thanhouser and Falstaff releases will continue to justify.

How to Make Money

by Lewis J. Selznick

No. 17

This series of articles is planned to make money for you—to show you why my ideas have succeeded—and why they will succeed for you if you will weigh each one carefully. Some of them will sound egotistical. I want them to—it's the only way I can drive home my arguments.

Taking a Leaf from a Department Store's Sales Book

One of the wide awake exhibitors handling the World Film program, got an idea from a sale which was held by a local store in which they offered the best sellers from different lines of merchandise.

He advertised a "best sellers" week in pictures. From the World features which he had run, he picked the seven pictures that had appealed most to the people in his town and advertised that they would be run at his theatre, one each day, during "best sellers" week and give everybody in the town an opportunity to see the greatest pictures which he had had during the season.

The fact that he could only use seven features and that he used World Film for all of the seven, proved his faith not only in World Film, but in the argument which we have advanced for a year that a good feature will get more attention and more money when repeated than it did the first time.

Not only does this idea give you an opportunity to advertise the pick of great features, but it also will give you the benefit of the "word to mouth" advertising and the additional patronage that the features will draw. One of the ideas which we have consistently advocated is to run a big picture more than one day. Three days advertising and three days showing make more money for the exhibitor.

For every picture fan who does see a big picture, there are three or four people who miss it for one reason or another. You can get them by giving them a chance to come the next day.

The advertising that every big picture receives will bring out a great many people who go only when something unusual is shown. Here are the proofs—from people who have asked for re-runs.

"I cannot refrain from writing you about 'HEARTS IN EXILE.' If possible, I would like this back by the 23rd of the month. PRINCESS THEATRE, COLORADO SPRINGS, COL."

"We have recently begun running your productions for several days each and have done this successfully with practically all of your recent productions.

"Though our house seats more than 2,000, we find that a World Picture, properly advertised, will draw crowds for three or four days from a considerable distance. DAVID V. PICKER, BURLAND THEATRE, NEW YORK."

"I consider ROBERT WARWICK in 'ALIAS JIMMY VALENTINE,' one of the finest productions I have had. Will consider it an exceptional favor it you will book it to us for return production. A. H. BLANK, GARDEN THEATRE, DES MOINES, IOWA."

"Critics said that they have never seen a better picture than BEATRIZ MICHELENA in 'Mignon'. Would there be any trouble in booking this soon? S. H. FREEMAN, PRINCESS THEATRE, URBANA, ILL."

Here is a copy of a telegram:

"MIGNON RIOT CAPACITY HOUSE WANT A RETURN GIVE DATE LATER.

INSURE YOUR BANK ACCOUNT by giving your patrons UNIVERSAL satisfaction

"THE WITCH OF SALEM TOWN"

Mary Fuller in a thrilling 2 reel VICTOR drama

The story of a beautiful waif who is looked on with suspicion by her Puritan neighbors.

When her foster mother dies she finds a home with friends but is followed by her persecutors and finally flees to the woods. John, her friend's son, falls in love with her and she cures his mother of a serious illness by means of herbs. She is seized, accused as a witch and in the final scene, burned at the stake.

"SHATTERED MEMORIES"

A magnificent 3 reel GOLD SEAL, Memorial Day picture, featuring Robert Leonard and Ella Hall.

Jasper, a Union soldier, hides the regimental flag just before a battle in which he is wounded by a Confederate spy who takes his clothes leaving his own gray uniform. Returning thus clad with his memory gone through his injury, he is imprisoned as a spy by his own people. The prison is blown up by a shell and he is found by the Confederates who think him one of their own men. After the war he returns North and is present at a Memorial Day celebration in his own town where the sight of his old sweetheart, still waiting for him, brings back his memory of the old days.

"YOU CAN'T ALWAYS TELL"

A modern story of intense interest, with Wm. Garwood and Violet Mersereau. 2 reels. IMP.

Old man Sloane, a self-made millionaire, insists that any man may become a gentleman. To prove it he takes Larry O'Neill from the mill and launches him into society. Mildred is a wealthy girl who is attracted by Larry. One day he kisses her but panic stricken, flees back to the mills. He returns to work but cannot forget Mildred. He studies hard and soon becomes superintendent of the mills. Again he meets Mildred and this time there is no misunderstanding.

"TRICKERY"

A powerful 2 reel LAEMMLE Society drama. Features Frank Lloyd, M. K. Wilson & Helen Leslie

A powerful story of a weak son who succumbs to the wiles of a siren. Rejected by his father, she will not let him go, even though his father is brought to the brink of death. However, she is foiled through the loyalty of the family physician and Edgar at last wakes up to his folly and the love of his beautiful foster sister, Doris.

"THE PURSUIT ETERNAL"

A mysterious and romantic 2 reel IMP drama with Frances Nelson Hobart Henley and Al Holubar

Grace, a wealthy girl, determines to find love in her own way. Coming to New York, she sees Stanton Leeds and determines to find out all about him. In a dream he sees himself rescuing a strange damsel in distress whom he is forced to marry. The dream turns out a reality and they find they are mutually attracted.

"A MODERN ENOCH ARDEN"

A powerful BIG U 3 reel, heart interest drama. Features W. C. Dowlan, EdwardSloman and Adele Lane

Courtney has become involved with Arnold, a stockbroker, who insists on his daughter, Janet, as the price of saving him from ruin. A year of married life disillusions Janet who discovers her husband's faithlessness. Returning home she is followed by her husband who, in a dispute, kills her father. Hiding himself, he is supposed a suicide but goes out West where he kills another man. Reading of his wife's second marriage, he plans to return and blackmail her, but entering the house is shot by her in mistake for a burglar.

"THE TRAIL OF THE UPPER YUKON"

A marvelous 2 reel REX Alaskan story featuring Ben Wilson & Dorothy Phillips

A stirring story of the Alaskan gold fields. Garrick, a born fighter, loves Marcia who is also sought by Hercules, a "bad man." Forbes, a tenderfoot, knew Marcia at home. For a time they are lovers but through Hercules' interference are estranged. After a terrible scene between the four, Marcia flies to the woods where she is found unconscious in the snow by Garrick, who carries her to the nearest camp where everything is explained satisfactorily.

If You Saw The Williamson Submarine Pictures

You Would Book Them Instantly

Just Read This:---

Last week we showed these pictures to one of the largest exhibitors in the country.
He came in unwilling, deeply sceptical as to the whole business but broad minded enough to see for himself if the accounts of them had been exaggerated or not. He didn't believe such things were possible and was firmly convinced in his own mind, the whole thing was a fake but before very long he warmed up and when half the show was over he had become just as firmly convinced.
When the last of the pictures had been shown, he was so carried away by his enthusiasm that he applauded vigorously.

If a hardened exhibitor can get carried away like this, what will the public do if you give them the chance to see these marvelous under water pictures?

They are real, true, thrilling. They appeal to every man, woman, boy or girl who sees them. The mysteries of the ocean bed are laid open for the first time, and once seen nothing can ever remove the impression they create.

Fortune Waits the Exhibitor

Who Is Awake to the Needs of the Hour

IT IS EASY TO MAKE MONEY

By Giving the Public What It Wants

Essanay has studied public sentiment. It is marching to the tune of progress. It has discarded "old time stuff." It has leaped from the sinking morass of worn out theories to the solid ground of new desires.

The public today demands clean photoplays. Questionable scenes offend many while plays of high moral sentiment please all.

The public insists that all plays be of a high standard. One poor play alienates your spectators. Everyone must be up to the mark.

The people now insist on real drama and comedy. They want plays that mean something, plays with a plot, plays that tell a story of real happenings of real people. The joys and sorrows and comedies of life are what interest all.

This is what Essanay is doing. This is how Essanay makes money for you.

Its plays are ALL clean. You see no Essanay rejections by the Censor boards. They are made clean to start with.

Its plays are standardized. Each must come up to that standard before Essanay will release it. You can depend on an Essanay play every time. You take no chances of a poor play being mixed in with the good.

Essanay plays are taken from stories and novels of the most popular authors. They are dramatized, not scenarioized, by real playwrights. Essanay insists on plays that are full of human interest.

They must contain thrilling action and dramatic intensity. They must contain a human problem.

THEY MAKE PEOPLE LAUGH
THEY MAKE THE PEOPLE CRY

But they leave everyone with that feeling of satisfaction that they have seen something worth while, that they have got their money's worth. This means they will come back to your theatre. It means the filling of all your seats and this means FEWER PICTURES—BETTER PICTURES—LONGER RUNS. This is the order of the future.

There is little doubt about it now. It is no longer a prophesy; it is actually going into effect.

The year past has been largely a scramble, without order or logic.

THE well-established daily change programs have gone steadily on, furnishing a solid undertone to the business. Now they are adding features, but with a clear idea ahead of furnishing a shorter program of higher quality and fit for a longer run than a daily change.

With features as a whole the production and exhibition of them have in a large measure been equally wild. Big and little houses have struggled to book them; big and little companies have competed in their production.

But the lines of cleavage have appeared and grow more and more distinct.

THE production and distribution of features is now in the hands of comparatively a few concerns. 1914 saw the disappearance of more than fifty of the smaller, weaker companies.

And just so with the theatres. The trend is strongly toward fewer and better theatres and a classification of these by style and class of program. What may be called the "Strand" style of program is just growing in popularity—that is a program consisting of a dramatic feature together with a comedy, a news pictorial, an educational.

ALL of which means FEWER PICTURES—BETTER PICTURES—LONGER RUNS.

But there is still chaos in the booking of pictures.

We have too many exchanges and with many of them a blind, reckless competition that is working much harm.

Their one aim seems to be to get bulk business, to secure the greatest possible number of customers.

IF Ajax Film can't put its service in a house at its price, it puts it in anyway, and two weeks later breaks its contract in favor of another house for a better price. This disorder seems to prevail quite generally.

THIS is wrong—unbusinesslike.

In the first place, bulk business does not pay an exchange and never did. An exchange makes more money out of fewer and better customers.

But there's the exhibitor to consider. It might seem as if this sharp competition benefited him. But it doesn't.

IF he has Ajax pictures for two weeks and then some other brand, and then some other, how is he to establish the name of his house, its kind of pictures, its character? How is he to participate in the benefits of the advertising the maker of the pictures does?

A FEW years ago a prominent clothing manufacturing house, backed by a big advertising campaign, went after bulk customers in this very same way. It got them; but a year later the concern reversed its policy.

Instead of putting its brand of clothing into two or more stores in a town or section of a large city, it selected one dealer and then protected him.

IT protected him against near-at-hand competition, and helped him sell more clothes through advertising and other sales help. All with the result that the concern sold more goods at less expense through one dealer than through three. And the dealer also made more money.

THE dealer in every business must be protected, not only for his sake, but also for the good of the manufacturer.

The exhibitor must be protected and supported. It is he alone who can raise and hold admission prices. It is he alone who takes in the stream of money that in turn supports the whole industry.

BETTER pictures he must have—pictures as excellent in amusement qualities as the magazine fiction which the millions read.

And sooner or later he must realize that better pictures mean fewer pictures and longer runs for them—not pictures turned out by the foot rule to make a daily change program, but pictures so good that they must be shown again.

BUT he needs protection.

He should get one service and hold it. He should be protected against competition. He should be able to advertise to a population sufficient to his seating capacity that he has such and such picture and that he alone has them.

Then he can afford to pay a satisfactory rental in return for this service from the manufacturer.

AND the latter, by cutting down an exorbitant and unnecessary distributing and printing expense can put more money into his pictures and make them better.

WILLIAM A. JOHNSTON.

Fewer Pictures
Better Pictures
Longer Runs

Paramount first originated these ideas. Paramount was organized for the purpose of putting them into practice in the motion picture industry. Paramount was the first concern to use them.

Fewer Exhibitors
Better Exhibitors
Protection to Exhibitors
Fewer Theatres
Better Theatres

Paramount also was the first to put these principles into operation, and introduced the Service Contract for the protection of exhibitors, thereby enabling them to operate better theatres and build better business.

That was a year ago—Then nearly everybody in the trade believed we were impractical dreamers.

Today the Motion Picture News, one of the leading trade papers, states editorially that the business of the future must be built upon these principles.

Motion Picture News is right. Paramount has proved step by step that its ideas are right. Others are now acknowledging it.

Fewer Pictures—Better Pictures—Longer Runs—Fewer Exhibitors—Better Exhibitors—Fewer Theatres—Better Theatres.

These ideas are now widely accepted by exhibitors. Other progressives are daily joining the Paramount ranks.

The LURE of

A Four Part Drama
From the Novel by Harold MacGrath

Here is a Mutual Master Picture that sets a new high standard in motion picture achievement—a screen portrayal of one of the most successful novels ever brought out. Taken from the book written by Harold MacGrath and published by Bobbs-Merrill Company. "The Lure of the Mask" reflects the unusual skill and craftsmanship for which the American Film Manufacturing Company is noted.

A Cast of Stars

Harold Lockwood Elsie Jane Wilson
Irving Cummings Lucy Payton
Hal Clements

"The Lure of the Mask" is a novel of world-wide reputation. It is fitting that such a noted subject be interpreted by an all-star cast. Harold Lockwood, whose name is a powerful factor in Filmdom, plays the lead. Opposite him is Elsie Jane Wilson, whose success in "Everywoman" has brought her fame everywhere. Irving Cummings, Lucy Payton, Hal Clements and a host of others complete a cast that will prove a magnet for any box office.

Produced by The American Film Mfg. Co.

Marc MacDermott as the Compelling Cavalier and Miriam Nesbitt as the Heroic Southern Girl in the

3-ACT FEATURE WAR ROMANCE

"SALLY CASTLETON, SOUTHERNER"

A Civil War Story without a battle. By Crittenden Marriott. Released Monday May 24th—3000 feet

Seldom is Marc MacDermott so happily cast as when the war-like cavalier roaming with his trusty sword ready to give battle to a nemesis Fate. And in depicting the girl who excites our admiration by loyalty to cause and self-sacrificing devotion to principle, there is no exponent of temperament or character on the screen to equal Miriam Nesbitt.

"Sally Castleton, Southerner," is a play which breathes with the powerful passions that drove men in the Civil War to heroic sacrifices. Marc MacDermott, as the soldier lover whom Fate has placed as a spy in a cause fighting against that of his sweetheart, gives a forceful and compelling portrayal that lifts it out of the classification of "acting." While Miriam Nesbitt, a Southern girl by birth, plays the fiery, loyal Southern lass whose love for her sweetheart is sacrificed to her cause, with that sureness of touch that distinguishes all her sympathetic characterizations. Produced by Langdon West.

Every week, in the Regular Service, Edison is putting out Features that are winning critic, patron and Exhibitor alike by reason of intrinsic worth—because they fulfill every acid test that a fickle pandered-to public can demand—plays that are powerful without resorting to the dregs of life—plays that strike home because they dramatize, to suspenseful degrees, life's most dramatic moments.

Strength—Not Length

"According To Their Lights"

"The Man Who Could Not Sleep"

Bessie Learn and Pat O'Malley in

A Heart-throbbing Tragedy of the Hills

"According To Their Lights"

The bold, free air of the mountaineers, who in their fierce love and hate, are a law unto themselves, has been wonderfully pictured in this two-reel tragedy of feature strength.

Bessie Learn, in her winsome fidelity to the unlettered mountain lass who aspired to learning and love, only to be shot to death on her mission of mercy, tears at our hearts with overpowering sympathetic appeal. No emotional depths that she has struck on the screen have approached the truthfulness and power of this pathetic figure and it alone ranks her in the forefront of emotional exponents. And every other character—with Pat O'Malley, Yale Benner, Margaret Prussing, Charles Sutton and the venerable William West—are lived with admirable discriminations. Direction by the author, Eugene Nowland. Released Friday, May 28th—2000 feet.

The Most Finished Artist On the Screen---

Marc MacDermott, Past Master of the Subtle, in

"THE MAN WHO COULD NOT SLEEP"

Not until you have witnessed this thoroughly remarkable picturization of a soul torn with regret and try to picture some other actor in the same role, do you realize just how pre-eminent is Marc MacDermott's art when it comes to portraying subtleties usually considered beyond the graphic scope of the screen. As a man cursed for injustice, with its sleepless nights ensuing, this theme appeals to the universal imagination and sympathy. An unusual picture, indeed. Direction John H. Collins. Released Wednesday, May 26th—1000 feet.

Wadsworth and Housman, in black face, in the corking comedy, "All Cooked Up." Released Tuesday, May 25th—1000 feet.

Raymond McKee, Dallas Welford and Yale Benner in the revival of the comedy, "The Dumb Wooing." Released Saturday, May 29th—1000 feet. Direction, Will Louis.

"THE GODDESS"

The Reviewer of the Dramatic Mirror is kind enough to say of the initial presentation of "The Goddess" at the Vitagraph Theatre:—

"The Vitagraph Company need not feel the slightest trepidation for the success of this, their first invasion of the serial field, for—judging from the introductory episodes, this picture will undoubtedly prove to be the greatest serial that has yet been produced. In the first place it has for a foundation a great big idea, and secondly—it is decidedly different from anything that has ever before been attempted. These two facts alone are enough to establish its success."

Mr. Reviewer merely reiterates our belief, which we have told you many times before.

The merit of the story is guaranteed by Gouverneur Morris and Charles W. Goddard and we need say no more than that the direction is by Ralph W. Ince with Anita Stewart and Earle Williams in the leading roles with publicity galore in all the leading newspapers.

Facts and Comments

THE legislature of Ohio has passed two important amendments to the present censor law both of which are objectionable. It seems a moral certainty that the amended bill will be signed by the governor. One of the amendments makes the exchange man equally liable with the exhibitor for the showing of any uncensored film. The other provision allows the Censor Board to designate practically as many assistants as they feel they ought to have. Everybody must have known from the beginning that three individuals could not intelligently examine all the films that were offered for exhibition in Ohio. There was some honest effort on the part of the then governor to select competent citizens of the state. Under the new dispensation the office boys and the messengers and the stenographers may be appointed as censors and no test of qualification is exacted or even suggested. The inherent absurdities of censorship are bound to crop out no matter which way the censors turn.

THE decision of the Federal Court for the District of New Jersey denying the prayer for an injunction against the collector of the port of Newark was foreshadowed in THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD of last week. The injunction was asked for to prevent the collector from interfering with the importation of the prize fight films. It looks at the present writing as if the men who are anxious to get these films into this country and who have invoked the law for this purpose must wait until their complaint against the collector will be argued and tried before the courts in the regular order of procedure. Judge Haight did not pass absolutely upon the issues presented. His decision merely means that no case for an injunction was made out. The writ of injunction is really a legal privilege, for the granting of which an extraordinarily strong case must be presented. The Court in handing down its adverse decision heeded the plea for urgency in the case by allowing an immediate appeal to the Circuit Court of Appeals which sits in Philadelphia. According to our news information, this appeal has already been argued and a decision by the Appellate Court will probably be made within the next week or so. Upon the decision of the Circuit Court of Appeals depends not only the fate of these prize fight films but probably the fate of all federal censorship schemes.

THE word "educational" as applied to many films thus labeled is a misnomer. With the market more open than ever before in the history of motion pictures the exhibitor will do well to revise his old and somewhat unfavorable opinion about "educationals." He is now in a position to choose and there is no branch of all the wide field of kinematography where the exercise of good judgment will more surely bring its reward. In the balancing of the modern motion picture entertainment the genuine educational picture with a strong entertainment value is as important as the multiple reel feature. There is a small stock of finely entertaining films which are educational incidentally rather than purposely. There are a few that are finely colored. Some of them are quite old, but that ought to be no objection if the reels are in good physical condition. We speak more particularly of the supply which Pathe, Gaumont and George Kleine have on hand. A little effort to get the best they and others have in that line will make your program look different and better than that of your competitor. A good "educational" well assembled with a little of the dramatic or picturesque element will often turn the balance in your favor.

A MEMBER of the staff of THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD had occasion the other day to see a series of re-issues of old Biographs. It was an impressive lesson. These single reels and others dating from that period challenge comparison with the multiple reel feature. There was no padding. The aim of the director was brevity and condensation. Space was precious and no scene was prolonged for a second beyond actual necessity. We were always sure of the packed essence and directorial skill abhorred dilution. As a whole, the industry has advanced marvelously and left the days of 1908 and 1909 far behind, but the art of condensation shown in many of the old single reels has never been surpassed. At its best the old school of "singles" accounted in good measure for the early popularity of the motion picture.

Sunday Opening---A New Departure

By W. Stephen Bush.

IT WOULD be difficult to exaggerate the importance of the action of our Court of Appeals in holding that the exhibition of moving pictures on Sunday is legal and that no town, city or county has the right to pass any ordinance to the contrary.

For the benefit of our readers not only in New York, but in every part of the country, we think it well to outline a brief history of the legal status of the motion picture in this state. We do this because the laws of other states on the subject of Sunday opening are much like our own here in New York, and because the courts in other states will surely be guided to some extent at least by the interpretation which the courts in this state have put upon the law. The history which we venture to sketch here is full of encouragement to the advocates of a liberal and modern Sunday. It, therefore, deserves the earnest study and attention not only of the exhibitors, but of the general public as well.

We take the main facts in the case from the decision of the late Justice Gaynor, rendered while he sat on the bench of the Appellate Division in the second department. The origin of the Sabbatarian laws goes back to the seventeenth century, when the observance of a still Sabbath on strictly mosaic principles was made one of the supreme tests of "godliness." We inherited this sort of legislation in all its "purity." Popularly these laws were known as "the blue laws." The spirit which breathed life into these statutes proceeded from the belief that man was made for the Sabbath, while the prevailing Christian doctrine outside the British Isles seemed to be that the Sabbath was made for man. We are not saying this in any controversial spirit, but because the statement is necessary to a thorough understanding of our present day situation. We do not, of course, for even a moment, mean to impugn the good faith and the motives of the men and women who still hold that a "still" Sabbath on the pattern of the Pharisees is essential to Christian life or to public life generally.

The spirit of the Sabbatarians a short time after the Revolution dictated the following law into the statute books of the state: "Things forbidden upon the first day of the week commonly called Sunday: All travel, servile work, all shooting, fishing, sporting, playing, horse racing, hunting or frequenting of tippling houses or any unlawful exercise or pastime." Later this provision of the general statutes of the state was copied into the Penal Code, which prohibited "all shooting, hunting, fishing, playing, horse racing, gaming or other public sports exercises upon the first day of the week commonly called Sunday." The late Justice Gaynor construed this statute as applicable to out-door sports or shows only and declared that the arrest of an exhibitor under the statute for keeping his theater open on Sundays was illegal. The exhibitor who had been convicted in the lower court was thereupon discharged.

A majority of the judges on the appellate bench agreed with Judge Gaynor, and his interpretation of the law has stood ever since and has now been sustained by the highest Court of the state.

The interpretation has been followed in several instances since notably in Binghamton and in Yonkers. The Board of Aldermen of Yonkers attempted to legislate on the subject of Sunday opening on their own account notwithstanding the law of the state. They were promptly called to task by the Appellate Division which has now been sustained by the Court of Appeals. We print the decision in another part of this issue.

The plain and simple English of the situation is this: Every exhibitor in the state of New York may open his theater on Sunday and any attempt on the part of the police to interfere is illegal and oppressive and may be stopped by an appeal to the courts. The local authorities may surround the granting of a license with certain conditions and restrictions as to the hours of opening and closing, but no subdivision of the state may override the general law of the state.

In advising exhibitors to take advantage of this situation and to assert their undoubted legal rights we would like to couple the advice with a word or two of caution. If exhibitors will endeavor to pay some respect to the character of the day in the composition of their Sunday program they will come very near to disarming hostile criticism. The legislature which has just adjourned had considered a bill for closing the motion picture theaters on Sunday. The bill did not pass, but there is little doubt that its sponsors will be heard from again next year. If the exhibitors in this state use their right of conducting Sunday performances sensibly and discreetly the chances of an anti-Sunday bill in 1916 will be slim. If we are in a position to point to a clean and orderly conduct of motion pictures shown on Sunday we will present an unanswerable argument in favor of Sunday motion pictures.

We urge every exhibitor to be careful in the selection of his Sunday program and to avoid even the appearance of evil. We do not mean to say that he should run nothing but religious films on that day. Even if he were so inclined he could not do that for more than three or four Sundays because the supply of good religious subjects is notoriously small. We do say, however, that all comedies with even a taint of vulgarity should be scrupulously avoided. The biggest and by far the most successful motion picture theater in the world is never without a scenic or educational picture on its program. Let the exhibitor hunt for pictures of this type; pictures that combine instruction with entertainment. There are such pictures, and they make ideal spots on a Sunday program. A lecture on Sunday is another suitable feature. Let the public be taught that the screen does not only amuse, but that it is also capable of imparting knowledge, which is interesting and useful. The writer knows from his own observation that the motion picture has changed the character of many a rustic community, which before the advent of the picture was ignorant and narrow.

Above all things let the exhibitor assume a conciliatory attitude toward the men and women who from the best of motives may be opposed to motion picures on Sunday. The ignorance and narrowness of some of these people may indeed be invincible, but as a rule the appeal to reason wins out. Let the exhibitor make it known in his local papers that he proposes to run a special program on Sundays, and let him invite the clergymen and the editors and the teachers and the deacons to come and convince themselves that they are perfectly safe in either coming themselves or sending their children.

Sunday opening in New York and to a certain extent in the whole country is now on trial. It depends on the exhibitor himself whether it has come to stay.

Skeleton and Soul*

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE scenario of a photodrama has been very reasonably compared to the foundation and framework of a house—even in its simplest form it is the basis on which the visualized story is built, and a genuine working scenario rises so high as to establish the entire general design. No matter how elaborate and beautiful the finished structure, its character is bound to be deeply affected by what gave it configuration, but it might be nearer the truth to call it a skeleton. It is a dead thing in physical appearance, must be covered with the pulsing flesh of life before it is particularly attractive, but with it goes that invisible spirit which is only manifested in the complete form, the soul of the story.

Strip a popular novel of its highly-colored verbiage; denude it of those words which control the writer's flights of imagination; remove superfluous traces of the medium through which he has given his ideas expression, even to his literary tricks of exciting curiosity and fanning the flame of suspense, and it is possible to reach a scenario of the book. There remains the motive, the characters, the situations, the incidents illustrating motive and character, and, if it is a story worth screen visualization, one dominating throught. These materials newly arranged in a continuous succession of dramatic scenes, by methods either analytic or synthetic, can be brought into an entirely new unity of narrative for direct presentation to the eye.

This new arrangement is so far removed from being that of stage plays, and to a less degree from most narrative arrangements of prose fiction, that it is perilous to quote from governing laws of the older arts. There is also a danger of imposing restrictions, the risk of replacing spontaneous composition with that of ineffective artificiality. But all story telling mediums are more or less akin, and what applies to one often applies to all, the adjustment of background to character, the focussing of attention upon people and events destined to play the leading parts in reaching desired results.

People sitting in the semi-obscurity of a motion-picture theater cannot lay aside the five-reel screen story and take it up again. They cannot refer back to what has not been made entirely clear to them. They are to watch the performance without intermissions. There must be a concentration of action and characterization in what is shown. Diversions so dear to the dramatist and to the novelist are worse than confusing—they are destructive to sustained interest. Pretty little side stories of subordinate characters are not for the screen. A handful of main characters is enough for practical as well as for artistic reasons—close up scenes are in very small scope, and the average mixed audience becomes easily confused in attempting to follow what is happening to more than five people in the swiftly changing scenes.

The opening pictures may well be devoted to the characterization of one or more principals, even if their lives are moving in widely-separated channels. The hero may be a soldier dominated for the moment by war lust, the heroine a hospital nurse, saving life while he is bent on destroying it. He may be a gentle clergyman expounding on faith, she a girl of the slums, an unconscious Christian in good deeds. One whole reel of a strong play was effectively devoted to the characterization of a two-sided man about whom leading events clustered. The audience knew him when he came to be the important factor in all that transpired.

Prompt characterization not only wins sympathetic interest, but it aids in making a logical series of events plausible. During this preparation, in itself a delicate forewarning of complications to follow, there should be an equally delicate intimation of the story's trend, just a few notes of the theme may be sounded. There is a wrong being done; there is a complication set up which is bound to result in cross purposes or a clash of individual desires; there are entanglements to be straightened out; there is a theory to be proven; there is a problem to be solved—whatever the eventual scenes of tension, however, the main action should be preceded by an unfolding of the minds and hearts of those who interpret that action.

What are the people in the story? What are their relations to one another? What compelling influences are bringing them together? What needs readjustment in their conduct? Intense drama is concerned largely with those forms of evil which grow out of ignorance, principally our ignorance of one another. We lead up to a crisis, an effect of which lack of enlightenment is usually the cause. False ideas in the mind of one cause the mental suffering of others. Out in the audience our sympathies are enlisted, and, from our superior standpoint, we enjoy having error punished as an example for certain people we know.

Having introduced the characters and opened up a possibility of struggle between the opposing forces, during three or four reels, we begin somewhere about half past four an exciting promise of consequences. That promise must be fulfilled. If the story becomes entangled, there can be no shirking of responsibility by dying confessions—the situation should be worked out with the same skill that worked it up, else fine structure and artistic treatment are in vain. We have built a noble house and covered it with a leaky roof.

It is not fair to judge any art by its immature examples, else we would infer from screen stories that the sole object of following a pictured narrative to the end is that of watching two young people embrace just as the orb of day sinks behind distant hills, or the fire in the grate grows dim. Of course the human race must be perpetuated, but an audience may grow skeptical if Washington is shown crossing the Delaware that Jennie may be enfolded in the arms of Jim. Nine out of ten screen stories do not end that way—they subside. The scenario writer who offers such a spineless compromise after a crisis of definite and logical conclusion lacks craftsmanship if not artistic conscience.

With a definite theme in mind, with salient qualities of leading characters defined, the author of a five-reel story has time to dispose of minor conclusions on his way to the main point. As far as it is posssible to do so, he should clear his path of lesser issues on approaching the plot culmination, so that it may immediately precede his final scenes. That pictured stories so often suffer from one form or another of anticlimax is largely due to the absence of a complete working scenario in the beginning—an ineffectual attempt is made to replace forethought with badly articulated afterthought.

Above all things should a scenario convey the spirit of the story, even if this has to be done by explanatory foot notes. That people sit emotionless before screen portrayals is less due to faults of the medium than to false use of it. Failure of the author's creative imagination far more than faulty instrumentality or inadequate interpretation is accountable for soulless photodrama.

Fight Film Appeal Heard

Case of Willard-Johnson Pictures, Turned Down by Judge Haight, Gets Speedy Hearing on Appeal to Higher Court.

JUDGES Buffington, McPherson and Woolley, sitting in the United States District Court of Appeals in Philadelphia, Pa., Tuesday, May 11, heard the appeal taken by L. Lawrence Weber from the decision of Judge Haight of the United States District Court for New Jersey, handed down on May 6, refusing Mr. Weber's application for an injunction against Collector Freed of Newark, N. J., which was sought to compel the Collector to admit the Willard-Johnson fight pictures to the United States.

Immediately upon the calling of the case, Mr. Weber's attorneys launched into the basic presentation of their client's justification in appealing from the findings of Judge Haight, and succeeded in bringing out forcibly their contentions. Attorney Towne stated that his client's object in importing the said photographic-films is for the purpose of publicly exhibiting them in the United States, under his personal management, control and supervision, and not for the purpose of traffic, sale or commerce, and that the present proceeding is an application for an injunction the effect of granting which would be to permit the entry of the films in question into the United States upon payment of the duty provided by law, as specified in that paragraph of the Tariff Act of October 31, 1913, now in force, and which reads: "Photographic-film positives, imported in any form, for use in any way in connection with moving picture exhibits, including herein all moving, motion, motophotography or cinematography film pictures, prints, positives or duplicates of every kind and nature and whatever substance made, one cent per linear or running foot: Provided, however, that all photographic-films imported under this section shall be subjected to such censorship as may be imposed by the Secretary of the Treasury."

It was also pointed out by the appellant that the Secretary of the Treasury has never prescribed rules and regulations to give effect to the proviso of this paragraph.

The complainants furthermore contended that the law under which Collector Freed's action was taken is unconstitutional and void, in so far as it is relied upon by the defense in refusing to permit the complainant to enter, and pay duty upon the films herein questioned and beyond the power of Congress to enact under that section of the Constitution commonly called the Commerce Clause.

Assistant United States District Attorney Bodine based his side of the arguments on the similarity of the question at stake in this case to the one involved at the time of the hearing of the many lottery cases in different sections of the country, when the Government contested the banishing of lottery in the United States on the grounds of its being commerce; and which in some respects is the most notable case yet decided by the Supreme Court under the Commerce Clause. Mr. Bodine claiming that the lottery case possesses a nearer resemblance to the present case than almost any other, explained that the case was most fully taken up in his printed brief which was before the court, thus eliminating the necessity of his entering deeply into this phase of his contentions.

Considerable confidence in his ultimate success was expressed by both the counsel for the defence and the complainant, and from the nature of the case, it being one which admittedly necessitates quick action on the part of the court, it is expected that an opinion may be handed down at almost any time within the next few or several days.

SEEK ENTRY FOR RITCHIE-WELSH FIGHT PICTURES.

The question of permitting motion picture films of the Ritchie-Welsh fight to be exhibited in this country is being considered by Judge Hough of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, following an argument on an application for an injunction to restrain the government from enforcing a ban on the fight films.

At the conclusion of the argument on the application Judge Hough voiced the opinion the exhibition of the films depends on whether the mill staged in London was a boxing exhibition or what is popularly styled a prize fight. The court expressed the opinion the public morals should be safe guarded by placing a ban on films reproducing the brutalities of the ordinary prize fight but indicated that there should be no objection to the exhibition of films illustrating the art of boxing.

Counsel for George Considine, who is seeking to bring the films into this country for exhibition, contended that the mill was merely a boxing exhibition and that the films are splendid illustrations of the boxers' art and skill and submitted affidavits and briefs in support of this contention.

Assistant District Attorney Walker opposed the application asserting the Ritchie-Welsh mill was clearly a prize fight and pointed to the fact that it was fought for the championship of the world.

In discussing the moral effect of prize fighting and the display of motion pictures of prize fights Judge Hough remarked his father whom he considered a "better man than I am" had witnessed prize fights although he had never attended one. The judge pointed out standards of public morality and decency change keeping step with the advance of progress and consequently things which were considered perfectly proper a few years ago are now under the ban.

Whatever Judge Hough's decision may be it is not considered probable it will have any bearing on the attempt to introduce films of the Johnson-Willard fight into this country.

Tom North

AFTER an unusually successful nineteen months as the branch manager in San Francisco for George Kleine Attractions, Tom North has resigned. Mr. North has signed up with the Big Four, Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essanay, Inc., to manage the new office which he is to open in Portland, Ore. It will be a matter of regret throughout the film trade of San Francisco and California that Mr. North is to transfer his activities to the north. He has made many friends in the city by the Golden Gate, out of the industry as well as in it. He admits it is not an easy matter to break away. In San Francisco Mr. North has taken an interest in civic as well as in trade matters. He is a Mason and a Shriner and also an Elk; he is a member of the Press Club, of the Union League, of the Screen Club and also of the Indoor Yacht Club. He was the moving spirit, as he has been one of the foremost members of the Film Board of Trade of San Francisco.

Tom North.

Tom North knows the amusement business from all angles. It is for about twenty years that he has been following it. His first experience was with Price's floating opera, which put on shows on the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers. Then he was with the Jule Walters "sidetrack," old-time melodramas. The second season he was playing the piano and managing the show. The third season he had a show of his own. In the summer he went with Gentry Brothers' dog and pony show. Then, with Charles Whittaker, he billed Billy Clifford as a matinee idol. It was the first musical melodrama that went over the circuit, and was very successful, the association being terminated by Mr. Whittaker's death.

For four years Mr. North was with Lincoln J. Carter. William Raynor, at present in the Kleine offices in New York, was in the executive offices of the concern in Chicago at the time. For two seasons Mr. North handled dramatic shows for Arthur C. Hastings. Then he was with the Leffler-Bratton company, first doing the advertising and then handling the production, which was "The Newlyweds and Their Baby," founded on the McManus cartoons. It was here he originated the catchline by which the show became known, "The 60½ People Show," the fraction, of course, referring to the baby. Mr. North also had summer experience with the Ringling Brothers' Circus as press man. He booked and handled road attractions for Harry Askin of the Sell Opera House, Chicago, for three seasons. Then he was engaged by J. F. McCarahan, general manager of George Kleine, to go to the Coast. For a short time he was in Los Angeles and then was transferred to San Francisco to open offices and put out road companies. At one time he had sixteen of these out, covering five of the big Kleine subjects. Tom North is a regular fellow.

George Spoor Talks

President of Essanay Tells of the Development of the "V. L. S. E." Idea.—The Aim of Essanay.

ALTHOUGH George K. Spoor, president of the Essanay Company of Chicago, and an officer and leader in all of the ventures undertaken by the so-called "licensed" manufacturers of films, has taken an important part in the development of the industry, it is seldom that he has anything to say on the subject of his business activities for publication. If a newspaper writer visited Mr. Spoor in quest of information on trade matters it is more likely that he would get a good story about his high-powered speed boat or his latest deal in Chicago real estate—two things in which Mr. Spoor is known to specialize.

George K. Spoor.

But the importance of the latest venture with which Mr. Spoor is connected—the V. L. S. E. Inc.—has induced him to loosen up and tell a few things concerning its inception and, incidentally, something about the efforts and aims of the company he represents. Upon his return from a recent trip to New York Mr. Spoor was seen at his office in Chicago, and after some hesitancy quite natural to a man who works and seldom talks, he made the following observations:

"To the uninitiated it might seem that this step was the work of a week," said Mr. Spoor. "Those who took active part in it know that it was the result of looking into the future years ago, of months and months of planning and hard work to perfect details. The final plans or organization were completed quickly, but the basis of these plans grew out of long and careful study.

"Essanay was making definite plans for feature releases more than a year ago. Photoplay rights on novels that had been stamped with the approval of the public, and written by authors of world wide reputation, were being purchased and the books put into dramatic form. Before the consummation of the plans several features had been completed and were ready to offer to the public.

"This is but one step forward in the line of Essanay policy. It is but one step forward in the progress of the photoplay industry. Other and greater steps will follow.

"The motion picture industry has gone through a more rapid evolution than almost any other. It now has reached a solid and lasting basis, but there is no limit to its continued advance. It is the man of to-day who is planning for the needs and demands of the future who will be making a success ten years from now, just as it was the man who dreamed of the possibilities of the present time ten years ago who is in the producing business now.

"In 1895, when I was first making pictures, anything that would move on the screen would pass. Moving pictures were a novelty and everything was accepted. Then was conceived the 1,000 foot film with some connecting idea, though loosely constructed, and the picture was born.

"This gave way to the photoplay of the present, a play with a genuine plot, a picture with a problem of human life to unravel. And the photoplay still is in the making.

"Essanay has fought to bring the photoplay up to its present standard, to make all its plays of consistent worth, standardized plays; to inject realistic action into its dramas and do away with the old time fake camera tricks. It has aimed to make its plays of high moral standard, to raise the artistic value and to better the photographic work.

"It is not content, however, to stand on this. It is looking into the future. It hopes to raise a standard as much in the next ten years as it has in the past. It is seeking to find what the public wants tomorrow, that it may be first on the ground to supply the new needs and the new demands.

"It is still dreaming dreams and hammering away to make these dreams a reality, so that the photoplay of to-morrow will be a thing of art and beauty, while losing none of its human interest touch, the touch which always has and always will endear it to the mass of the people."

Big Screen Order

Cameoscope Corporation Makes Deal for One Thousand Picture Curtains With Simpson Company.

BUSINESS seems to be looking up in the line of motion picture screens. There has been quite some rivalry for orders among the various manufacturers of screens and reports of big commissions have been coming in quite frequently. The latest information contains what is probably the largest single order that has ever been given for screens and comes in the form of a copy of a letter to H. H. Stanton, manager of the Alfred L. Simpson, Inc., makers of the Simpson Solar Screen, at 113 West 132d street, New York. The letter reads as follows:

"My Dear Mr. Stanton: Enclosed please find contract for One Thousand (1,000) Simpson Solar Screens.

"In giving you this contract covering the exclusive metallic screen business for the Cameoscope machine, we do so only after having made rigid tests of all other metallic screens on the market, and we are thoroughly convinced that the merits of your screen so far exceed everything else that there is only one thing left for us to do.

"Assuring you of our entire business and wishing you every success in which you shall have our hearty co-operation, we beg to remain, yours very truly,

"CAMEOSCOPE CORPORATION,
"By Reuben S. Baldwin."

Guess that is some screen order.

Theodore Roberts Re-Engaged by Lasky

THEODORE ROBERTS, who is the acknowledged supreme star of the screen, has signed with the Lasky Feature Play Company to continue under this management for another year. In making this announcement Mr. Goldfish of the Lasky Company states that by his determination Mr. Roberts pays a wonderful compliment not only to the Lasky Company in particular but to the entire interest and future development of photodramatic work. During the year that Mr. Roberts has been under the Lasky management he has been literally deluged with propositions from various "legitimate" managers to return to Broadway. He has had offers of larger salaries than ever in his entire career, and promises of special star roles to be written especially for him by leading dramatists, but he has remained steadfast in his decision to continue before the camera.

Theodore Roberts.

When Theodore Roberts forsook Broadway and his hosts of friends to go to the Lasky studios in Hollywood, many people thought that he had made the mistake of his lifetime. But Mr. Roberts had been on the stage too many years to make such a mistake and was wise with that wisdom which can forsee the future in all branches of art. When Mr. Roberts began to make his screen appearances and his amazing characterizations were at once hailed as photodramatic revelations, his friends saw that he had chosen judiciously.

Some of the most important roles assumed by Theodore Roberts during the past year have been Sam Stone in "Bobby Burnit," Mike Reardon in "Ready Money," Grand Duke in "The Man from Home," the stellar role of "The Circus Man," Jack Rance, the sheriff, in "The Girl of the Golden West," Bruno in "After Five," secret agent in "The Unafraid," the burgomaster in "The Captive," the Senator in "The Governor's Lady," and the Senator in "The Woman."

AD KESSEL RETURNS.

Monday, May 10, saw Ad Kessel of the New York Motion Picture Corporation back at his desk after a sojourn of several months in Los Angeles. He was looking fine and said that his company had a lot of big things on the way which would soon be announced.

Text of Sunday Decision

Court of Appeals Affirms Law As Interpreted by Justice Gaynor and Limits Powers of Municipal Corporations.

THE Court of Appeals in Kiely against the City of Yonkers, involving the question of the legality of Sunday opening, has rendered no opinion of its own, but has contented itself with affirming the opinion of the Appellate Division.

There were two questions before the Court of Appeals: First, does the law of the state, as interpreted in the ruling decision of Judge Gaynor in June, 1908, control the question of the legality of Sunday opening? Second, has a city or county within the state the right to legislate upon the subject, regardless of the existing state law? The first question is answered in the affirmative, by implication at least, while the second question is answered in the negative.

It will be remembered that the aldermen of the city of Yonkers, following the example of other cities, notably that of Albany, passed an ordinance prohibiting the exhibition of motion pictures on Sunday within the city of Yonkers. An arrest was made under this ordinance, and the matter taken up to the Supreme Court on a writ of habeas corpus. Upon the discharge of the defendant, an appeal to the Appellate Division was taken by the city of Yonkers, with the result that the ordinance was declared invalid and void.

The text of the decision is as follows:

"Under its charter regulating amusements and common shows, the city of Yonkers has the right to license an exhibitor of motion pictures. The city ordinance in question, however, forbids such an exhibition on Sunday and declares every person violating section 13 of the ordinance shall forfeit a penalty of not less than $25 nor more than $100, in the discretion of the magistrate. The defendant has been so convicted. A license may be conditionally granted; it may be given subject to certain reasonable conditions such as the hours of opening and other limitations upon its exercise. The intent that the municipal corporation can supersede the state law will not be inferred from the general grants of power nor will such authority be held to exist as an implied or incidental right, as all municipal authority comes from the legislature. The provisions of a municipal charter, however broad, are subject to such restrictions as may be imposed by general laws. We hold that the chapter of the general city law authorizing the imposition of forfeitures and imprisonment did not surrender the general power against criminal offences which remains in the legislature. The legislature of the state alone may command how Sunday shall be kept."

Fire Regulations Considered

Report of the Committee on Explosives and Combustibles Is Read at Meeting of National Fire Protection Association.

AT the annual meeting of the National Fire Protection Association in the Hotel Astor, New York, on the morning of May 12, the report of the committee on Explosives and Combustibles, which prepared "regulations governing the storage and handling of nitro-cellulose motion picture films," was read by George E. Bruen, acting as chairman of the committee, accepted by the members of the Protection association, and referred back to the committee for the consideration of a few proposed alterations before it passes on to the executive committee for adoption. As the two committees, in this instance, are virtually the same, the final move is little more than a formality.

William Sistrom, of the Universal Company, who has presented the case of the manufacturers throughout the consideration of the new regulations, was given the courtesy of the floor to present arguments against the adoption of a clause stipulating that there shall be no more than five operatives in a room used for examining, rewinding and cutting film. He pointed out the fallacy of such a regulation and carried his point in having the matter referred back to the committee. It is understood that in a subsequent discussion, members of the committee decided to omit the clause. Mr. Sistrom also succeeded in preventing the passage of a rule requiring a glass covering for the vent opening in a vault. This, too, was referred to the committee for reconsideration.

SUIT AGAINST VITALITE SCREEN.

Action has been commenced in the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York by Alfred L. Simpson, Inc., against J. P. Payor & Company, manufacturers of Vitalite screens in which infringement of the Simpson patents is alleged.

Lesser Consolidation in the West

SOL. L. LESSER, one of the most aggressive motion picture men in the West, continues to strengthen his hold on his own particular territory, which he designates "From Colorado to the Coast." Presently he may begin an eastward movement, but just now the western market offers attractions aplenty and he is not overlooking any of the possibilities. The latest word comes from the Golden Gate Film Exchange, of which Mr. Lesser is president and general manager. It seems that the All Star Features Distributors, Inc., Mr. Lesser, president, have absorbed the Alco Film Corporation of California and the Pacific Feature Film Corporation and have contracted to handle all of the George Kleine attractions in California, Nevada and Arizona. The deal with Mr. Kleine was consummated during Mr. Lesser's recent trip East. At the Kleine offices entire confidence was expressed in Mr. Lesser's ability to cover the territory to the satisfaction of all concerned; for few men can point to a more convincing record of aims accomplished. The head of the All Star Features Distributors, Inc., has in the past exploited the Mutual program, the Film Supply program, Paul Rainey's "African Hunt" pictures, "The Christian," the All Star Feature Corporation's releases and many other important productions, the greatest of them "Cabiria," which in Mr. Lesser's hands broke all records on the Coast. He is a franchise holder in the new Metro program and handles the Life Photo product. It is figured that some of the recent Kleine productions and others promised for release within the next few months will find a ready market on the Coast.

Thanhouser Signs Louise Rutter

THE latest haul, made by Edwin Thanhouser's Broadway dragnet, is Louise Rutter, whose sympathetic work in "Passers By," "Held by the Enemy," "Secret Service," "The Devil" and "The Man of the Hour," in which latter she played opposite Douglas Fairbanks, have given her enviable prestige on the legitimate stage, which has been materially increased by the artistry which she imparted to her roles in "Mid Channel" with Ethel Barrymore and with Arnold Daly.

Miss Rutter is an ideal dramatic lead. Graceful, vivacious, intelligent and gifted moreover with an ability to stir the emotions of her audience, without straining after effect, she is destined to leap into screen popularity.

"It's all so wonderful," she said, when interviewed regarding her new field. "I have heard how you film people work, but I never thought until Mr. Thanhouser's offer came to me that I, too, should join my confreres of the speaking stage who were won by the silent art. The great studio is a fairyland to me, and I cannot see how such fascinating work can ever lose its interest for one."

Miss Rutter's engagement puts another rivet into the Thanhouser campaign which is bringing to the New Rochelle organization the best that the speaking stage can offer in directors and players. Miss Rutter will be seen in the regular Thanhouser releases.

When Laemmle Forgets Business.

The President of the Universal Company Has One Personality for Print and Another for Private Life.

By Lynde Denig.

SKIM through the pages of trade papers of several years ago and you will find many likenesses of a man framed in a horseshoe. He stood sponsor for brave words, and when he talked about his good fortune he didn't cautiously knock on wood for fear fortune would desert him. Nor did he throw the old horseshoe into the scrap heap and say its charm was broken when his house was divided against itself. His non-committal face in its optimistic setting was made a talisman of success, calculated to impress exhibitors. Week after week, month after month, Carl Laemmle was presented as a sort of commercial Achilles, under whose protection no harm could come to trusting followers.

Like all extremely personal advertising, this was aimed to create a business personality invested with all the virtues of a leader—stability, foresight and a secret understanding with the gods of chance, whereby he might receive their special consideration and pass it on to his flock. The horseshoe was the outward and visible sign of this inward and spiritual grace, called "Laemmle Luck."

A story is current about a popular author who recently gave up writing and, when asked for a reason, replied that he despaired of doing justice to the eulogies written by his publishers. Living up to a reputation was too much of a strain. He wanted to remain his simple, ordinary self. He confused business exploitation and personal matters, an unbusinesslike thing to do and unnecessary. Carl Laemmle makes no such mistake.

The president of the Universal Company was back from the opening of Universal City in California and seated in his office in the Mecca Building. He finished reading a letter, attached his signature thereto and turned: "All right, go ahead," he said, and, leaning forward in his chair, prepared to answer questions. The Laemmle of the horseshoe was not visible in this small man who chatted pleasantly and without attempting to make each word sound like an irrevocable edict. Seemingly, he had no thought of his pictorial offspring, who must put a "punch" in every sentence. His movements were quick and nervous, his expression rather set and serious, save for an occasional smile. He possesses a rare quality among much advertised men—that of appearing to express what he really thinks and not what he wants you to think he thinks.

As Mr. Laemmle talked about the cross-continental run of the Universal special, the reception awaiting the party in many towns, the impressive ceremonies attending the opening of Universal City and the display of good fellowship on every hand, it became evident that he had not lost the capacity for enjoying himself. He has not become a business personality to the exclusion of everything else.

"To use a customary phrase," he said, "I had the time of my life. I doubt if I ever crammed so many enjoyable hours into an equal number of weeks, and I like to think of it all as a pleasure trip without much business significance—unless you want to look for business results in making warm friends of those with whom you are associated. It does me lots of good to visit Universal City. It's like a vacation. Last November I felt the same way after my trip west, and the wonderful loyalty and spirit in Universal City were even more contagious this time. Perhaps I am having too many vacations, but the truth is I'm looking forward to another trip next month." There was a pleasing sincerity and an entire lack of egotism in Mr. Laemmle's recollections of an enjoyable experience and his genuine interest in turning over a bundle of pictures taken en route.

"Under the new management of the western studios, things are running perfectly smoothly," he declared, "with every provision being made for the production of about fifty per cent. of the feature plays announced for regular release on the Universal program. People are credited with wanting pictures of the kind, and we are ready to supply them at their best; but, personally, I think the feature craze is at its height. New York is no criterion of picture tendencies in other parts of the country. I talked with many western men, some of whom ran houses, others not connected with the business, and a surprising number of them said that they were tiring of long subjects. Then there is the European market, which usually sets an example in such matters, going back to short photoplays.

"The more I see of new fads, the more I am inclined to rely upon a varied program which gives something to people of all tastes. Out of a comedy, a drama, a new pictorial and a 500-foot educational or scenic, an exhibitor can make an entertainment about which there will be no question. Our regular program is becoming stronger all the while, and certainly this would not be so were the popularity of pictures of this kind on the decline."

Mr. Laemmle is enthusiastic about the new arrangement in the western scenario department, now including several authors of renown, men whose services probably could not have been secured under more stringent conditions. These writers may work where and when they choose, the only stipulation being that they produce a given number of reels a week. The plan is bringing such satisfactory results that it may be inaugurated in the eastern department.

When asked about business conditions in the states visited, Mr. Laemmle said that through the middle west exhibitors seemed to be very well satisfied, whereas in Los Angeles and some other California cities attendances were below normal. The Fair, instead of increasing patronage in San Francisco, is having the reverse effect, for, with numberless things to see, visitors find little time to enter picture houses such as they have at home.

WORLD FILM IN FULL CONTROL.

Lewis J. Selznick, vice president and general manager of the World Film Corporation, has completed a deal that makes the World Film a three million dollar manufacturing and distributing company in complete control of every branch connected with the producing and circulation of its product. For the past year Mr. Selznick has been working with this aim in view, and it was realized on May 12th, when the World Film took over the Shubert Film Corporation, which owns the entire stock of the Peerless Feature Producing Company, in whose studio many of the World features are being produced.

Prior to this arrangement, the World Film owned a half million of the capital stock of the Shubert Corporation, the other half million belonging to the Shuberts and allied interests. An exchange of World Film stock for Shubert Film stock, gives complete control to the company, of which Mr. Selznick is general manager.

FROHMAN MAKING ADE PICTURE.

Director Irving, who is putting on George Ade's "Just Out of College" for the Frohman Amusement Corporation, has made ample preparation that the picture will have the real dyed-in-the-wool atmosphere of a small college town. Through the courtesy of Chancellor Brown and Dean Bouton of New York University, the use of the beautiful campus on University Heights, the Hall of Fame and the athletic field will be at Irving's disposal. A large number of scenes require a large group of cheering collegians. The Frohman Amusement Corporation are paying the 'Varsity Show Management a handsome sum of money for the service of the entire student body who will be used in the athletic scenes as the cheering section, and in many others to give the local color in the right places.

CHARLES PATHE RETURNS TO FRANCE.

Charles Pathe, head of the great firm of Pathe Freres, who has been in New York for the past few months, sailed for France last week where he will remain probably until fall.

Sheehan Helps Boost Prices

Uses Practical Methods of Impressing Exhibitors with Need for Higher Admissions.

BUSINESS conditions in the northwest are not only good, but becoming better every day, said Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, at his hotel in San Francisco. It was on May 5 Mr. Sheehan was speaking; he had just arrived in the California city after a trip in which, leaving New York City April 12, he had touched at Philadelphia, Chicago, Minneapolis, Omaha, Denver, Salt Lake, Portland and Seattle. The stir in industrial life extends throughout the mining and lumber countries and will reach the grain-raising sections, he said. In Colorado all the mining town forces are working full time; the same is true of Butte, Anaconda and Helena. The northwestern ports are crowded with merchandise awaiting bottoms to convey it oversea. The belligerent nations have commandeered everything in the way of the iron industry. At one northwestern port Mr. Sheehan saw two hundred flat cars, each one carrying, so he was reliably informed, two armored automobiles. These were awaiting transportation, presumably to Vladivostok. It is estimated that Russia alone is spending ten million dollars a week in the United States for war munitions.

Winfield R. Sheehan.

While in Denver Mr. Sheehan instructed the local Fox management to supply no more film to houses charging 5 cents admission. At the same time he notified the New York office to cease sending film to Denver. The proscription was to continue until such time as the local manager secured agreements stipulating 10 cent admissions. The sequel came quick in the form of notification that beginning May 9 the Isis, the Paris and the Princess would be 10 cent houses, with 15 cents charged for some seats. The Isis was to open on the date mentioned. The charge also involves the running of the Fox subjects for a week.

"What is the use of the staff of a manufacturer worrying over the selection of a proper subject for picturization, deciding on the skeleton, then for the scenario department to expend all its energy on it and for the directors to sit up nights figuring out how best the ideas can be executed; for good actors to strive to do their best and the manufacturers to spend a small fortune on one subject only to make it possible for a person to walk into a theater by laying down a nickel and see that picture put on the screen to the accompaniment of an orchestra of twelve pieces and a $40,000 pipe organ? It's out of all reason," insisted Mr. Sheehan.

"The picture business to-day is becoming more and more commercial, more expensive. In the strides, in the real leaps, it has made, no business is greater. One of the big factors in the advancement of this industry is the increase in the size of the houses and in the elegance of their equipment and furnishings."

Mr. Sheehan told a story illuminative of the effects of the exhibition of pictures on the manufacture and distribution of liquor. In Washington the Gottstein family has built up a large fortune by the distribution of spirits. Total prohibition is to take effect in Washington and Oregon on January 1, 1916. The Gottstein's have made the remark that if the people prefer pictures to whisky they will prepare to give them pictures; they will please the people. In April the Gottstein's broke ground in Pike street, in Seattle, for a half million dollar picture theater to contain 2,400 seats. It is designed to install a large organ and to employ an orchestra of twelve. Already they have set the minimum admission at 10 cents. Mr. Sheehan urged them to make it 15.

"We are going to see pictures exhibited at prices matching those of grand opera," asserted Mr. Sheehan. "Already it has come to pass that $2.50 has been paid in hotels for tickets to 'The Clansman' because $2 seats could not be procured at the theater.

"Yes, we make our product at five reels for a very distinct reason. The average exhibitor likes to empty his house every two hours. The five reel features gives him a chance to use a couple of reels of varying subjects and keep his show within that limitation and thus turn his house over four or five times a day."

Mr. Sheehan intended to remain in San Francisco for a week and then go to Los Angeles for the same length of time, returning to New York by way of Kansas City.

Edward Elkas

EDWARD ELKAS, Vitagraph player, former stage manager, actor and singer on the legitimate stage, nickhamed "One Day Elkas," because of an incident in his early motion picture career, was born in New York City, February 8, 1862. His father, Maurice Elkas, came from Hamburg, Germany, and his mother, who was Cecil Cohan, from London, England.

Returning to America in 1880, he went to live in Philadelphia. Being possessed of a beautiful tenor voice, his services were in constant demand for amateur performances and by a number of singing societies of which he was a member, including the Columbia Singing Society. In 1882, Mr. Elkas joined the Marie Geistinger Opera Company, on tour, to sing the tenor role in an extensive repertoire. This was followed by engagements at the Germania and Thalia theaters, New York City, under the management of Gustave Amberg, and in association with such well-known dramatic and operatic stars as Ernst Possart, Ludwig Barnay and Marie Geistinger. These engagements extended over a period of eight years. In 1890, Mr. Elkas joined the Aaronson Opera Company and later became a member of the Alice Nielsen Opera Company, when this comic opera prima donna was at the height of her success.

Edward Elkas.

During one of his many engagements in New York City, Mr. Elkas married Helen Solters, but, for nine months of every year for thirteen years, with the exception of the few weeks he played in New York City, they were separated. Becoming weary of road life and particularly this enforced separation, he determined to become identified with motion pictures that he might be with his family. Possessed of a strong character face, Mr. Elkas found it easy to obtain work in the new form of dramatic expression and soon became identified with parts that required the depicting of human emotions through the facial expressions that characterize the denizens of the underworld. An immediate recognition of this remarkable power established him with the Vitagraph Company, and a particularly strong character part in "The Locked Door," in which he dominated every scene in which he appeared, won him membership in the Vitagraph Stock Company. His strongest pictures include, besides "The Locked Door," "The Silent Plea," "The Girl Who Might Have Been," "The Esterbrook Case," "The Plot," "The Dust of Egypt," "Mortmain," etc.

MARGARET GIBSON SIGNS WITH N. Y. M. P. CORP.

Margaret Gibson, late leading woman with the Western Vitagraph Company, is the latest photoplayer of note to join the ranks of the New York Motion Picture Corporation. She has signed a contract with Thomas H. Ince, director-general, providing for her appearance hereafter in Kay-Bee, Broncho and Domino films. It is likely also that Miss Gibson will be featured in some of the forthcoming Mutual Masterpictures. Miss Gibson is renowned, not alone for her versatile talents as a screen actress, but for her remarkable beauty. Last summer she was the unanimous choice of the judges for first prize in a beauty contest conducted at one of the California beach resorts.

A Successful Educational Series

Organized Campaign for Salisbury's Wild Life Pictures.

DR. EDWARD A. SALISBURY, whose features have been running at The Strand, has opened an office in the Candler Building, 220 West 42nd street, for the purpose of promoting his Wild Life Pictures, which have already been sold throughout the United States, Canada and England, and for the establishment of a further series of Educational Pictures, to be booked in the finest theaters throughout the United States.

It has been suggested to Dr. Salisbury that he prepare from such material as he already has on hand, and also from the best of the world's productions of scenic and educational features, a program to be placed as a regular feature program, running in the neighborhood of 500 feet of scenic and 500 feet of educational film, for runs for a week. Several hundred theaters have already applied to Dr. Salisbury for bookings on this service, and it may be reasonably expected that he already has the foundation for a successful service.

Edward A. Salisbury.

Dr. Salisbury's first start in establishing these pictures was to satisfy the needs of several colleges and educational institutions which desired to have preserved for their records, photographs of different phases of wild life that are rapidly disappearing from the North American Continent. After obtaining several hundred thousand feet of this film, so much interest was shown in these pictures, that he was urged to exhibit them to the public.

At the Tivoli theater, San Francisco, where the feature was first booked for an entire week—something quite unusual at that time with the Tivoli theater, there was such a tremendous crowd at the end of the week, that the management decided to run the picture a second week (this also being the first time in the history of the theater that any picture had run over a week, under any circumstances)—with the result that the attendance during the second week was double that of the first.

The news of the success at the Tivoli theater spread rapidly over the Pacific Coast until Dr. Salisbury's Features had been solidly booked from lower California to the Canadian line.

Thus encouraged, Dr. Salisbury came East with his feature to see how it took on the Atlantic Coast. He exhibited the picture to several guests, including Mr. S. L. Rothapfel, of The Strand, who became enthusiastic over the interesting and educational value of the feature, and booked it as a serial for three weeks—new record for the Strand theater.

Everywhere the feature has been shown it has drawn record audiences, and the Keith Circuit has offered a sixty weeks' booking of the feature.

It is not improbable that those who write the history of the film business during the next few years will speak of Dr. Salisbury's pictures as a turning point in the industry. It has been noted, for some time past, that the interest of the better class of people in educational and scenic features of this sort is increasing, and the public who have been accustomed to seeking their entertainment in high-grade comedy, now have an opportunity to include films of this character.

STUDIO FOR LINCOLN PLAYERS.

Plans for a three-story concrete studio and factory have been filed with the town clerk's office at Grantwood, N. J., and already ground has been broken, preparatory to laying the foundation. These studios, which the architect claims will eliminate many of the flagrant evils of our present "hot houses" and "congested scenery vaults," will house the newly organized Lincoln Players, at whose head is the former esteemed Vitagraph star, Ed. Lincoln.

A Famous Team

Weber and Fields to Star in Series of One-Reel Comedies for World Film.

WEBER and Fields, probably the best-known comedians on the stage today, have signed a two years' contract with the World Comedy Stars Film Corporation to appear in single-reel comedies, to be released at short intervals through the World Film Corporation. In signing these comedians, President Phil Gleichman deserves the highest praise.

From their very beginning Joe Weber and Lew Fields were ambitious. And always quick and enterprising they were able to keep up with the march of events. It was in the year 1896 that their great opportunity came. The Imperial Music Hall, situated at the corner of Broadway and 29th street, was placed in the market. Weber and Fields had an idea that if they could get hold of the place, fit it up and remain there long enough they could make a success.

That these promptings were of the right kind was demonstrated in the succes of the Weber and Fields Music Hall, now changed to this name from the former one, as from the beginning it was phenomenal No such entertainment as they put on had ever before been attempted in New York. Everything was light, bright, and frothy. Within a few months their salary list was the highest of any playhouse in New York.

At the time Weber and Fields made their first appearance this country was the haven of refuge for many foreigners, and Castle Garden, New York, the most conspicuous port of entry. The Land League troubles were ripe in Ireland then and a very large percentage of the immigrants were Irish. In fact, they outnumbered all others in the proportion of three to one. Therefore it was not surprising that the two boys determined on the stage career of comedy, should hit upon the Irish as the proper race to portray. This explains why they made their stage debut in green coat, green knickerbockers, green stockings, and with pipe and shillalah, and sang a song that began like this:

Weber and Fields in Private Life.

We are two jolly Irish lads,
As you can plainly see,
And if we're not mistaken,
We think you all agree,
That we are jolly Irish lads,
And happy as can be.

Joseph DeGrasse is staging a one-reel Universal story entitled "The Struggle," in which more than three hundred veterans of the Civil War are used. The story deals with a railroad strike. Pauline Bush, William Clifford and Ray Gallagher play the principal roles.

Pleading for the Picture.

The Useful Work of Dr. Orrin G. Cocks of the Fifth Avenue Board.—How He Helps to Influence Public Opinion on a Basis of Good Faith and Common Sense.

By W. Stephen Bush.

IN a civilization growing more complex year after year the quiet, thoughtful and persistent forces are the most persuasive and by far the most telling and effective. At first thought nothing seems more elusive and indefinite than "public opinion." It is generally represented as a woman by the discerning cartoonists, for like a woman it is "uncertain, coy and hard to please." Often "public opinion" is the last refuge of a debater or a hard pressed legislator. (The rhyme is as unwitting as it is hideous.)

Discovering Public Opinion.

To find real public opinion, the thing in its concrete and tangible form, you have to hunt for it. If you have the least notion how you are bound to find it. The vast army of exhibitors who believe in the Fifth Avenue Board of Inspectors and Advisers—I am anticipating the change from the old word "censorship," must be glad to hear from a man who has been for a year or so hunting and stalking "public opinion" and influencing it on behalf of common sense methods in dealing with motion pictures. He has plodded away consistently and unceasingly. He is familiar ad nauseam with the spectres of Ignorance and Prejudice and knows the Demon of Fanaticism well enough to recognize him at a distance of a mile or so. He has met the rural legislator both in and out of his lair and even the professional reformer no longer irritates him, but merely provokes a little ejaculatory prayer which, in a less Christian man, might degenerate into well known monosyllables of Saxon origin.

Dr. Orrin G. Cocks.

I do not know the official connection of Dr. Orrin G. Cocks with the Fifth Avenue Board and it does not matter. The interesting thing is that he is a most useful member. For about a year now he has appeared before I do not know how many varieties of civic bodies. If you ask me for a "bill of particulars" here it is: Clubs, Civic organizations, Social Workers, Schools of Philanthropy, Educators, Recreation Groups, Colleges and Seminary Students, City Officials, Representatives of the Legislatures, Chambers of Commerce, Citizens and Theaters, Juvenile Protective Associations, Ministers, Women's Organizations and Y. M. C. A. Secretaries. Somewhere in and between these organizations it must have been possible to feel the pulse of public opinion. All organizations of the character named enjoy a certain measure of public respect which would not be accorded to them if they in turn did not defer to and represent public opinion. Bodies of the type mentioned are apt to be keenly interested in the question of regulating the motion picture. For some of them it may be but a new kind of "in-door sport," for others it may be the exercise of a genuine public spirit. At all events such bodies are generally listened to by the law makers and their good will and co-operation are much to be preferred to their indifference or hostility. You will grant me then that Dr. Cocks had a fine opportunity to speak a good word for the motion picture where a good word would do the most good.

The Fruitful Toil of Dr. Cocks.

How does the Doctor improve his opportunities? Does he make an impression? Is it fair to assume that his work is bringing results? What is the leaven with which he labors? What seed is he sowing? Well, his gospel is simple and homely enough. It is the gospel of good faith and common sense. Of course he is interested to know upon which ground his seed is likely to fall.

Most of the time he encounters the best soil, which means that they who listen to him are men and women of good faith, whose prejudice yields to facts and honest dealing. He carries with him a budget of valuable information garnered by his board in the course of many arduous years. He knows how to retail this information and gain the respectful attention of his audience. Nobody denies a hearing to the man who knows what he is talking about. An asset as valuable as the fund of knowledge is the sincerity of the Doctor. Even the wild-eyed statesmen from the rural districts for the first time tasting the delights of civilized life in their state capital and harboring a narrow suspicion against the world in general, cannot help feeling that the Doctor means what he says. Another great asset in the mental and moral equipment of the man is his broad human sympathy and a rare but most precious faculty to see and to tolerate the other fellow's point of view.

Dr. Cocks is not a bit controversial. In the face of rhetorical storms against him and his board, under torrents of adjectives of denunciation and vituperation, the Doctor retains a singularly pleasant and placid smile. As the dental surgeon takes the ravings of the patient before and during the operation as a matter of course, calmly awaiting the return of normal conditions, even thus the Doctor lets the opponents of the motion picture lash themselves into a tempest of moral fury without the faintest trace of a ruffle. He is sure of his facts, sure of his experience and his conclusions and he gets them before his audience in a plain, modest way that puts to flight all the artifice of the gyrating orator.

No, Dr. Cocks is not an orator but just the same he steals our hearts away. He is convincing. You feel you stand in the presence of a man who has profound faith and who acts up to the tenets of his faith. Here is a man you would be willing to trust.

His Opinion of Exhibitors.

I found the good doctor in his lair up at 770 Fifth Avenue and most unwilling to come into the limelight. O, the toughness of our journalistic job! The people that ought to be in the limelight have to be dragged and coaxed while the unworthy kind can hardly be kept away with clubs and spears. The doctor was in no position to deny that within the last year he had been in all the big and in a good many of the smaller cities of the country urging common sense in the treatment of the motion picture. His great "urge" to the people interested in this subject may be summed up in these words: "Do nothing until you have the facts before you. Don't act on impulse and without information If you do you commit an injustice both to film people and to yourselves." It is the right sort of an "urge."

To get the Doctor into a communicative disposition I asked him what he had discovered in his travels as to the personnel of the exhibitor.

"I find," said he, "that the average exhibitor, especially in the West, ranks well with the best business men of his community. He has a good vision of the possibilities of his profession, he is desirous of giving the people a fine, restful form of entertainment, looking beyond the present and wisely anticipating the future. They begin to see the need of co-operating with each other. They also realize that what regulation is needed for motion pictures must be done in a fair intelligent and skilful way. There is no other way of handling the problem than through a group of men and women who are fair, intelligent and skilful. Exhibitors feel the need of considering and consulting local sentiment when it comes to showing films that crowd the borderland of the allowable. Such features, for instance, as 'The Kreutzer Sonata,' or 'The Clemenceau Case' may be all right in some localities but in some of the simpler communities where life is not as complex as here, exhibitors hesitate to put on films of this type without first getting the advice of men and women who are capable of judging the state of public opinion."

Preaching a Gospel of Facts and Sense.

"I have tried to accomplish one thing especially in all my travels, to establish a personal relationship between the leading spirits in the civic life of a city and the heads of our board. There are two things I have always striven to impress upon all who are interested in the moral phase of motion pictures: First, the fact that we have high ideals and standards and, second, that there cannot be any doubt as to the fundamental integrity of the motion picture producers as a whole. I have always made it a point to get in touch with people who have confidence in their ability to think out things in their own way and to discover their point in view. I have often profited in this way and have gained many valuable suggestions. The great cities of the country somewhat resent the idea of being dictated to by New York, and I have always sought to make it plain that the board had no such idea. I explained that, on the contrary, we were looking for suggestions and criticisms from the people of every city. We are not omniscient and do not pretend to be. I am very clear on this point however, after all is said and done the board here knows more about the concrete facts of motion picture conditions than any individual or any group of individuals in other parts of the country. We have, I think, a deeper appreciation of the fundamental problems in the industry."

No Room for Legal Censorship.

"I found the opposition against legalized censorship among exhibitors practically unanimous everywhere. Let me say this: Exhibitors are opposed to this kind of censorship, not at all because they want to do something crooked, but because they feel that censors would not know their business and would be governed by whims and by varying standards and would be open to all kinds of influences. In connection with this I want to say that the campaign of education started by The Moving Picture World has borne splendid fruit. I have found the paper wherever I have found men interested in motion pictures and they all seem to think well of it.

"A study was made of the manufacture of pictures in Los Angeles including the condition of the studios. There was some discussion with the directors of plays regarding the standards of the board and the possibility of more extended discussion of the reasons for the decisions and the general attitude of the board. These important directors were a unit in their opinion that much good would come out of personal relationship with them. Although a careful inquiry was made in every city I could not discover any genuine sentiment in favor of Federal consorship. In some cases the idea seemed to be in the air, but with no comprehension of what was involved. The local authorities had thought little of the larger problems connected with motion pictures It is evident that there is real need of the presentation of facts. In the state of Missouri the lawgivers wanted to confer censorial powers upon the teachers of each county. The law was defeated, but the very fact of its having been seriously considered shows what need there is of a campaign of enlightenment and education."

Dr. Cocks will not stay long at headquarters. The missionary spirit in him is too lively and too insistent to permit it. He did not want any praise for his work, but its value had been discovered by a very prominent producer, who suggested the readers of The Moving Picture World, and especially the exhibitor, ought to be told about the quiet steady and effective work of this modest young clergyman

"SKY DIAMOND" PLAYERS INSURED.

A $300,000 insurance policy has been written to cover the cast of "The Diamond from the Sky," the North American's big continued photoplay for which Roy L. McCardell was paid $10,000. In a picture of any length and especially where the members of the cast are called upon to do dare-devil stunts it is a matter of good business judgment to protect them through insurance.

BUCKLEY STARKEY IN "THE BOSS."

Buckley Starkey will appear the coming week at the Hippodrome, New York, in the part of Porkey McCoy in "The Boss." Starkey has previously scored in the role of Blinkey Davis in "The Man of the Hour" in the Peerless production of this play. Before going with the Peerless, he was with the Kalem, Pathe Freres and with the Reliance under Edgar Lewis.

Miss Ruth Blair

BEAUTIFUL and graceful Ruth Blair, leading lady with the Pyramid Company in pictures appearing on the United Program, possesses exquisite charm, wears wonderful clothes and affects a daintiness of bearing that have caused her to be likened to the well known Mrs. Vernon Castle ever since she came into prominence.

Ruth Blair.

Miss Blair is essentially an artist, and it is the artist's eye to perfection and harmony in color, line and texture that she brings to the planning of the exquisite costumes in which she appears in pictures or on the street, or at home. No lovely hue of sky or water or flower which can be used in the designing and coloring of her garments escapes Miss Blair's eye, and immediately after a new conception of tint possibilities has come to her, she hastens to her studio and paint box, and presents it for future use. She designs her own costumes, and creates her own styles, as well, drawing them and painting them so that her dressmakers will have no trouble in following her ideas.

Miss Blair was born in Williamsport, Pa. Her early inspiration to become an actress came through her association with her famous teacher, Madame Currie, who trained Julia Marlowe. Madame Currier, seeing the unusual artistic and dramatic ability of the girl, encouraged her to express her dramatic feelings in the designing of costumes to fit the roles she was studying. Various colors came to express moods to her, the textures and lines of her garments gave visual expression to the emotional role she was interpreting. It is no wonder now that Miss Blair is considered the most exquisitely gowned actress in the motion picture world.

Miss Blair will play opposite Edwin August, who is the star for the Pyramid-United Program pictures.

Blaising a Trail Through Los Angeles

From the Moving Picture World Staff Correspondent.

Los Angeles, California.

THE western studio of the Biograph Company is situated within a few minutes' ride of the business center of the city and well within the residential district. The officers plan to spend approximately six months of the year at the local studio, believing the conditions for winter picture making in southern California warrant the expense of transferring the entire company from ocean to ocean. It will be recalled that the number leaving New York just prior to New Year's was 127 and that the special train on which they traveled was composed of four baggage cars, a smoker, a diner, four regular Pullmans and an observation car. It is to obtain the full day of sunlight as compared with the four or five-hour outdoor working day in New York that the Biograph Company sacrifices the necessary two weeks of time consumed in traveling out to the coast and back.

At the head of the seven companies working at the studio at Girard and Georgia avenues are Vice-President and General Manager Hammer and Lee Dougherty, chief producer. Under them as directors are Travers Vale, J. Farrell MacDonald, Edward Morrissey, George Morgan, Tony O'Sullivan, George Reehms and Wray Physioc. Three stages, in dimensions 55 by 90 feet, 75 by 65, and 55 by 55, respectively, permit the comfortable simultaneous operation of seven sets. The studios and office and laboratory buildings occupy a plot about two and a quarter acres in extent.

The company will return to New York the last of June, traveling with the same equipment that brought it to the Pacific. The journey back will be made by way of San Francisco, to enable the members of the company to visit the exposition.

Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., has its home on a promontory not far from the center of the city. Three of the four sides are near cliffs—inaccessible to the curious ones who enjoy looking in on a studio from the outside; and there is a fence on the fourth side. At work when the World man called were two companies under Jack Noble and Edwin Carewe. B. A. Rolfe, who is giving his company's affairs his close attention, was all over the big lot—and including the land on the sides of the hills there are nearly three acres of it. Mr. Rolfe showed us over the studio and plant. There is a stage 172 by 75 feet. Besides twenty-five dressing rooms for the principals, there are ample accommodations for seventy-five extras. For the camera men there are five dark rooms. All of the productions of the company are in five reels.

At Quinn's Superba "Hypocrites" were "packing them in." The house was cleared after each show. A great deal of publicity had been given to the picture, and Mr. Quinn, the astute owner, had taken full advantage of everything in the acceleration line that had come his way. Then, again, he had started quite a bit of the pub stuff himself. The result was seen in the crowds lining the sidewalk in the evening waiting for the end of the first show.

At Quinn's Garrick, showing features, H. H. Kanagy is the manager. The Garrick has 700 seats and charges an admission of 10 and 15 cents in the evening. The show runs at least ninety minutes, an interesting single reel or a topical being added if necessary. One of the features of the house is the practice of arousing interest in general singing—and Mr. Kanagy says "when we start out to get 'em going we get 'em."

The Famous Players coast studio is at Santa Monica Boulevard and Gower street, out in the Hollywood district. The 75 by 100-foot stage is erected in the yard adjoining an old mansion, around which are tall pines. On the day we were there Miss Pickford had just returned from a short visit at San Francisco, where were taken some scenes for a forthcoming subject and a peek at the fair. Besides Miss Pickford we met Manager Kaufman (who has now been away from New York so long he doesn't like to talk about it), Allen Dwan, who had just been assigned to direct Miss Pickford's company; Donald Crisp, and Marshal Neilan. Miss Pickford had recently finished "Rags" and "Little Pal."

The Oz Company, which is situated at the same address, is producing under the direction of Francis Powers, who is assisted by Nat G. Deverich.

T. W. Johns, manager of the Mutual Film Corporation, said that business was getting better and there seemed to be an optimistic feeling by reason of the large number of strangers in the city. The expositions at San Francisco and at San Diego, Mr. Johns said, would bring many to the coast—and the war in Europe would be a factor. While a lot of money had been made in exhibiting, at the same time there had been a tendency to overdo in an investment way, with the result that competition was very keen. Los Angeles had had an era of wonderful prosperity because there had been much building. Aside from Los Angeles and San Diego, Mr. Johns pointed out, there are no large towns in southern California.

"The production that will stand is the production of quality," said Mr. Johns. "The man who puts in a standard program and handles it in proper manner, along business lines, is going to succeed. You can't have one policy today and another one tomorrow and expect to win out. You have got to look on the picture business just the same as you would on the dry-goods or any other business. The day when you could put on two reels a week and line them out for a block has gone."

At the Albuquerque studio, up on the Court street hill, H. F. Connelly, secretary-treasurer of the company, showed the World man over the plant. There are two stages, 80 by 80 feet and 60 by 50. Charles Dryer is head of the laboratory department. At that time the output was one reel of comedy a week, but plans were under way to double this.

President Hamilton was mighty busy trying to finish a scene before the light faded, but he stopped to give a hearty handshake and a welcome.

The Albuquerque leases its studio from the Los Angeles Film Corporation, the officers of which are Thomas S. Nash, president, and John Davin, secretary and treasurer. Besides renting the studios the company does commercial work.

At the Lasky studios the first man we met was Dustin Farnum, who was dropping in for a call. Kenneth McGaffey showed us around the big plant. There is a new glass inclosed stage, 70 by 60 feet in dimensions, and an open stage, 300 by 70. The property measures about 300 by 600 feet. There are extensive carpenter and other shops. While making the rounds, we collided with House Peters and discovered he has not forgotten his experiences on the afternoon he tried to locate the head pin on the alleys of the Chalmers Bowling Club. That's another story, but it just naturally carried the two of us back east for a few minutes. Cecil De Mille stopped work to say howdy, and just to get us stirred up said in a few days he was going out into a real desert, taking along a regular caravan of camels and all the factors of an Oriental picture—and invited us to go along. Yes, we declined, but George Melford, who happened in at the moment, will bear witness the renunciation hurt.

Speaking about the desert, we were over at the Biograph studio one afternoon chatting with Vice-President Hammer when in walked a man in dusty garb, on his face a two days' beard and a bronze that denoted exposure to a blazing sun. He was bubbling over with enthusiasm. The man was Director Travers Vale, who had just driven in 125 miles from a location in the Imperial Valley. Mr. Vale and his company for three days had been at work on his ranch of fifty acres out in the lonesome.

"Wonderful place," said Mr. Vale. "You can't conceive the stillness, the absolute silence of it all. There really is where a man may commune with nature, be alone with his God."

"If we listen to him," suggested Mr. Hammer, "he'd have us all out there."

"Fine place for a studio," was the director's quick retort.

Later the same evening we met the two men in a restaurant downtown. "How about it?" we asked. "Has he induced you to take over any of the fifty yet?"

"Only one so far," replied Mr. Hammer slowly and with well simulated dubiety.

"Well, well!" said Oscar Apfel when he discovered the World man roaming about the big studio of Bosworth, Inc. "How's all the bunch in New York? Would I like to peek at Broadway? No, not particularly, but I would like to see all the boys. I miss my friends." Mr. Apfel has been in the west fifteen months; it is only recently that he has transferred his activities from the Lasky Company to Bosworth, Inc. The glass covered stage is 60 by 120 feet. Mr. Apfel pointed out its great advantage, in that expensive or elaborate sets do not have to be struck each night. There is a complete laboratory equipment, the company making all prints right on the ground. Opposite the studio on a plot covering a whole block front is an open-air stage, 45 by 90 feet. On the main stage there is an electric equipment for use at night or for securing light effects. The Bosworth, Inc., productions are alternating with those of the Morosco brand. At present the output is one subject a month. Charles Eyton is the general manager of the plant and Mr. Apfel is the chief producer.

Another one of the fine big studios out here on the coast is that of the Balboa Company at Long Beach, where three directors are now at work. These are Harry Harvey, Charles E. Hayden and Sherwood McDonald. President H. M. Horkheimer, too, is making features. One of the big things under way is the serial, "Who Pays?", featuring Ruth Roland and Henry King. Mr. Harvey is directing the new serial, which will be in twelve releases of three reels each. The story, which has been novelized by Edwin Bliss, is running in a syndicate of newspapers. E. D. Horkheimer is vice-president, secretary-treasurer and general manager of the company; Charles M. Peck is assistant general manager, and Norman Manning is business manager. Mr. Manning is the oldest employee, having started with the Horkheimer brothers at the beginning, twenty months ago. In the new studio there is a stage capacity of 8,000 square feet and across the street there is a smaller stage, the one on which the first pictures of the company were produced. On a third corner the company has acquired a large plot of ground on which will be erected another stage. The property rooms and wardrobe are most complete; so, too, is the great reference library in the scenario department, which is under the supervision of Will M. Ritchey. Miss Roland, about to depart for the day, consented to stand for a snapshot, but the developer later said the "photographer" had put over a flivver. Miss Roland is as big a favorite among her fellowplayers and associates as she is with picturegoers. She has a charming personality.

Los Angeles is a great town. Some easterners belt it and flay it. The natives listen and smile. "They all do that," they say; "but after they leave it they are never happy until they get back." Here's to it!

More V. L. S. E. Offices

The Big Four Will Have Branches in Pittsburgh, Columbus, Boston and San Francisco.

TO RELIEVE the Chicago and Philadelphia offices, which are already working to capacity, Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the V. L. S. E., left last week, to establish branch offices in each of those cities. Word has been received that an office has been opened at 115-119 Fourth Avenue, Pittsburgh, with George Balsdon in charge. Mr. Balsdon formerly had charge of the General Film poster department.

While the "big four" expected a large volume of business, the direct booking system and the quality of the features have so interested the exhibitors that immediate action is necessary in reducing the territory covered by the eight branches already opened.

Arrangements have been completed for a new branch to be located at Boston, Mass. This will make the eighth distributing point for the features of the "Big Four" and will be in charge of Charles H. Webster, who is personally known to and numbers among his friends over 75 per cent. of the exhibitors in the New England States. Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the V. L. S. E., was in Boston last week, negotiating for a suitable location for the offices. The New England branch will supply the theaters in New Hampshire, Vermont, Maine, Massachusetts, Rhode Island and in Connecticut, east of the Connecticut River. All of this territory has been taken from the New York offices.

Announcement is also made of the permanent location of the San Francisco branch. These offices are located at 986 Market street, San Francisco, California, in charge of C. B. Price.

At the present rate, the eight offices will not be able to handle the volume of business when more features are released, and as rapidly as possible new offices will be established.

The old idea that the value of a feature decreases after it has been exhibited in any locality is being disproved in the case of the V. L. S. E. features, now in screen evidence.

Dolly Larkin

BEAUTY and charm, combined with a reckless courage and nerve of iron, are qualities rarely found in a screen actress, and for this reason dainty and petite Dolly Larkin, leading woman of the Ideal Company, stands alone in the field of motion picture artists. Slightly built, with a wealth of golden hair and wonderfully expressive blue eyes, Miss Larkin is the personification of all that is lovely and feminine, and one can scarcely conceive of her swinging from fire escapes, leaping from five story windows, and in devious other ways risking her life for the sake of realism in the photo-dramas. Miss Larkin had firmly established her reputation as a legitimate actress, having appeared with many stars of the speaking stage, and as leading ingenue of stock companies in the principal cities of the United States. She is a dancer of wonderful grace and originality and for two years was a prime favorite with music hall patrons in London, where she was the leading figure in the revue at the Palace.

Dolly Larkin.

Returning to this country in 1913, she appeared in vaudeville in a dramatic playlet, and it was while playing in Los Angeles, that her personality appealed to the director of a leading picture studio and she was engaged to play ingenue parts. Shortly afterwards it was discovered that the dainty young lady was a "stunt" performer of the first class, and with George Larkin she was engaged to play the lead in the Universal "Trey o' Hearts" serial, in which production she risked her neck many times with the utmost abandon. With her stalwart and popular husband, handsome George Larkin, she was secured by Ideal eight months ago, and together they have been furnishing thrills and hair-raising stunts for the edification of movie fans.

Herman Rifkin

ONE of the best known film figures in New England is Herman Rifkin, the head of the Eastern Feature Film Company of Boston. Mr. Rifkin's exchange, which is one of the largest and best equipped in Boston, is the sole distributor of the Alliance Program in the "Down East" territory, and has upon its books all of the largest and highest class houses in Massachusetts, Connecticut, Maine and New Hampshire. Mr. Rifkin has just returned from a tour through New England. In speaking of his trip Mr. Rifkin said in part, "Of course, the return of business to the normal is not as rapid in my exchange radius as it is in the territory of several of the other Alliance Exchanges, but I am glad to say that there has been a marked improvement over conditions of six months ago.

Herman Rifkin.

"European war orders has caused the shoe and arms factories to run overtime, while knitting mills in some localities are working day and night shifts in order to fill their orders placed by foreign governments."

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

HERRINGTON BOOSTS READING CONVENTION.

In Communication to Exhibitors of Pennsylvania He Urges All to Attend.

Fred J. Herrington, of Pittsburgh, Pa., National vice-president of Pennsylvania Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, is again on the job, as may be seen from the following communication to the exhibitors of Pennsylvania:

"If you are a reader of the trade journals you are aware of the good work we have done at the present session of the law-making bodies of this State, in regard to the censorship of motion pictures. The committee on legislation has fought a good battle and won a grand victory, but that is not all. If we had the support of the majority of the exhibitors, organized, we would have been in a position to have got more concessions from the members of the State Senate and Legislature; if we had a membership of one thousand instead of two or three hundred, we would be in a position to show the power of the screen, and there is no doubt we could have secured the absolute repeal.

"But it is never too late to learn, so let us be up and doing. As the State convention will be held at Reading, June 7 to 9, we ask every exhibitor to arrange to attend, as there are many things of vital importance to come before the exhibitors at that time. Now, don't let the other fellow do it, as that has been the habit in the past. We want you to understand that it is your duty to be there and help the few who have had to do it in the past, so let our slogan be 'On to Reading!'

"We expect to have with us at this convention Governor Brumbaugh, Hon. Boise Penrose, and many of the members of the Senate and House of Representatives, who will make addresses; also officers of the Department of Commerce and Industry. There will be big doings and we want to make it the largest gathering of motion picture men that the State has ever had. It is up to you to make it the success it should be, so let our slogan be 'On to Reading!'

"There is no excuse for the exhibitors in the eastern part of the state, nor of the central part, and the west will do her part, so cast aside all your little personal bickerings and come along and help swell the crowd. Yours for one big successful convention,

"FRED J. HERRINGTON,
"National Vice-President of Pennsylvania Motion Picture Exhibitors' League."

REGULAR CINCINNATI LOCAL MEETING.

Cincinnati Local No. 2, of the Ohio State League, held its regular meeting at the Sinton Hotel, Cincinnati, on Wednesday, May 5. President F. L. Emmert presided and a large attendance of members was noted. Otto Ludeking, who had just returned from a trip to Honolulu, was there, while among the old timers were noticed the following: Former President J. J. Huss of the Royal theatre, F. A. Bott of the Royal theater, Fred Schottmiller, Arcade theater, J. A. Ackerman, H. G. Kruse, G. H. Hill, now a member of the board of examiners for operators, M. Fishman, Lem S. Miller, J. Huebener, George F. Honing, Carl Mecklenber and Mr. Montgomery. M. A. Neff dropped in during the meeting and talked to the members on the subject of sticking to the league.

HORSLEY IN EAST.

David Horsley, the head of the Centaur Film Company, is in New York this week, coming from Los Angeles, to dispose of some important business matters that required his attention. He expects to remain in the East for about a week before returning to the West Coast, where his producing forces are now at work in new studios. On his trip East he was accompanied by G. J. Lounsbury.

Minneapolis Convention Big Success

First Annual Meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors Association of the Northwest Draws Large Number of Trade---Organization Perfected and Officers Elected for the Coming Year---Exposition Feature Well Patronized and Firms Showing Goods Do Satisfactory Business---Future Outlook Good.

By James S. McQuade.

THE FIRST ANNUAL convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of the Northwest opened at the West Hotel, Minneapolis, Monday, May 3, at 10 a. m. The convention met in closed session with about one hundred and fifty members present, H. H. Green, president of the Minnesota organization, presiding. The chief business transacted was the appointment of the following committees on credentials and auditing—Credential: J. E. Sherwood, Madison, Wis.; Chairman H. D. McCoy and James Agnew, Minneapolis, and C. E. Foster, Stanley, Wis.

Auditing: The present executive committee of the Minnesota organization was appointed auditing committee of the new organization, the members being W. A. Scott, Chairman, Red Wing, Minn.; Jay E. Gould, Glencoe, Minn.; Frank Nemic, St. Cloud, Minn.; J. Christopherson, Benson, Minn., and E. A. Nelson, Duluth, Minn.

The executive committee met in closed session at one-thirty p. m. Motion was made by N. W. Nelson that the secretary, president and treasurer of the Minnesota association be required to give a daily report of receipts and disbursements during the entire convention, starting from date, same to be submitted to the executive board each day at nine o'clock a. m., for the day previous. This was seconded by J. E. Gould. Put to vote and carried. Motion was also put to vote and carried that all copies or memoranda of all contracts, verbal or otherwise, of all monies due the association, also all expenses incurred, such as banquets, automobile rides, etc., shall be given the executive board. Mr. Nelson also made a motion which was carried, that all invoices covering all monies paid out from the association treasury since the last executive board meeting, Feb. 23, 1915, must be O. K.'d by a majority of the members of the executive board, and if not O. K.'d by them the association would not be responsible for any unauthorized bills incurred by any officers.

Secretary W. A. Steffes was called into the room at this point and, after some discussion, a motion was made by Mr. Nelson and carried that the executive board meet with the secretary at 7 o'clock that evening to go over the bills and reports and financial matters and that the secretary be instructed in this motion to have a full report ready Tuesday morning at 9 o'clock.

At two thirty the convention again met in closed session, with President Green in the chair. Mr. Sherwood, of the credentials committee, reported that quite a number of delegates, when registering, had forgotten to give the names of their home towns, and the necessary corrections were made. At this juncture, it was shown by D. G. Rodgers, of Minneapolis, that no convention of the members had yet changed the name of the organization from the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Minneapolis to that of The Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of the Northwest, and drew attention to the fact that the dues of original members had been placed at one cent per seat while new members were being admitted at the fifty-cent rate.

A motion by Secretary Steffes that the minutes of the previous convention be read, in order to clear matters, was carried and, after the reading of several pages, a discussion was raised by several members to ascertain if a resolution had been made changing the name of the organization as already referred to. Secretary Steffes then stated that, according to his knowledge, the organization was working under the old name with the privilege of getting members in other states, as it was conceded at the last convention, by certain members, that it would be well to do this. The right to admit members at the fifty-cent rate by the officers was then questioned by Mr. Rodgers, as a resolution had been passed in June, 1914, to the effect that it was impossible to maintain an organization on the dues then paid and that every member should pay one cent per seat for every seat in his house.

It was found that the resolution passed June 25, 1914, had not been rescinded and, after much discussion, the reading of the minutes of the previous meeting was discontinued and the motion was made, seconded and carried that all members taken in at fifty cents should be considered in good standing in the organization. Mr. Nelson then moved that the association, from that time on, be called the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of the Northwest, including Wisconsin, North and South Dakota, Minnesota, Iowa, the northern part of Michigan, Nebraska and Montana. After further discussion the motion was carried. Secretary Steffes was then asked by Mr. Nelson to show, in an informal manner, how, when the present convention is over, the association would not be in debt, as it is the intention of members to clean the debt up, elect a new set of officers and have a clean slate. Mr. Steffes replied that he would make his annual report Wednesday morning or on Wednesday afternoon, at the latest.

"We went ahead the best we saw fit in order to get the most money and get the exhibitors in," said the secretary. "Before the convention is over we will have five hundred members paid up to July, 1915. When you consider that we started with forty-five members, and now have five hundred, it looks pretty good. If you wanted men to go through the country to get members, it would cost five hundred dollars for every one hundred members. I feel satisfied that everything will be well taken care of and perhaps we shall have a little on the right side of the ledger when this convention is over. It is my personal request that every exhibitor be in this room when my report is read on Wednesday." The following committee was then appointed to draw up new by-laws and a constitution: D. W. Chamberlain, Chairman, Minneapolis; J. E. Sherwood, Madison, Wis.; Geo. Carrish, Minneapolis; C. W. Gates, Aberdeen, S. Dak., and H. H. Green, Minneapolis. Adjournment was then made until ten o'clock a. m. Tuesday.

The convention did not meet until two-thirty p. m. Tuesday, when Mayor W. G. Nye, of Minneapolis, delivered an address of welcome. He encouraged members on their organization and reminded them that every trade, profession and calling has its organization and that their asociation must prove valuable in many ways. That the owners of moving picture theaters are engaged in a public business and that the public must be considered first of all.

He said: "They must offer exhibitions that are satisfactory and pleasing to the public." He congratulated Minneapolis exhibitors on the fact that he had always found them eager to popularize their shows. D. W. Chamberlain, Minneapolis, when the Mayor had retired, moved that the representative of the Moving Picture World and other members of the trade press be permited to remain during the meetings. The motion was carried unanimously and the writer, on being called on to address the convention thanked Mr. Chamberlain, the chair and the convention for their courtesy.

After minor matters were discussed, Chairman Sherwood, of the credentials committee, stated that nothing special could be reported until Thursday. Chairman Chamberlain, of the by-laws committee, asked for one more meeting of his committee to perfect matters, but vice-president Gilosky asked that the report be made at once, unless the officers of the association wanted to report first. It was moved and carried that the by-laws committee be heard after Secretary Steffes announced that the officers reports would not be ready until Wednesday afternoon.

Wm. J. Sweeney, of Chicago, who entered the room, was asked to address the convention, but excused himself on account of an appointment. The by-laws were then read in toto and afterwards section by section, after the convention had resolved itself into a committee of the whole. Among the salient changes recommended and adopted were, that all checks shall be signed by the president, treasurer and secretary. That the secretary shall receive a salary of $75 per month and $5 per month additional for every additional one hundred members taken into the association, and that if the secretary is compelled to take a trip on matters connected with the association the necessary amount be appropriated by the executive board, that the annual conventions of the association shall be held during the month of May, the date to be set by the executive board, that the executive committee shall meet quarterly or on call of the chairman, that under the "order of business" the item "new business" be followed by "election of officers."

It was found that the article on assessment of dues had been overlooked in the reading, after D. G. Rodgers had moved that the corrected by-laws be adopted as a whole and that the committee should incorporate them under the laws of the state and have the name of the association copyrighted. The matter was then voted laid on the table until after the reading of Secretary Steffes report on Wednesday. Adjournment was then made until ten a. m. that day.

The banquet on Tuesday night at the Dyckman Hotel lasted from ten o'clock until midnight, after which dancing was in order until three o'clock a. m. Four hundred guests were present. The toastmaster was Otto T. Raths, of St. Paul, and now postmaster there. Speeches were made by the Governor's secretary, Chas. M. Andrist; Harry H. Green, president; James Gilosky, vice-president; G. A. Van Duzee, J. E. Sherwood, Secretary Steffes, Wm. J. Sweeney, of Chicago, and M. D. Pearce. The convention did not meet until two o'clock Wednesday afternoon.

A resolution was offered by G. A. Van Duzee, of Minneapolis, and carried. that the association heartily endorse "Amusements," a Minneapolis weekly paper devoted to the trade, and that it be declared the only official paper of the organization The poster question was next taken up and the sensation and misleading pictures on some posters were condemned as injurious to the business. No motion was made, but a general discussion was entered into for the good of the trade.

Secretary Steffes then read his annual report and it was referred to the executive committee and a specially appointed committee of three, Messrs. Rodgers, Van Duzee and Smithers, for auditing and report. A rising vote of thanks was next given Messrs. Gilosky, Hays and Green, members of the legislative committee, for their admirable work. A Sunday closing bill, censorship bill, license bill and fire marshal bill for Minnesota had been killed before passage. Dues and membership were again discussed as arranged the previous day. Dues were fixed at one cent per seat of house capacity and for not more than one thousand seats for any members. It was also included in the by-laws that an auditing committee of three, appointed by the president, shall be at the place of any convention, two days before it meets, for the auditing of the books. The by-laws as amended were then adopted, as a whole, by the convention. Adjournment was then made until Thursday at one o'clock, when the election of officers will be the most important item of business.

Election of Officers.

The convention, although announcing that it would meet at 1 o'clock sharp Thursday afternoon for the election of officers, was not called to order until 3 o'clock p. m. Although the reports of the credential committee and of the executive committee had not yet been made, it was moved, seconded and carried that the election of officers should take precedence of any other business. As President Green was on the slate for president of the new organization he called James Gilosky, vice president, to the chair. Secretary Steffes was also a candidate for re-election, and Chairman Gilosky appointed Chas. E. Gates of Aberdeen, South Dakota, secretary pro tem.

Tom Foster, of Stanley Falls, Wis., in a speech that abounded in metaphors and that was delivered with great force and spirit, placed the name of H. H. Green before the convention for president. Otto N. Raths of St. Paul, now postmaster of that city and a former president of the Minnesota Association, seconded the nomination.

D. G. Rodgers placed in nomination for president James Gilosky of St. Paul, vice presiednt of the state association for the past year. The seconding speech was made by C. E. Van Duzee of Minneapolis. Mr. Gilosky, however, arose and declined the nomination after thanking his sponsors. This resulted in the unanimous election of H. H. Green of Minneapolis, as president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of the Northwest for the ensuing year.

V. E. Balleau, Albert Lee, Minn., and D. W. Chamberlain, Minneapolis, were nominated for the office of vice president, but the declination by Mr. Chamberlain for the office led to the unanimous election of Mr. Balleau.

W. A. Steffes and Ed. Hinz, both of Minneapolis, were the candidates for the office of secretary of the new organization, Otto N. Raths naming the former and Jacob Barnet, of Minneapolis, naming the latter. A ballot vote showed 65 votes for Steffes and 20 for Hinz.

O. C. Stelzner, treasurer of the state organization for the past year, was unanimously elected as treasurer of the northwestern association.

The executive committee was then elected and is comprised of James Gilosky, St. Paul; D. W. Chamberlain, Minneapolis; W. A. Scott, Red Wing; H. P. Green, Minneapolis, and E. A. Nelson, Duluth. This committee is a very strong one, the members being conservative business men and all successful exhibitors.

The five vice presidents of the five states, included in the new organization, will be elected by the members in each state.

Booth Displays at Convention.

J. P. Seeburg Piano Co., Chicago, specially featuring the Seeburg Motion Picture Player, Style R.; represented by C. L. Redick, sales manager, Chicago; Ambrose Larson, demonstrator, also assisted by the force of the Osborn Piano Co., the firm's Minneapolis representative.

Mr. Redick told me that the Minneapolis convention, as far as real business for the people who had displays was concerned, promised to equal or surpass the Dayton or New York conventions of last summer.

Metro Features Corporation of New York, represented by W. C. Larrabee, manager of the Minneapolis office; Ed. H. Hoyt, traveling representative; Wm. C. Preller, New York representative; Al Hixon and John May, traveling representatives, and O. N. Davies, a director of the home office, New York City.

Fox Film Corporation, New York, represented by E. A. Westcott, manager of the Minneapolis office; J. M. Kuhn and S. Robinson, traveling representatives.

Feature Film Co. of St. Paul, represented by S. R. Thompson, owner and manager, and Ed. Thompson, manager of the machine and supply department.

Laemmle Fim Service, Minneapolis, represented by James V. Bryson, manager; Julius Bernheim, Lee Horn and Harry Muir, and O. A. Peterson, chief mechanic. In the Laemmle booth were Walter W. Evans, Jr., of the Precision Machine Co., New York City, and Herbert Griffith, representing the Nicholas Power Co., of New York City.

The Selig Polyscope Co., represented by C. W. Seignious, traveling representative, who was kept busy all the time answering questions regarding the "Selig Special" trip and also concerning the Selig product of the V. L. S. E., Inc.

The General Film Co., of Minneapolis, represented by Harry Buxbaum, local manager, and C. C. Knapp, traveling representative.

The Western Motion Picture Advertising Association, of Minneapolis, represented by O. C. Stelzner, president; C. H. Darrell, general manager; D. C. Beard, fiscal manager; Harry Levy, representing the New York office in the Candler Building; L. B. Roberts, advertising sales manager, and Dudley C. Beard, manager of the installation department.

Famous Players Star Feature Film Service of Minneapolis, controlling Paramount productions, represented by B. Barnet, proprietor; D. C. McClellan and N. J. Blumberg, traveling representatives.

Elliott-Sherman Film Co., of Minneapolis, represented by Harry A. Sherman, president and general manager, and J. Elliott, secretary and treasurer. This firm also represents the Life-Photo Film Corporation of New York City.

Bartola Musical Instrument Co., of Chicago, represented by Chas. C. Pyle, general sales agent; Dan Barton, general manager and inventor; W. G. Maxcy, president; Harry Awe, demonstrator, and Geo. A. Goodson, salesman.

World Film Corporation of New York City (the largest individual booth on the office floor of the West Hotel), represented by E. D. Selden, manager Minneapolis office, and J. H. Margoles and B. Darnell, traveling representatives.

United Program Film Service of Minneapolis, Inc., represented by W. L. Merrill, president and Minneapolis manager; A. R. Nelson and Sam Freedman, traveling representatives, and J. Earl Moor, city representative.

Zenith Feature Film Co., of Duluth, represented by J. F. Cubberley, manager, J. L. Morrissey, secretary and treasurer, and Mrs. J. F. Cubberley and Miss Solheim.

Pathe, Inc., represented by W. P. Allen, manager Minneapolis office; H. P. Johnson, Teddy Karatz, T. Quandral, C. L. Booth and Frank Woskie, traveling representatives, also by a real Live Rooster, the notes of whose crowing periods rose high above the din around him.

Rowe Walker Features, Minneapolis, represented by Harry Rowe and L. W. Walker, proprietors.

The Ohio Picture Frame Co., represented by Harry Rowe and L. W. Walker, proprietors.

The Ohio Picture Frame Co., represented by J. J. Scheuer, of the Minneapolis office.

M. Rosenberg & Co., Minneapolis, featuring Selig's "The Spoilers" and Griffith's "The Escape," represented by Al. Rosenberg.

Western Kriterion Film Service of Minneapolis, represented by Fred S. Meyer, general manager, Clarence Phillips, assistant manager, and E. R. Mencel, special traveling representative.

E. E. Fulton Co., of Chicago, representing the firm's supply department and principally the Lubin film product of the V. L. S. E., Inc., represented by C. H. Fulton, in charge of the Chicago office film department of Lubin films, and Mannie Gottlieb, salesman.

The North American Film Corporation, Minneapolis office, represented by Max Weisfeld, manager.

V. L. S. E., Inc., represented by Frank H. Harris of the corporation's Kansas City office.

Twin City Poster Mounting Co., Minneapolis, represented by S. A. Louis, manager.

American Photoplay Co., of New York City, represented by H. Herman, sales manager.

Cushman Motor Works of Lincoln, Neb., represented by R. M. Cleveland, electrician and specialist.

Automatic Ticket Selling & Cash Register Co., of New York City, represented by H. C. Simeral, special representative.

Twin City Theater Exchange, Minneapolis, represented by James L. O'Brien, owner. Mr. O'Brien was formerly president of the Iowa branch of the M. P. E. L. of A., under President Neff's regime.

Arcus Ticket Co., Chicago, represented by S. E. Peterson, salesmanager.

National Cash Register Co.'s Issuing Machine, of Dayton, O., represented by A. A. Adler, special representative.

American Photoplay Co., of San Francisco, represented by W. J. Dyer, St. Paul.

Camera Craft Co., Minneapolis, represented by H. A. Hatfield, proprietor, and Reuben Olsen, operator.

Convention Notes.

Mrs. M. E. Brinkman, owner of the Brinkman theater, Bemidji, Minn., and Miss Myrtle Vinton, owner of the Myrtle theater, Bridger, Mont., were two of the interested woman exhibitors who attended the convention. Miss Vinton ran her own dramatic show for eighteen years and has been in the moving picture exhibiting business for the past six months. She came on especially to receive education in the business and was one of the promptest exhibitors present in attending the sessions. Miss Vinton runs a program of General Film Co.'s product with an occasional feature by the Cheyenne Feature Film Co. of Wyoming. On feature nights 15 and 25 cents admission is charged and regular nights, 10 cents straight.

John May, manager of the Pastime theater, Red Wing, Minn., was one of the boosters for George Kleine pictures. He booked a return date for "Officer 666" and said: "A Kleine picture now and then, and then some, is good for business." Other callers at the Kleine booth were W. L. Myers and A. J. Diebold, owners of the Palace theaters in Waterloo, and Cedar Rapids, Ia., respectively. They complimented Manager Thall on "The Commuters," which they asserted is a magnificent vehicle for the introduction of Irene Fenwick, George Kleine's latest star. Messrs. Myers and Diebold closed bookings for all the George Kleine features, including all future releases. Manager Roesner of the Colonial theater, Winona, Minn., also arranged for the booking of all George Kleine features for that house.

I just caught a glimpse of Frank H. Harris from the district office of the V. L. S. E., Inc., Kansas City, so busy was he in attending to numerous inquiries concerning that product. I understand that the bookings for Minnesota will be handled from the Kansas City office.

J. E. Willis, district manager for the G. F. Co., Chicago, was another busy man at the convention. He returned to Chicago Thursday night, May 6.

C. W. Seignious, who attended to the numerous callers at the Selig booth, was kept busy from early morning until late at night. He secured quite a number of exhibitors who will take advantage of the Selig Special Trip to the big fair at San Francisco.

Wm. J. Sweeney of Chicago, was one of the most honored guests at the convention. He seemed to know everybody and everybody seemed to be glad to know him.

During a short conversation with D. G. Rodgers, proprietor of the Nicolet theater, Minneapolis, I learned that he was formerly in the manufacture of the mill supply product at Paterson, N. J., and that he came to Minneapolis about two and a half years ago to engage in the same line of business. He was attracted, however, by the moving picture exhibiting business and has made quite a success in Minneapolis. His house seats 350 people and runs high class proprams of the Universal make, for which he charges 10 cents.

O. F. Spahr, vice president and manager of the Enterprise Optical Mfg. Co., also stopped over during the convention week in Minneapolis, while on a trip through the Northwest territory in the interests of his company. Mr. Spahr chanced to be near Mr. Rodgers and myself when we were talking and was much pleased to overhear Mr. Rodgers say: "I use the Motiograph machine and think there is no other like it." Naturally, Mr. Spahr immediately became a friend of the urbane Mr. Rodgers.

I was so busily occupied during my stay in Minneapolis that I was unable to witness an exhibition in Saxe's beautiful new theater, the Strand. It has a magnificent front which is splendidly illuminated at night. No one can pass along Nicolet or Hennepin avenue without being attracted by its brilliancy. I understand the house is doing capacity business.

The big parade at the convention Wednesday night, May 5th, was a great success. It started at 10 o'clock and it was long after midnight before the last parader and frolicker got tired of whizzing through the streets in automobiles, the machines tooting and the masqueraders making a deafening noise with horns and their voices. The sidewalks on Hennepin and Nicolet avenues were absolutely impassable, as the whole population of the city seemed to be downtown. I have never been in a convention city yet where there were so many moving picture fans. Thousands of these joined in the automobile parade and were just as enthusiastic as any exhibitor.

Secretary W. A. Steffs, President H. H. Green and other officers and members of the executive committee, are to be congratulated for the successful manner in which they brought off the events of the amusement program. Had they exercised the same care in the supervision of the convention sessions, much time would have been saved and a great deal more work would have been accomplished.

A very pleasant surprise was given the convention Thursday afternoon, just after they had convened at 3 o'clock.

Miss Beverly Bayne, one of Essanay's well known popular leading women, was escorted to the platform by A. A. Thomas, of the Metropolitan Opera House, Owatona, Minn., and was introduced to the convention by President H. H. Green. Miss Bayne charmingly stated that she was glad to meet the exhibitors in convention and more than pleased to come to Minneapolis and the northwest as well. She reminded them that she was busy at the Essanay studio always, but that the management had sent her out to the convention. Miss Bayne was given an ovation as she retired.

British Notes

AMONG exhibitors of motion pictures in the industrial districts of England and where the thirst for the war-drama appears to be insatiable, it is not uncommon to encounter frequent complaints at the quality of many of the topical dramas now being rushed on the market. Actual faking and apparent faking are the two points under controversy which the vogue of the war picture has precipitated. The faked battle scene whether screened as a drama or a topical is in substance nothing more than the producer's fancy. But as a stronger attraction than the "real thing" is the exhibitor's fact. In Paris, I am told, the cult of the faked war picture is astonishingly in the ascendent. In this country it is undoubtedly outgrowing its former prejudices. This is not difficult to understand. It is due in the first place, thanks to a close fisted censor—to necessity. That necessity is also fostered by choice. Furthermore where military operations are concerned, the faked picture is often infinitely more interesting than the real one. The man in the street prefers to see military manoeuvers executed in a manner comprehensible to his intelligence, and if actual records of battle scenes present to him a bewildering mass of military engagements there remains nothing to say against the man who caters for his particular tastes. A few cases have sufficed to show the adaptability of the same policy to topicals. The parade of troops at the Lord Mayor of London's last show was recently reissued as the departure to the front of a certain regiment. It was clearly incongruous to subtitle it as such, but as the soldiers were those who actually did depart for the front, the film represented them to better effect than one of the actual departure could possibly have done, it is a form of inconsistence not to be condemned in a hurry.

There is some distinctly subtle motive actuating the perigrinations of a certain comedian recently acquired by the —— film company of America. In one particular makeup he is the living double of a much maligned British politician. It is unauthoritatively stated that this gentleman visited a picture exhibition upon the recommendation of associates to see for himself what "he" was supposed to be doing in America.

My remarks last week respecting the probability of the motion picture show usurping the saloon by reason of the latter's enforced early closing have received a counter blow. Two days after the paragraph appeared in the World the Manchester authorities decided that motion picture shows must also close their doors at 10 p. m. The order has not yet been drafted into force and should it become law it will not be without vigorous protest from local exhibitors.

Mr. Paul J. Rainey's new series of natural history pictures are being given in London for the first time this week. London, unlike any other city in the country, seems to be the place par excellence for natural history motion pictures. The Scott Antarctic pictures of Mr. Pouting, which have just been withdrawn after an exceptionally long run, made a profit of £25,000 upon their exhibition.

The four leading kinema films in France—it would be invidious to discriminate further—have been invited to co-operate with the Ministry of War in compiling an anthalogy of films recording military progress of the Allied forces on the Western front. It is freely stated that the idea of this department is to combat the German propaganda, promoted by the aid of the moving picture in neutral countries.

Exhibitors! Keep your eye on your bill boards. Marie Lloyd, the variety artiste, has successfully claimed £250 damages from a moving picture exhibitor through a bill poster's carelessness. It arose this way. The Charing Cross Cinema recently exhibited on the same programme a film featuring Marie Lloyd and also another dealing with the white slave traffic. The two posters overlapped each other so that the words "white slave traffic" extended over and under the portrait of the artiste.

J. B. SUTCLIFFE.

William Wadsworth in "Cohen's Luck"

PRACTICALLY the first and most notable picture presentation of the serious side of the Hebrew will be given to the screen soon by the Edison Company, who will release, as a three-part feature, the stage success, "Cohen's Luck," by Lee Arthur, the noted dramatist who wrote "The Auctioneer" for David Warfield, which was one of Warfield's greatest successes. Like this play, "Cohen's Luck" will depict without exaggeration the Hebrew nature, and as a comedy drama will tell, with its tears and laughter, the trials and the ups and downs of a Hebrew merchant—who will be in the hands of the capable William Wadsworth, remembered for his work in that character when with Annie Russell. The play is unique as all the characters are Hebrews. In order to get atmospheric realism, Director John Collins, with his company, spent a week in the East Side, New York, Ghetto, about which the play was originally written. First produced in Chicago with a star cast, "Cohen's Luck" afterward toured all the large cities with great success.

William Wadsworth.

Already connected with distinctive character creations of the screen where subtle shading revealed a mastery, William Wadsworth is expected to give a remembered creation to the screen as "Cohen."

Few, indeed, come to the stage from a profession as did Mr. Wadsworth, especially when they had been so successfully associated with it. For he was of the party of civil engineers who, in the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, surveyed the longest line in the world—the 39th parallel, which, until that time was imaginary through the most important calculation line in the world. But when Cleveland got his clever work in, Wadsworth found himself minus a government job, and in Chicago, where Modjeska, the famous actress, was playing with Otis Skinner. When Modjeska was recalled to Europe, the Shakesperian repertoire company was taken by Skinner in his first starring season which gave Wadsworth his first opportunity on the stage in character comedy. He then went with A. M. Palmer's "Alabama" and made a hit as the negro "Decatur."

The next five years was spent in stock companies in Pittsburgh, Denver, Kansas City, Philadelphia and Memphis, also in character comedy roles. Two years in "The Prisoner of Zenda" went, then Wadsworth spent six years with Blanche Walsh in noted plays, where he created practically all the parts he appeared in, including "Resurrection," "The Woman in the Case," "The Straight Road" and "TheKreutzer Sonata." Then came "The Bridge," as the Italian; and two years as the original drunk in "The Gay Life." Few characters are so laughably remembered as Wadsworth's burglar in "Seven Days."

With this career, Wadsworth went to the screen—to Edison—to do characters that would be more than shadowy figures, and in his work since that time in comedy that needs not slapstick and kick to "get over" he is at his best and remembered best. In such films as "The Winking Parson" and Wood B. Wedd, of the series of that name, in "Why Girls Leave Home" he gives highly artistic reason for holding a pre-eminent position on the screen as a comedian who creates characters that cause us to laugh with the enjoyment of carefree children.

Viola Dana will play the leading feminine role in "Cohen's Luck."

PATHE TO PRODUCE "THE GALLOPER."

Pathe has secured the picture rights to Richard Harding Davis' novel, "The Galloper," and Donald MacKenzie will start to work shortly to make a feature from it. He promises a cast of more than ordinary merit in his picture.

Moving Picture Educator

Conducted by the REV. W. H. JACKSON

The Salisbury "Wild Life" Pictures.

THE Salisbury wild life pictures are, without doubt, the best of their kind yet seen. While some of the subjects have in part been seen before, it has only been in the partial sense of brief films, which, while full of interest and usefulness, lacked the larger setting now received in these larger natural surroundings.

The native haunts of the cormorant and heron in such large flocks as have never before been pictured are a revelation. Another series might be styled Fishes in Their Native Haunts, together with a government fish hatchery, in which by tens of thousands the whole process of pisciculture is elaborately detailed. Methods of fishing by experts form an interesting lesson in fishing, as well as a study of fish life and habits.

The animal series are the most natural of the kind yet seen. Without long processions of hunters and hunting preparations, besides much staging for effect as seen in similar pictures, this series are the most realistic possible. The scene, showing the treeing and capture of a cougar or mountain lion is an ideal one—natural, true to life and the circumstances and conditions of the hunt. One realizes that perfect hunting—non-staged—conditions have been met.

The driving of the lion from a tree by cutting the branch on which he is resting and causing him to fall in the water below where he is lassoed, bound and carried home in triumph while still alive is a masterpiece of its kind.

The pictures are not a number of disjointed films, but a series of natural history subjects, interesting to the thrilling point, and thoroughly educational.

Educative Potency.

Not until we know how much we pay for one year's moving picture bill do we realize the potency of them as an educator. Mr. J. Stuart Blackton, of the Vitagraph Company, is responsible for the statement that the people of the United States have in one year paid $275,000,000 to see the pictures. If we pause to ask what is the moral result from this vast series of exhibitions we are irresistibly driven but to one conclusion, i. e., they are beneficial. The few and far between incidents which a watchful enmity has seized upon to present the evils of the moving picture have been so infinitesimally small that they have to be mentioned only to record their existence, otherwise they would not be known. The alternative thus presented therefore reveals a power which can only be made up of the following results: enlightening amusements, intellectual entertainments and educative potency.

It is the purpose at this moment only to prove the educative potency of the picture that we measure it by educational standards. The total cost to this nation for all kinds of educational work is not double the amount here given as that spent in moving picture exhibitions. The moving picture is the only entertainer which claims to be educational; it also is already linked by natural association with educational work and is auxiliary thereto; the tremendous pressure of this vast sum of money plus the millions of people who spend it, forming a natural alliance with educationalism, can but show that the moving picture possesses an educational potency which few have imagined. It is wise to study this grip which the moving picture has upon the human mind in its highest capacity, for the day for mediocre pictures is passed. The conclusion is natural that visualized amusement has become intellectual, entertaining and again, in turn, educational, an advancement which potentially presents possibilities impossible to estimate at the present time. The outlook is far beyond even the present astonishing statistical tabulations; also let it not be forgotten that while figures are cold facts that power which underlies them is such that we require the cold facts to enable us to form some conception of the results they represent, which are beyond computation.

Still Growing.

The daily papers are continual chroniclers of the growth of the moving picture in church, school and generally educative purposes.

In Hartford, Connecticut, the Federation of Churches have endorsed and recommended moving pictures. It was found that in this conservative city three years ago about 8,000 people attended the seven theaters; now about 25,000 people attend the sixteen theaters; and it is the part of wisdom to make the best possible use of this trend of the public mind. One-fourth of the population of the city are in daily attendance upon the moving picture, and the educational authorities, secular and religious, deem it best to lend their support to the uplifting side of that which secures the people's attention.

In Kansas, at a meeting of the Lutheran Synod, another extremely conservative body, the Rev. Dr. A. B. Shrader read a paper on "Problems and Opportunities for the Church." He asserted that the moral influence of strong dramas, well acted, is good. He urged the dramatization of Biblical scenes and the portrayal of Scriptural characters more extensively.

In Iowa the State College is encouraging the use of moving pictures in schools because "You can get more knowledge in a person's eyes with a teaspoon than into his ears with a scoop shovel." They accordingly have appointed a CONSULTING ENGINEER on moving picture equipment to give advice and assistance to any schools requiring his services. This latter is a splendid advance, and, without doubt, this plan will be followed in other states; such a consulting engineer has been needed and will be a welcome adviser to many institutions.

Pathe Educationals.

The Pathe "News" says, "The change that has come over the moving picture theater is most clearly illustrated by the permanent place which the educational film has secured on the programs of the big houses. * * * The educational film of today is not considered merely a 'filler in,' but is ranked as one of the most important on the program." Because of this, the Pathe educationals are finding a ready and constant place wherever shown. A new series of "bird films" have recently been released, continuing to show lives, habits and care of young of many species of the known and unknown feathered tribes; these pictures are always most welcome; they strike a note in the harmony of public opinion at all times.

The latest animal picture is a "Giraffe Hunt," which shows the excitement of the chase of these noble and valuable denizens of the Dark Continent. It should be noticed that both of the recent releases are made more valuable and attractive because of their Pathe color effects.

To Welcome the Selig Special.

The Chambers of Commerce of various western cities to be visited by the Selig Exposition Special which leaves Chicago, Ill., on Thursday, July 8th, for a tour of the west and of California, are preparing cordial receptions to the tourists, according to notification received by the Selig Polyscope Company, Chicago, Ill. The official bodies of Denver, Colorado Springs, Salt Lake City, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Santa Barbara, San Diego and elsewhere, are taking notice of the fact that several Pullman trains de luxe filled with motion picture exhibitors, newspapermen, writers and their families, and representative young men and women from the East, are to be guests of the Golden West.

According to information at hand, special entertainments are being planned for the visitors in all the cities on the itinerary and the keys of various thriving cities will be handed over to them. The Selig Jungle-Zoo is to be formally opened and the Selig tourists will virtually "own that wonderland" for several days.

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN.

IN THIS column several weeks ago it was stated that the laws against such films as the Johnson-Willard prize fight would be strictly enforced. We knew almost nothing at the time as to who would handle the films, nor did we really care. We spoke absolutely from a disinterested standpoint—on the question of prize fight films. We were desirous of being law-abiding. When Johnson, the negro, won, it was found that the motion pictures of his fight against Jeffries seriously interfered with the laws, rules, or usages of the interstate commerce. It was a severe shock to those who had not anticipated the effect that the pictures of a boxing match would have upon the interstate commerce. It is said that when some of the members of the commission heard that motion pictures of the Reno fight were to be exhibited the shock was so great that the cream served them for cereals actually turned sour.

However, Mr. Johnson—we name him first because he was the first prize fighter against whom a law was directed personally (Congressional law, we mean)—took upon himself to fight a real American boy—not a boy who won his laurels from boyhood by knocking out anything that met him along the docks or along the Bowery or other streets of the East Side; not a boy who held the back doors of so-called boxing clubs for an opportunity to display his prowess, but a real ancestral American cowboy. The only thing said against him, so far, is that he is too big. Well, Willard won the fight. All the cowboys of the nation and his wife and four children rejoiced. It is said all the white population of Havana did likewise. And there you have the limit.

This is where the paradoxical situation comes in. Notwithstanding the great enthusiasm of the white population a press dispatch from Minneapolis says Jess Willard has abandoned his personal tour and will join a Wild West show, declaring that his tour has been a financial failure. Must it be received that the negro population of this country has become overwhelming, or that an American is an undesirable champion?

Whatever opinions may be expressed upon this point there is still in evidence a case in the United States District Court in Jersey City, N. J. There an application was made to restrain the Custom House officials of Newark (by the way, how many of us knew that that little burg of Newark had a Customs Department) be restrained from interfering with the entry of the Willard-Johnson prize fight pictures at Havana. Judge Haight ruled that the Act of Congress of July 21, 1912, was the only question before him and that it was constitutional. In other words, it makes no difference whether black or white wins. "Sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander."

People who burn the bridges behind them must make their way home the best way they can. When Johnson won the fight at Reno the people of the South were the first to declare that they would not allow pictures of the fight to be shown there. They were ably assisted by many well known (white) Northern people. The only cry was to "kill the pictures." They did—to an extent. The handlers of the pictures say they got out more than even. But, whether they did or not, the fact that there was a conspiracy to "kill the pictures" is plain. Now the white population all over the country is anxious to see the pictures. Willard is all right, but they want to see a reproduction of how he did it. In John L. Sullivan's time they did not take motion pictures of fights and he was a great attraction wherever he went, but in these days, whether you be fighter or explorer, the people want authentic evidence of how you did it. Of course, while the Act of Congress of 1912 remains in force it is impossible to show the populace what Willard accomplished. He may appear and talk, but this country has become so flooded with people who claim to come from Missouri that that game falls short.

The answer is that despite his great victory Willard must keep fighting because the motion pictures to uphold his claim are barred by an act of Congress. Whether or not that act is constitutional, or reasonable, it is not our province to discuss at this time. The act was passed when pictures showing a black man winning the championship were about to be shown. No effort was made to have that act declared unconstitutional until a white man recovered the championship. But this view, apparently, has not entered into the mind of the court. The court simply holds that Congress did not exceed its powers in prohibiting the transmitting of prize fight motion pictures from one State to another.

The litigants in favor of the Willard-Johnson fight pictures says they will carry the matter to the United States Supreme Court, and hurriedly, too, because such pictures depreciate in value with the lapse of time. That is true. In that respect topical motion pictures (as many investors will testify) are like stocks of charlotte russes. They are inclined to sour on the hands.

But what about the "bridges burned behind." The sporting element that did not have its fingers in the pie when the law was passed against the Jeffries-Johnson fight pictures may see the consequences. I wonder if some of those who do not figure in the sporting element have counted the bridges they have burned behind in their vindictive fight against the motion pictures.

At a prayer meeting in a Congregational Church on Decatur street in Brooklyn recently a woman arose to give her "experience." Among other things she said she had never visited a motion picture theater, and would not; nor would she allow any one, if in her power, to do so. "I give what I have freely to the church, but not one cent will go to the devil's melting pot."

As the people left the prayer meeting one woman was heard saying: "Why, the idea! Who is she that she should criticize me, or say what I shall do. I'll give her a piece of my mind at the next meeting. I go to moving picture shows, and so do my children and my husband, and I am sure I do not feel that my money goes to the 'devil's melting pot.' The idea! Such people make me sick."

It is a safe conclusion that the radicals are doing better work in their own sphere for motion pictures than they could by regaining their senses.

Singularly enough, a stronger piece of evidence of bigotry was furnished from the same place. Many, or most, of the parishioners of the same church were formerly attendants at the Congregational Church located at the corner of Ralph avenue and Chauncey street. The support of the church dwindled until it was finally abandoned. The title remained in possession of what is known as the "home church." The property remained idle for months. Several tempting offers were refused because the owners would not sell the property if it were to be used for motion pictures. The price dropped gradually. Finally one party, who understood that an influential member of the Decatur street church was authorized to receive bids, offered the asking price and acknowledged that the bidders contemplated converting the church into a motion picture house. There was a flat refusal. More than that, the agent said no money could get the property for such a purpose. The church is now a dance hall. Music may be heard by the passers-by until 1 a. m. Among the signs are "Three lessons for 35 cents," "Dancing instructors furnished," "Ice cream and soft drinks." Another reads "no intoxicants sold here." That must be a consolation for the holders who would not allow the place to be converted into a motion picture theater. To their minds a dancing hall is superior.

Is it surprising that a cry should be raised against indiscriminate censorship?

Rev. Canon Chase lives in Brooklyn. He is the original and irreconcilable opponent of motion pictures. Is there anything on record to show he has displayed the same zeal against dance halls that he has against motion pictures? Has he ever questioned privately or publicly the propriety, or advisability, of converting a church into a dance hall? If the conversion of the Ralph Avenue Church has been so recent (and it has been in operation for months) as to escape his notice, what has he got to explain his silence in regard to the transformation of the Baptist Church at the corner of Somers street and Rockaway avenue into a dance hall? That place was transformed a few years ago and is not located distantly from the Ralph avenue place, and yet at least one picture house in the same territory was closed for weeks because the owner admitted children under the age limit. Speeches and sermons are well enough in their place, but when prejudice carries the speakers to the discriminating point it is time to ask "Are you burning bridges?"

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Summer Is Coming.

SUMMER is coming. It can't be helped. It is something that happens every year. What are you going to do about it? You can do two things. You can bow to the will of Fate or you can fight. George E. Carpenter puts it very neatly in the last Real Reels when he says:

What are you going to do this summer? Close up?

With the annual migration to the cool canyons, resorts, trout streams and the old swimming hole the motion picture clientele in the good old summer time is sadly shot to pieces.

About the first thing an exhibitor does is to use the pruning knife, starting right in at the screen and orchestra pit and slashing right and left up both aisles and out into the street until the hired help salary column looks like a Swiss cheese. Then he sometimes gives his film service thirty days' notice and goes out on a still hunt for something cheap in the line of gelatine excitement.

He gets it, and his steady patrons remark that the quality of the goods offered at the old stand has hit the toboggan, and they, too, drift over to the shady side of the street. Things go from bad to worse and eventually the exhibitor is led to remark that the summer of 1915 is the worst in the history of his film experience.

On the other hand, it has been the experience of the man with an eye to the future that he cannot afford to let down on the quality of his screen offerings during the summer months if he wants to keep solid with his public.

He rightly argues that there are not as many people available as there are in winter when everybody is home and at a loss how to spend the long evenings. He argues that he must get the biggest percentage into his house and the only way to do so is to give his patrons the best available. If his competitor cuts expenses and puts on an inferior program he will be the man to benefit thereby. If his opposition does not then it will be a case of a battle royal and the survival of the fittest.

But the point to be driven home is the fact that the dear old public is a fickle jade and if you let your screen standard drop during the summer months you will have a hard time getting your old patrons back again in the fall, especially if your competitor keeps up his stride.

Nobody expects to make a fortune in motion pictures during the dog days, but if anybody does make any money it is always the man who gives his clientele the best available; in fact, the average exhibitor feels happy, if he breaks even during the very warmest weather.

Think it over.

The Casual Patron.

Mr. Carpenter overlooks one best bet. It must be remembered that in summer most of the dramatic theaters are closed. Some of them are only too glad of an excuse to shut their doors. This drives into the picture theaters a class of patronage that does not regularly patronize photoplays. Give them old and rainy films or offer poorly produced stuff and they'll come but once or twice. Give better material and, city or country, you can build business. In the city you can catch the stay-at-homes. In the country you can get the visitors. The harder it is to get business the greater should be our effort. An unfavorable condition should be an incentive, not a discouragement. If you're up against a hard proposition buck it. Something must give way. If it is not you it will be the condition. If it has been costing you four cents to draw a nickel be willing to spend four and a half rather than get no nickel at all. Perhaps you'll have the nerve to buy seven cent dimes instead. Some exhibitors cannot understand that it is easy to raise the price of admission and the service at the same time. It is not easy if the wrong tactics are tried, but why try the wrong tactics? Make people realize that the show at double the price gives three times as much and they'll thank you for a bargain sale. Come right out in the open. Tell them that Summer is an off season and just for that you are going to make them come.

Tell them you are going to keep your house so cool that it will be foolish to sit on the front porch and you'll give so good a show that they will feel more than repaid. Instead of letting Summer put the Indian Sign on your house, make it work for you in raising the standard admission. If you already have the price up, KEEP IT UP. Don't drop it back to the old rate and have your fight to make all over again in the fall. This business is no longer the automatic, self-running affair it was five years ago. Then you could open a house and people would fall in. Now you must drag them in, but it can be done, nicely and easily. It must be done if you would keep open. If you have to fight an airdome with an indoor house, fight with fans and ice water instead of with abuse. You'll get the rainy night business and more and all of the matinee trade. If only it will teach you to hustle, Summer will be a good thing.

Here Comes Kell.

John William Kellette, of the Thanhouser theater, sends in a program so well arranged that it is being reproduced. Not all of the text can be read, but the aim is to give the layout rather than the letter press. The front page is all house and the back all outside advertising, the house underlines taking the more valuable space around the program, and yet, even using his best space for himself, the program shows a profit. By boxing in the different sections the various announcements can be isolated and yet be massed around the current bill. This layout would be a good one for the Hennegan or U. S. covers in color.

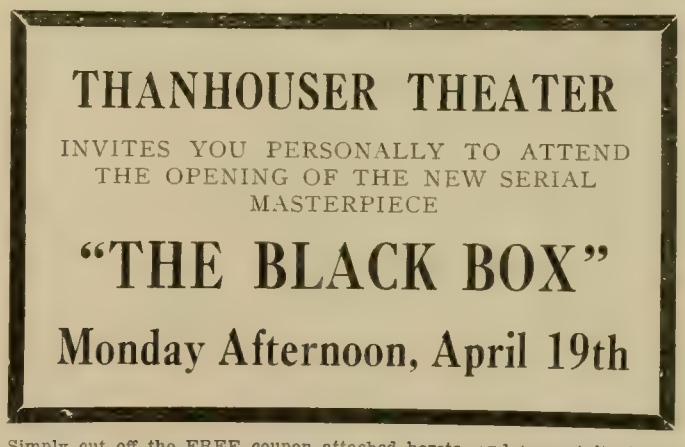
Another piece of advertising is a free matinee ticket to the first installment of "The Black Box." Most of the text is small, and the only display is on the name of the house, the attraction and the date, wherein Mr. Kellette conforms to the best usage—as usual. The title is framed in six point border, in this case particularly appropriate. It might have been even better to have used one-point rule on the top and left-hand side with six point on the other two to suggest a box in perspective. The matter reads:



Simply cut off the FREE coupon attached hereto, and present it at the door, Monday afternoon, between 2.30 and 4.30, and you will see "The Black Box," acknowledged the master production of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. Children must be accompanied by parent or guardian, if under 16 years of age.

Take this opportunity to become the guest of the management, to see the finest little theater in the city, which boasts of Newest and Best Pictures; finest projection, and coziness, and hear music that adds to the "atmosphere" of the Photoplay.

BETTER COME EARLY TO BE ASSURED OF A SEAT.

John William Kellette, Manager.

The coupon is part of the ticket cut off with perforating rule and runs:

Admit Bearer to Afternoon Performance of "The Black Box," Monday, April 19th, 1915, Thanhouser Theater, 290 North Avenue.

Season tickets in two colors are sold, one for children and the other for adults. The lower edge shows the numerals of from one to fifteen, to be punched out on the proper days, and the card specifies that the ticket is good on Mondays only. Where a slightly reduced rate is offered, it is better to state that "In consideration of the reduced rate at which this ticket is sold it is understood that this ticket shall be good only on Monday evenings between——" and give the opening and closing date of the serial. It is seldom that trouble will arise through the ticket being offered on other evenings, but the line is important in its sound and more nearly makes the ticket a contract since the necessary "valuable consideration" is shown to exist.

The free ticket was used in parts of the town as remote from the house as it is possible to get in New Rochelle, and yet it brought a response of more than two hundred, most of it "new business." For that matter Mr. Kellette adds that they are drawing from Larchmont and other suburbs of the suburb. It pays, even in a small town, to advertise and back up the advertising with a well-run house.

This Tells All.

This is from the Mystic theater, Rae Peacock, manager, Stafford, Kan.:

IT'S ON THE "MYSTIC"
COMPLIMENTARY PASS ONE.

It's a Girl

We suppose that had it been twins the card would have read, "Pass two." We beg to add our congratulations.

Glasses for Girls.

The Paramount theater, Newark, recently gave out souvenir mirrors and Oscar A. Morgan, the resident manager, writes:

> We worked a new stunt on our Tuesday Souvenir Nights. For ladies we gave away a two-cent article and just by advertising in advance that "The ladies, upon receiving this souvenir would see something they would never care to part with." Not one single person was offended and still thought the idea clever. Of course, you might have guessed what it is already. An ordinary two-cent mirror with celluloid back with profile of Cleopatra.
> It was real enjoyment to stand in the lobby and hear the different expressions as each woman unwrapped the mirror.

An "ordinary two-cent mirror" does not mean a cheap looking one. Plato sells very handsome ones at that price. A pocket mirror about the size of half a dollar that will go into a purse or vest pocket is always a good souvenir, particularly if it has the name of the house plainly but inconspicuously lettered on it. If you can give your patrons something they will keep and something that will remind them of you, you'll be remembered a long while for a small investment. Many clever things can be picked up at the novelty houses and distributed. It is not a good plan to make souvenirs too common, though, or they fail of proper appreciation.

Took the Hint.

The Spotlight, the general house organ of the Galesburg, Ill., theaters, now appears with a town and date line on the cover and inside head. It is an improvement. The makeup, too, has been improved on, and the result is excellent. It is clean and well printed and it gives a little general reading to take the curse off the advertising. Here is something from the sheet that will be good for dodgers and programs.

> The world's greatest fools are:
> The man who tells his wife he got a raise.
> The man who don't get a raise.
> The Simp who pawned his overcoat early in March.
> The undertaker who runs for office against a physician.
> The young man with blond whiskers who insists on raising a mustache.
> The street car conductor who buys his property in town.

And of course to this number the exhibitor will add the man who misses a coming feature or the regular show. The general organ seems to be a growing idea and the Spotlight is in many ways one of the best of these. Just a little more original matter would double its value to the house and the reader alike, to say nothing of the advertisers. Right now they are taking the trouble to get up original features, one late story being a discussion of photoplay kisses that is really readable. Harriet M., for instance, says, "Long kisses make me fidgety. While I don't think they should stop them altogether, I do feel that medium-size smacks are the best." If that is the way Harriet feels about it and the Galesburgers insist on long-drawn sweetness, there are others in other towns willing to oblige or Harriet can move to Pennsylvania, where kisses are carefully measured by the inch.

These general house organ stunts differ from the individual house organ in that there must be something to make the people read it or the advertisers are swindled and the house managers get no good of their space. The Spotlight has the right idea.

Better.

C. H. Lynch, of the Palace, Spring Valley, Ill., promised to do better on his second issue of the Palace News. He did. He did even better than he said he was going to. He split up the solid back page of ads by taking one column over to page three and now all ads are next pure reading, as is specified in the best contracts. This stuff on matinees may help you, too:

> The other afternoon a very prominent Spring Valley lady attended one of our week day matinees. To say that she was delighted is putting it mild. She said: "I hadn't the least idea that the show was so good in the afternoon. You see I had been attending the evening performance and had always imagined that the pictures were much better if viewed in the evening. But now I know that the matinee is just as good if not better, as the theater is not usually crowded in the afternoon and I can sit and enjoy the show in solid comfort. Hereafter every spare afternoon I have, I shall attend the matinee."
> Now we are convinced that if every lady knew how pleasant it is to come to our matinees that we would soon have a very nice attendance in the afternoons. You see the full five reel show, hear the same good music and enjoy yourself generally at the matinees. We suggest that the very next afternoon you have to spare, that you come in and see for yourself the comfort and convenience of attending Palace matinees. We open at 1.30 o'clock and if you come in any time before 3 o'clock you will be in time to see the entire performance. Bring a friend or two or the children and we know you will be so pleased that you will become a regular matinee patron.

Growing.

The United program idea seems to be growing. The Amusement Herald, Roanoke, Va., is the latest to come into the field. It comes in with a sheet too long for its width. Outside of that it is a good looking sheet, but it should amputate its length.

It Pays, and Why?

C. H. Lynch, of the Palace theater, Spring Valley, Ill., sends in more issues of his Palace News and says that they have helped business 30 per cent. This is because he writes snappy stuff. He writes stuff that people like to read instead of stringing a lot of superlative adjectives on a thread of film titles. He tells about what a fine reel that he had last Thursday and adds:

> When I advertise that a certain picture is going to be exceptionally good or exceedingly thrilling, etc., you can bank on it every time that it will be so. I do not tell you that this or that picture is going to be a hummer, just to hear myself talk. No, sir. When I say a picture will be good, I know positively that it will be good because I keep well informed on everything issued in the line of pictures and when I read a review of a picture and the reviewer says: "This picture is only ordinary" or "this picture is poorly acted, carelessly directed and badly photographed," the minute I read anything like that about a picture I write right into the exchange and tell them not to send me that picture if they want to continue counting me as a good customer of their's. That is the reason why you are ALWAYS SURE to see a good show at the PALACE, no matter when you come.

If his exchange pays any attention to his letters he is lucky in having a most unusual exchange, but that is not the point. He makes the sort of talk that makes business, and in a program he can talk to all of his patrons and prospects without wasting breath. We are sorry to see that he has gone down to five cents "for the summer," but he'll probably see his mistake and go back to the other price. He puts it very nicely, explaining that some cannot come at the higher price and so he has reduced the price and the number of reels.

A program is valuable in just the degree you make it readable. Mr. Lynch makes his readable.

Uses Folders.

The Theater De Luxe, Los Angeles, used a six page railroad, employing a varied makeup. The Sunday bill comes at the top of page one, but the rest of the page and page two is given Monday to Wednesday. Thursday and Friday's film is advertised at the top of three and the bottom given to Saturday and Sunday, while page four gives the cast and story of the Thursday-Friday attraction and the back page lists the underlines. This is not at all an orderly arrangement and were it not so well printed it would look badly. As it is the effect is clean looking. At that we think that a more even division of the space, and more talk about the Saturday and Sunday bills would have been well even though Saturday and Sunday may be able to take care of themselves.

Here's A Chance.

A. K. Pay, of the Colonial, Sioux Falls, S. D., sends this note:

> I enclose you a copy of an advertisement that has proven a big money getter for "The Colonial." We sell a local manufacturer of high grade chocolates tickets to the Colonial for $50.00 the thousand, and there is one ticket placed in every half pound box of his Colonial Chocolates. In addition to the advertising we get I find that every candy ticket usually brings two or more patrons. We play all big features at ten and twenty cents. Play features exclusive.

The advertisement follows:

> A new confection has been placed on sale in the city at the various shops which will be known as "Colonial Chocolates." A theater ticket good at any performance at the Colonial theater is packed in each and every package. The chocolates are manufactured by the Minnehaha Candy Company of this city and will be made daily so that the consumer will find them fresh at all times.
> The box itself is very attractive being of morocco red with neat lettering. There has been a large demand already for the new confection.

Homer Croy, writing from Egypt some time ago, told how in Cairo the candy manufacturers issued coupons that applied to the purchase of theater tickets. Now South Dakota falls in line.

We Wonder.

Down along the Ohio river there used to be an exhibitor named Wall. We wonder if he is still there. If he is, what's he mad about, we wonder?

THE PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return, stamped envelope is enclosed.

Those Books.

PLEASE note the revised list of the books we have and offer only those not listed. And please don't get the idea that we want to swap a copy of Technique of the Photoplay for a quarter pamphlet. We do not want the books as badly as all that. We have books by Sargent, Leeds, Phillips, Wright, Slevin, Hoagland, Carr, Dench, Ball, Thomas, Jordan, Deans, The Atlas-Gordon one and two dollar books, United Play Brokerage, Radnor, Ross, Nelson, Paine, Brennan, Wiltermood, Earle, Elyod, Taylor, Rathburne, The two Katterjohn-Photoplay Enterprise Ass., and the courses of Moore, National Authors' Inst., Associated M. P. Schools and Authors Motion Picture Schools.

And we wish to thank two friends who sent their contributions in anonymously.

Miss Justice on Comedy.

Miss Maibelle Heikes Justice very exactly appraises the comedy situation in a recent letter. Miss Justice is out in Los Angeles working from the ground on a Selig series comedy among other things. She naturally gets into touch with the picture world there and writes that the majority of comedy directors are all at sea. Exhibitors declare they and their audiences are tired of slapstick. Also they are straining their bank account to get Chaplin comedies that are slapstick of the rankest sort. Very naturally when they say one thing and do another, manufacturers and producers are at a loss to decide what it is that is wanted. She adds:

> For my part I believe that audiences—refined audiences, at least—are tired of rabid slapstick, but there is sadly needed a school of good comedy writers to turn out stuff with stories to them.

As a matter of fact it will probably be found, when the solution is discovered, that lively action and a real story in combination is what is wanted and there are surprisingly few writers who can write stories in action. They can write action or stories but not the two simultaneously.

A Lubin Form Sheet.

The Lubin company has issued a new and very excellent pamphlet on the preparation of scripts. It will be sent any person sending a two cent stamp. It contains more real information than is found in many of the catchpenny two dollar books and, better still, contains none of the misinformation that spoils so many mail order books. It is only an eight page sheet, but it is concise, compact and fully informative.

Gaumont Hints.

A correspondent contributes these hints sent him by the Gaumont company. They do not use close up scenes or large interior or exterior sets. They are in the market for a few two part melodramas and some three reels. No comedies.

Double Inserts.

Professor Neal points out that two inserts are used in a recent example scene, the inserts showing the front and back of a photograph, the portrait being shown and then the inscription. He asks if this is good practise to use two inserts in so short a scene.

In this particular scene the two inserts are practically one insert divided by the action of turning the photograph over. It does not matter particularly whether the insert is written as a bust, the turning being done without flashing back to the larger scene, or as it is written. The return to the scene is made merely to give emphasis to the two showings of the insert. It is more pronounced to use two inserts than to use one scene and turn the photograph in that bust.

But in a more general way, while it is bad practise to use two inserts in one short scene or, for that matter, to be extravagant in the use of inserts at all, the effect gained and desired to be gained, is of greater importance than rigid adherence to a technical rule.

Stopping.

A woman writer wants to know if she shall continue to write or give up the work after three years of vain endeavor.

It we could look into the future as easily as that we would be down in Wall Street making millions. Not being a diviner, we do not know. We have known persons who have worked two and three years with no result who suddenly found themselves and hit a winning streak based on the work they had done. We have known others who have worked longer and who probably never will be able to write. We know a lady who quits so often, only to take the work up again, that she probably will never arrive because she never does enough consecutive work. There are three different lines of argument. We cannot tell from this what advice to give in any case without a period of observation.

If you feel it is useless, stop, because it will be useless to work in that frame of mind. If you feel that you will win and that you have made steady, or slow, progress, keep on plugging, but if you want to ask a fortune teller something that's another matter.

There Are Limits.

We like to be obliging, but when a correspondent wants to know

> How do I send out a drama
> How do I send out a comedy?

and sixteen more questions of the same sort, and it is the second letter within a week, we feel that sometimes the milk of human kindness in our breast is really a hunk of pot cheese. The correspondent is advised that the best way to send out a drama is to put it in an envelope, stamp and address it, providing a return cover against rejection. Comedies are handled in precisely the same way. Both should be written on paper and not on slates or pie plates.

Go to——.

No, this is not intended to be profane. It is suggested by a paragraph in a letter just to hand in which a writer says: "Seriously hell is a good place for a writer, providing he don't get too much smoke in his brain and he crawls out before they put the lid on."

It is another way of saying that you must have experience from which to draw if you want to get plots that will lie under the skin. The sweet girl graduates write beautiful tragedies, but they lack the punch. They are reflections of imagined mental states. They are not faithful to life. They are not convincing. The authoress knows nothing of life save what she has read in books, and can give but pallid dilutions of this.

This does not mean that if you write a story about a ruined lady and a heartless villain you must be both the female person in the black dress and the cigarette smoking man. That is not the idea, but you must know the life you write about if you would write with convincing fidelity. You must have been near it if not in it, and yet the younger the author the more "powerful" the stuff he or she wants to write. It can't be done. You must have your "hell" first; the ripening experiences that gives you an accurate sense of values, and still you must not let your experiences spoil the lift of your soul. You must endure, you must suffer, but you must not become embittered.

The boy of seventeen who writes passionate love stories is wasting his time. Let him write of the life he knows, of the pleasant things. He is not apt to write much of anything at that age, but he can at least learn how to put down the reflexes of emotion against the time when broadening views make his observations of interest to a wider circle. There are few who at twenty have done good literary work. They have not seen enough. They have not been through hell. Chatterton starved to death, but he was a genius. The affluent do not starve, but they are seldom geniuses. Their lives are too placid and uneventful.

If you have started in too soon, be willing to mark time. How can you write of death and put all the poignancy into the theme if you have never lost one very dear to you, if death is merely the casual riding to some cemetery in a hack? How can you write of love if your own affairs of the heart have been of the calf sort? Be willing to wait and ripen. Don't be in a hurry. Go to hell first—but come back.

Phillips Objects.

Henry Albery Phillips objects to a recent statement of ours that nine-tenths of the schools were frauds and that generally the tenth one was, too. He said he is the other tenth. We did not have Mr. Phillips in mind when we were speaking of schools. We do not believe that he would accept as pupils the palpably unfit or turn out as "graduates" those who have merely grasped the rudiments without being able to apply the principles. All of which does not traverse out other statement that the ONLY real school is the school of experience and hard work.

When Interest Stops.

And now comes a new form of complaint against the schools. A man in Colorado writes that he paid $25 for the Elbert Moore course, in advance, receiving two lessons. A change of occupation made it necessary for him to stop his studies for a time. Now that he is able to resume he states that two inquiries as to the remainder of the course have remained unanswered. We've found that generally the interest of the school in a pupil stops with the receipt of the tuition fee. But Langley might at least send the rest of the course and the ten dollars for the first script.

Won Out.

Another of those promising chaps who thought the game not worth the candle has come in under the wire. "Old timers" may recall a year or so ago a newspaper man whose letter was published as a text for a stick-to-it sermon. He had worked more than a year without any return except returned scripts and he was disheartened. He was cheered up because he seemed to be worth cheering up and he declared that he would sell one script at least before he quit.

Now comes a letter in which he sets ten sales as his mark for next year.

Even in his success he is not trying to rush things. That is one of the lessons the long wait taught him. He will go forward, slowly but surely, to the full measure of success. Probably 90 per cent of those who start to write photoplays quit within the first three months. Half of those remaining quit within the first year. From the others come the successful ones, qualified, competent writers with the proper sort of plot ideas and the right sort of technique, the technique of construction not merely the technique of set form.

Expression.

Evidently one writer can work plots but finds another rock on which to wreck her bark. She writes.

> My chief trouble is my inability to properly express myself. I see the thing plainly, but it seems so crude, even silly, when I read it over.

This is possibly due to the fact that properly written action tells the story in action instead of words. It is not fluent but disjointed and abrupt. The author may feel that polished writing is the mark of true merit and be striving for that when it is about the last thing she needs. On the other hand it may be that she finds it difficult to write in action. If this is the case it is a matter that experience should soon correct.

Suppose that the scene requires that Jim should meet Grace on the street. She is not known to him, but she drops a box of eggs, Jim picks up the box, not noticing the contents, makes the most of his opportunity to talk to the girl. She is anxious to recover the box, seeing that the eggs are dripping out, but Jim thinks she is merely trying to get away and wants to make an impression before she does. To give emphasis to this scene it should already have been shown that he is anxious to make her acquaintance. A very new writer might get something like this:

> One day Jim was strolling down the street when he met Grace. He smiled all over when he saw her, for he was most anxious to meet her. Grace saw him coming and she wanted to meet him too. She was terribly embarrassed, because Jim was very handsome and she was so embarrassed that she dropped a box of eggs she had just bought at the grocery store for her mother. Jim sprang forward to pick them up, wondering if she had did it on purpose to give him a chance to speak. But he did not give the eggs back to her. He stood there talking to her and he never saw that the broken eggs were dripping down on his brand new trousers. Grace saw it, but she didn't want to tell him that the eggs were spilling all over his brand new trousers. She tried to make him give her the box, but Jim would not let go, he just stood there talking to her and talking to her until at last she snatched the box from him and told him to wipe the eggs that had dripped all over his brand new trousers. Then she ran home as fast as she could and Jim tried to get the eggs off his brand new trousers.

Perhaps the Budding Genius gets hold of a book or form sheet that tells him that "The scenes should be written as briefly as possible in action." Now the B. G. knows what the trouble is and corrects it, writing, > Street. Jim and Grace enter. Grace drops box. Jim picks up. Spills all over himself. Grace laughs and runs off. He wipes off his pants.

That is brief enough and if we knew what was in the box and how he could spill a box, it might get over. Later on he knows that "the action should be brief but fully informative," so he takes down the script and takes hold again. This time he gets something like this:

> Street—Jim and Grace come from opposite sides. Jim is embarrassed. So is Grace. Grace drops a box. Jim picks it up. Stands holding it and talking to Grace. Doesn't notice that broken eggs are running out of box. He is too eager to get acquainted to notice. Grace finally gets the box and runs away. Then Jim discovers the state his pants are in. Starts to wipe off.

This is better, because it gives the director some idea of what is wanted in the action, but the trained writer knows that action means the business of the scene and he will write in action that also gives the exact business instead of leaving it to the director. This is more important in comedy than in drama because in comedy more depends on the business, but it is a good plan to give moderately full business all of the time. In business the scene might read:

> Street—Jim enters—sees Grace coming—flustered—Grace enters—embarrassed—Jim makes elaborate sidestep to let her pass, going from camera—Grace makes smaller step toward camera—loses balance—shakes off box of eggs perched on larger bundle of groceries—it drops—Grace dismayed—Jim springs forward as she is about to stoop to pick up—checks her—it will be a pleasure for him to do it—he picks up, dropping off hat in the meantime—picks that up too—drops eggs again—Grace screams—Jim reassures her—shakes at ear—can hear nothing—Grace offers to take—Jim pretends not to see—holds on—Grace speaks—aside.
> Cut-in—"My eggs!"
> Back to scene—Grace tries to get box—Jim keeps just out of reach—lets fall by side—Grace looks down—
> Bust of bottom of egg box, one corner torn—broken and fluid egg dripping on Jim's trousers.
> Back to big scene—Grace again tries to get box—Jim prevents her—doing his best to be agreeable and talking as fast as he can—Grace looks again—snatches box and runs off—Jim looks after her—cannot understand and his feelings are hurt—he thought he was doing fine—looks down—sees the mess on his trousers—look of intense disgust—he mops at trousers—not much use—Jim exits hurriedly.

This last version does not look much like the first, but the only real difference is that one is the experienced development and the other is novice work. It is just a matter of practice plus, perhaps, a knowledge of how written stuff looks upon the screen.

At the start is might be well not to try to work out a whole play but to select typical scenes and do these over and over again, trying to make the scenes shorter and at the same time more fully explanatory. Take two pages, if necessary, at the start and keep working until it is all boiled down to ten lines or five or two. The expert high jumper has pretty much the same leg muscles as the man who stumbles over a pin, but they have had more experience and are better trained, that's all.

Making Plots.

Just the moment you run into an absurdity, your story stops being a drama. We saw a script this morning. Shots have been fired in a thief chase. The corridors swarm with detectives and police. Someone happens to remember the inevitable girl detective. All rush up to her room. It happens that she has just been overpowered by the thief, but he sticks a gun at her and she murmurs, "I am all right, pray do not disturb me," so about eleven detectives and nine uniformed officers steal away from her door so as not to "disturb" her.

Another story runs under forced draft for about 1,800 feet. It is headed direct for a smash that will tie everyone up when three impossible crises are raised and the happy ending comes. But it really isn't a happy ending for about the 1900th foot most of the audience have begun to feel ill and have lost interest in the wild improbabilities of the yarn.

Keep your story running straight; true to facts and true to the probabilities. If you must yank the long arm of coincidence until it breaks or becomes disjointed, don't write that story—write something else.

It is all right in a travesty to have the polar explorer creep out of his Eskimo hut to kick the gas collector off the front stoop or buy a palm leaf from a peddler, but those things do not happen in real life and they make a dramatic story sound like travesty. A gas service seven miles south of the North Pole is no more improbable than a man who single handed licks seven ruffians and bites their dog.

On Another Tack.

Russell E. Smith, on behalf of the Photoplay Authors' League, having given the schools a good, hard run, is now turning to the question of credit and cash for authors who have their stories done into magazine tales. He argues that he can get a hundred dollars or more for a fiction story, but that if he sells the script he is supposed to give free the right to fictionize the story and that the author should be permitted to retain the fiction rights to be sold the magazine using it, the transaction being one between the author and the magazine on a basis of a second cash payment.

It is a good move, for the photoplay writer, but until the business of writing becomes better established and the manufacturer wakes to a realization of how dependent he really is upon the writer, we are afraid that such a stand will result only in harm to the complainant authors. The manufacturer regard this story stuff as an advertisement for the films. The magazine pays some hack about what it would pay for original stuff of the same hack grade. The time seems hardly ripe for such a move, but the matter is brought forward for discussion and to show that the League officials are on the job.

We Mean It.

One or two writers seem to think that our request for books on playwriting is a joke of some sort. It is not. We are in the market for any book of which we have not already a copy. We do not want to pay a dollar for a quarter book, but we are in the market for a book at a reasonable price that is not already in our files, and we'll give $5 for the Thomas full course or one dollar for the five dollar "step" lessons. We got the Moore course for fifty cents.

We Are.

That Smethport Revision scheme has a new circular that starts off "Are you skeptical?" and winds up by saying that the Motion Picture Magazine says that they have never had a complaint from a subscriber about Smethport. We are still skeptical. The Motion Picture Magazine has brought more business to the schools than any other trade publication. It is the only publication that in the face of proof advanced by the Photoplay Authors' League still gives space to concerns that it should know are not on the level. Moreover, the Motion Picture Magazine runs a revision scheme of its own. We are still skeptical, and will be so long as we receive complaints.

Safety First.

When your friend gives you a great story, ask him where he got it. Sometimes it pays to look a gift horse in the teeth.

Technique of the Photoplay

(Second Edition)

By EPES W. SARGENT

Not a line reprinted from the first edition, but an entirely new and exhaustive treatise of the Photoplay in its every aspect, together with a dictionary of technical terms and several sample scripts.

One hundred and seventy-six pages of actual text.

Special chapters on Developing the "Punch," Condensing the Script, Writing the Synopsis, Multiple Reel Stories, Talking Pictures, Copyrights, etc.

In cloth, two dollars. Full leather, three dollars.

By mail postpaid. Add ten cents if registration is desired.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles have been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 85.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

What would be the effect on the screen if you took off the rheostat casing and, with the arc burning, using a piece of asbestos as a shield for your hand, grabbed a handful of the coils and squeezed them together in a bunch? What would be the effect on the fuses? Supposing one of your fuses blew; you put in another and it blows immediately. Tell us, in detail, exactly how you would proceed to locate the trouble.

Roll of Honor on Question No. 79.

Question No. 79 brought forth the largest bunch of correct replies of any question up to date. Evidently a goodly number of operators are acquainted with the water wagon.

The Roll of Honor on Question 79 consists of Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; L. C. La Grow, Albany, New York; M. W. Larmour, Waco, Texas; John Solar, Watertown, New York; W. C. Crawford, Brooklyn, New York; Montreal, Canada; A. C, Stewart, Pendleton, Oregon; C. E. Lawson, Cleveland, Tennessee; Brandice Le May, Cairo, Illinois; J. H. Hanson, Lubec, Maine; R. R. Bliss, Park Falls, Wisconsin; H. W. Fiske, Grand Rapids, Michigan, and P. Reg. Dey, Brandon, Manitoba.

I have selected for publication the reply of Brother Crawford, not because it is any more correct, or any more complete than were several of the others, but because it set the matter forth in very good form, and where many of the replies are correct, this is the only thing I have to guide me in making selection.

Reply to Question No. 79.

By W. C. Crawford, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Question:

What is a water rheostat? How would you make one? Could you handle 500 volt current temporarily with a water rheostat? What would be the limit of amperage when using a water rheostat? Could you use a water rheostat on either A.C. or D.C.? Could you use dirty, impure water or would very clean, pure water, say distilled water, be better? Would you add anything to the water, and if so how much?

The Answer:

A water rheostat, like any other rheostat, is for the purpose of breaking the supply pressure, or voltage down to the arc voltage. Water offers resistance to the flow of current, which is the same function performed by coils or grids in other types of rheostat. A water rheostat is not a comfortable thing to work with, nor are the results obtained very satisfactory, still, as an emergency resistance device, either for A.C. or D.C., and for any voltage up to, say, 550, it serves its purpose well. Its construction is very simple. You need only an ordinary wooden barrel, two iron or steel plates, wire, water and salt. Fill the barrel about three-fourths full of ordinary water, connect one of the steel or iron plates to the lamp by means of the wire and place the plate flat in the bottom of the barrel. Connect the other plate to the supply and suspend it in the water by means of a rope and pulley, or some other convenient arrangement by means of which you can raise or lower it to alter the distance between it and the second plate. It is important that the two plates be so suspended that their faces will be practically parallel, since if one side of the plates should be closer together than the other side, there would be less resistance at that point, and, consequently, a heavy current on that side. Now dissolve about a quart of salt in a pail of water and pour it in the barrel. The salt may be thrown directly into the barrel, but it is better to first dissolve it. Your rheostat is now complete, and you have only to strike the arc and so regulate the distance between the two plates that you get the desired amperage at the arc. The current passes through the water from plate to plate. The water offers resistance, the amount of which will depend upon (a) the amount of salt used; (b) the temperature of the solution, and (c) the distance the plates are apart. If the water gets too hot, remove some, adding cold water and more salt. This, in general, is the construction and action of a water rheostat. However, some additional points are worth consideration. The plates may be hung in a vertical position, provided their surfaces be kept parallel. Ordinary iron gas pipe may be used instead of plates, but in this event there should be a wooden division in the bottom of the barrel to prevent the vertically hung plates or rods from coming into contact with each other, which would form a short circuit and blow the fuses. For the regulating device always use a non-conductor, such as a rope. Instead of salt, soda or copper, sulphide may be used, but salt is cheap, efficient and easily obtained.

Pure, clean water has very high resistance, hence could not be used without the addition of salt or something else to increase its conductivity. Dirty water would have a greater conductivity than pure water, but if the dirt be of a vegetable nature its effect would probably be unstable, and, moreover, the boiling of dirty water would not be very pleasant for the operator. In any event dirty water would be an unknown quantity, whereas clean water with salt or some other medium added is a known quantity.

Cast iron plates have a current density of approximatley 1 ampere per square inch, therefore the limit in amperage would depend on the number of square inches in the surface of the plates used. If the supply is 500 or 550 volts two barrels should be used, and they should be connected electrically in series and mechanically by an arrangement which would allow a circulation of the water between the two, thus keeping the temperature of the two barrels equal and the solution as uniform as possible in density.

This answer is a very practical one. The brother is perfectly correct, except in this: Theoretically it would be possible to use water resistance on 550 volts, but, personally, I would not like to do it unless I had a pond at my disposal. To try to take 550 volts through a series barrel arrangement would be a mighty unpleasant job, I believe. I never actually tried it, but I doubt if it would be a really practical thing to do, since the water would, I think, boil furiously within a very short time, and a constant stream of fresh water would have to be flowed in and hot water constantly drawn off and salt constantly added, or the thing would simply go up in the air. I have known of water resistance being used on 550 volts, but it was done by utilizing a small lake or pond, the system being a trolley, therefore having a grounded return, so that it was only necessary to use one plate, the ground acting as the other. Of course this would stir up organic matter, which would lower the resistance of the water and the scheme is, I presume, entirely practical. As I said I never tried a stunt of this kind, but I think that so far as the barrel is concerned 220 volts would be about the practical limit. My idea in asking about dirty water was not, as some seemed to suppose, that I expected anything of that kind to be used. I simply wished to know what you knew about the effect of dirt in water, the point being that very pure water has very high resistance and could not be used without some medium being added, whereas dirty water can be used because its resistance is lower.

Slide Making Outfit.

The Radio Ad Slide Company is putting on the market material for making typewritten gelatine slides which, while by comparison with some other methods is a little expensive, has undoubtedly points of excellence entitling it to serious consideration. The material consists of a black envelope, slide size, one side of which is cut out in the form of a standard slide mat, 3 inches by 2⅝ inches in size. Inside this envelope is a piece of specially made red carbon paper, doubled, and between its two sides is a piece of clear, transparent gelatine. The whole thing is placed in the typewriter just as it is taken from the box, and, with the ribbon shifted out from in front of the type, whatever is desired to say to the audience is typewritten on the carbon and the carbon being on both sides of the gelatine a double impression is made. So far as I can tell from looking at the gelatine, after being written on, the letters are fairly opaque, and the impression is reasonably even as to density.

I have no doubt but that these slides will project very well indeed. The letters are clear-cut and clean. After being written on, the gelatine and carbon is removed from the envelope and the envelope slit around the edge, whereupon one side forms a regulation slide mat. The gelatine and mat may then be bound between two cover glasses in the regular way.

In small quantities these slides, I am informed, cost five cents each; in boxes of fifty the price is reduced to 3½ cents each. These slides, known as the Radio Mat-Slides, have the approval of this department. They are simple to make, and will, I believe give at least reasonable satisfaction.

Seattle Operators Will Dance.

Seattle, Washington, writes:

> Seattle Moving Picture & Protecting Machine Operators' Union, No. 154, I. A., is going to give a dance on June 1st and it is intended that this dance will eclipse all past efforts. Bill Ladd, chairman of the dance committee, has already pulled off a big smoker which was a huge success. Many of the leading business men attended, among them Mayor Hi. Gill, of corncob fame, who, in his speech, blamed we picture men for bringing about prohibition. Abe Attell was also present and refereed two of the fistic bouts, of which there were four. Manager Bronson, of the local Loew's Empress theater, a native son of California, was there and he certainly is some booster, too. Mr. Clark, a Seattle Electric Company executive, promised to furnish us with extra service wire to handle the million or so candlepower we expect to use. (Huh! Business of swelling up.—Ed.) We are going to take a moving picture of the grand march, which will be led by Mayor Gill and the winner of the Universal Beauty contest. The advertising end will consist of a strip of film to be used as a trailer representing a be-yutiful loidy drawing aside a curtain revealing "Movies' Ball, Hippodrome, June 1st." These will be run on every screen in town. On the roof of the Hippodrome where the dance will be held we will have seven arcs projecting into the sky, each one with a color wheel. A two-inch steam main with small holes drilled in the pipe will be run along the roof and upon the steam issuing therefrom different colors will play. (Say, what are you doing, Seattle, stringing us? If you pull off all that your ball will certainly be a record-breaker; and by-the-way, you can send me a copy of that grand march film with Bill Ladd and "our" wife near the front end.—Ed.) A special song will be written for the operators by Charles Eugene Banks, the music for which will be by Claude Madden, director of the Seattle Philharmonic Society. If it has the proper "kick" we will try to have the I. A. adopt it as the official song. The dance will start at 11 o'clock and we will send a band around to all the big downtown houses and if there is anyone in Seattle who don't know there is a movie ball in town then he or she will have to be stoneblind and deaf as well. In closing let me say that the department, editor and all the boys may consider themselves as most cordially invited to be in Seattle and attend our high jinks the evening of June first.

Well! As I before remarked, if you pull off all that, your ball certainly will be a stem-winder, and, incidentally, if you really can work that steam stunt it will be a beauty. I presume the ball is to be in the open, and if it is, I suppose that particular thing won't work if there is much wind blowing. If it does come out all right I certainly would like to see it myself. My regards to Ladd. He and "our" wife made all kinds of honest-to-goodness promises about writing and about visiting New York when I was in Seattle, but—that's the end.

A Fine Cement.

Recently the Paramount Film Cement Company, Chattanooga, Tenn., sent samples of their cement, which I have had tested by the Strand and Hippodrome theaters of this city.

Mr. Robert W. Priest, film director of the Hippodrome, says: "We have found the Paramount film cement to be in every way satisfactory." Mr. Lester Bowen, chief operator of the Strand, says: "I have been using the Paramount film cement, of which you sent sample, and find it makes a soft, pliable, lasting patch, with either ordinary or non-inflammable film. It will also make a patch without scraping the emulsion off, but while this patch is at first very strong it is not reliable, because later on it is apt to loosen up. Enclosed find patches made with both ordinary and non-inflammable film. These patches have been projected for four days, using 75 amperes D.C."

I have also had samples sent to other operators in different parts of the country, but have not yet received their reports. However, in view of the thorough test given by the Strand where the operating conditions are hard, and the report of the Hippodrome, where also heavy amperage is used, and also in view of experiments I have myself made with this cement I am prepared to give it the Paramount cement the endorsement of the department. There are a number of cements which make a very strong patch, but to get a cement that will make a strong patch which will remain pliable is something else again—and a mighty hard thing to find.

The Paramount cement seems to fulfil all the essentials of a really good cement, and as it costs no more than the less desirable articles I would suggest that it be ordered and used in their place.

Later. After the foregoing was written the following was received from one of the best operators in San Francisco, to whom sample was sent for test. "Received the sample of Paramount film cement and beg to report as follows: This cement has remarkable sticking qualities and, as claimed, will stick without scraping the emulsion; also it has just about the right speed. In old, seasoned film it dries without puckering or leaving a hard lump, but on first-run film it shows inclination to pucker, and when used on this class of film care should be taken to make a short, clean splice, using as little cement as possible. The samples I enclose have all hung in the operating room for one week. As to the ability to make a splice without scraping the emulsion, I do not consider it to be desirable for reasons which I think you will understand and agree with."

Yes, I agree with Brother Woods that the ability to stick without scraping the emulsion is not altogether a desirable feature. The reports, however, speak for themselves, and it will be observed that while the Strand and Hippodrome are using first-run film they apparently had no trouble with the film puckering, in fact it did exactly the reverse. Possibly there was some slight difference in the samples provided the Strand, Hippodrome and San Francisco. I would suggest that the manufacturers be very careful to avoid anything of that kind. If the cement is exactly the same in every instance it should act exactly the same, unless climatic conditions make a difference, which I hardly think possible. The makers of the Paramount have worked three years in evolving this cement and inform me that unless I consider it perfect they would rather not put it out, but continue the experiments until it is. I hardly think that necessary. I believe the cement is the best I have seen to date, therefore let it be placed on the market at once.

Uses Three-Quarter Carbons.

Phil Casper, Erie, Pennsylvania, says:

> Noticed an article from Allan Sparrow, Springfield, Vt., April 24th issue, regarding ¾ carbons. For over five months, pulling 40 amperes A.C., I have been using ¾ carbons, and am getting fine results. Don't think I would care to change back to ⅝. Have a set of carbon savers I made for about 30 cents each. Will send drawings if you think it would benefit anyone. What is the matter with some of the narrow-minded crank-turners that they want the spread of knowledge stopped? That particular brand of man is no credit to the profession. I think if some of them would buck up against some real problems in projection they would be very glad to get help themselves. I have been in the game ten years, and I don't know it all either, and what is more, I don't profess to. And now: Sh-h-h—don't tell anyone, but I am the victim of a picture show romance. I married the cashier. Our boy is two months old, and a whopper. I will send you a photograph of him and myself one of these days. Long live the editor and the department; we need them both.

Fetch on the photograph, Neighbor Casper, we can use it very handily. Don't worry about the non-progressives—I don't. They will recover in due course of time. Meanwhile they are not bothering anybody but themselves very much. Personally I simply feel sorry for them—and let it go at that. I only publish an occasional rabid kick that comes in, just to show what different varieties of an ass a man can make of himself when he really sets out to do it. As to the carbon saver, many thanks for the offer, but, old man, we have already about fifty different designs of carbon savers sent in, several of which have been published, therefore believe it would hardly be worth while.

A Small Burg.

La Van Warren, Dewar, Oklahoma, writes:

> This is a small burg, but the little ones are as good as the big ones sometimes. We have two shows, both of which employ union men. We have only been open (Lyric theater) about two weeks; are doing nice business. My projection is, I think, very good, but I am striving all the time to improve it. Do I read the World and the Handbook? Well, rather! I consider them of the same value to me a life preserver would be to a man after the boat had gone down. That's pretty strong, I know, still an operator cannot say too much for the department and the Handbook if he is trying to better his work. By-the-way, I am working for one of the best managers and owners in the country. I have orders to get anything I need which will tend to improve projection, and not to consider the cost if it will accomplish that end.

Your managers, Brother Warren, show good sound sense. I wish we had more like them—yes, many more. You are quite right. Some of the small towns' operators are beginning to make the city chaps look to their laurels, and I want you to distinctly understand that I am just as glad to hear from the operator of a small show in a little town as I am from the operator of the biggest theater in the largest city in the country. In fact it is the small town man who needs our help more than the city operator.

He Likes 'Em.

Al Schieble, Sheboygan, Wisconsin, writes:

> I am glad to say that by following your instructions my trouble was located and remedied. I am one of your constant readers, and must say in the past four years your helpful and efficient book, together with the department, has helped me out time and again. I believe that if operators paid more attention to the department there would not be so many complaints about poor projection. My Simplex has developed a grinding noise when the framing lever is down. Can you suggest the cause and remedy?

We are glad to have your favorable opinion of the Handbook and department added to that of others. The probable reason for the grinding noise in the Simplex mechanism when the framing lever is down is that there is something wrong with the oil well and the intermittent, or possibly with the bearings, which do not run true when the lever is down and causes the mechanism to bind. Almost invariably where this complaint is made and the mechanism has been sent to the factory for repairs it has been found that the lubricant in the oil well is thick with graphite, and that the whole intermittent movement has been worn very badly. I would suggest that it would be advisable for you to send your mechanism to the factory for an overhauling, and the company will, if necessary, send a loan head to be used while the repairs are being made.

Commutator Sparks.

Al. Schieble, Sheboygan, Wisconsin, orders a question booklet and says:

> We are using a Wagner motor generator and having quite a little trouble with our brushes sparking. Have cleaned the commutator thoroughly, but it don't seem to make any difference; also have fitted the brushes up tight. Could you give any suggestions as to how I can remedy this fault?

First, examine your commutator carefully, and see that the insulation between the segments is no higher than the segments themselves; second, with some pointed instrument held firmly against the frame, with its end just barely touching the commutator, rotate the armature slowly and make sure there are no high bars, and that the commutator is perfectly round; third, make sure that you have good brushes, and that they are not covered, on their bearing surface, with a semi-insulation of dirt and paraffine. Unless they look perfectly clean, clean them by drawing sandpaper under them around the commutator with the sand side next to the brushes; fourth, be sure that brushes or the wires attached to them are not overloaded; fifth, be sure that the connection between the wires of the armature coils and the commutator are all tight, and in good condition; sixth, be sure there is not a partial ground or short in one of the armature coils; (You will have to have an electrician to test that, I suppose). Seven, be sure that the machine is working on current of the voltage and the cycle it was intended to work on. Sometimes current that is supposed to be 60 cycle is really something else, and that is one possible seat of trouble; eighth, be sure that the inside of the brush holders is perfectly clean, and that all connections are perfectly tight and properly made. There are other possible causes of sparking, but that is all I think of at this time. Oh yes, ninth, be certain the brushes are set at the non-sparking (neutral) point and that the tension springs hold them to the commutator with sufficient force to make good electrical contact.

New Union.

P. E. Evarts, Marshalltown, Iowa, writes:

> Wish you would correct article "Teeter in Pictures," April 10th issue, as to operators' salaries twenty to twenty-five dollars. Highest salary here is $14.00 working from 12 A. M. to 5 P. M. and 6.30 P. M. to 11 P. M., and for this salary the operator is also the janitor. The man who wrote to you was getting fourteen, but lost his position because a fifteen year old kid took the job at eight. You hit it on the head when you said the trouble he spoke of was not the fault of the machine. It was not. If he had let the machine alone it would have been O. K. He experimented trying to improve the Powers machine. It now needs an entire new framing carriage to put it in shape. The Marshalltown men have organized, our number being 631, I. A. T. S. E. Our motto is to be up-to-date, educate ourselves and improve our work to the highest standard.

That is a mighty good motto, Brother Everts. See that you live up to it; also treat the managers fairly, but demand from them fair treatment and decent salaries in return for high class results on the screen. I don't know how large Marshalltown is, but fourteen dollars is not sufficient except in a small village. In my judgment, roughly speaking, a town of 10,000 ought to pay about eighteen dollars; a town of 25,000 say, twenty to twenty-five, and so on up to the large cities where operators should receive, and I believe some day will receive thirty-five to forty a week, and in large houses even more.

What He Means.

J. F. Heise, Fort Totten, New York, says:

> On page 256 "Motion Picture Electricity," under Centigrade and Fahrenheit Scales, Mr. Hallberg has the following formulas:
> Temp. C=5/9 (Temp. F—32)
> Temp. F=9/5 (Temp. C+32)
> What I don't understand is how the above formulas are used.

It is simple enough. With a centigrade thermometer the melting point of ice is marked 0 and the boiling point of water 100, with one hundred divisions between. With a fahrenheit thermometer the melting point of ice is marked 32 and the boiling point of water 212, and there are one hundred and eighty divisions between, hence to convert degrees centigrade to degrees fahrenheit multiply C° x 9/5, thus: 50 degrees centigrade equals 50 x 9/5, or, 90 degrees fahrenheit. However, a temperature of 100 degrees centigrade equals a temperature on the fahrenheit scale of 100 x 9/5=180+32=212. To convert temperature centigrade into temperature fahrenheit multiply the centigrade degrees by 9/5, and add 32, as for example: if the temperature of a room is 20 degrees C, its temperature fahrenheit would be 20 x 9/5+32=68. To convert fahrenheit temperature to centigrade first subtract 32 and then multiply by 5/9.

That is the trouble with too many writers of text books. They give a formula which, while very clear to the technical man, is absolute Greek to the non-technical man and, of course, the whole thing falls flat. To make you thoroughly understand this matter would require a whole page of the department. I believe Brother Hallberg might better have left it out of his book entirely, or else have consumed sufficient space to explain its meaning.

That Sunlight Question.

I have a number of more or less correct solutions of the sun-ray question, but am sorry I asked the question, because I have not space for the answer now. Later on, maybe. I am filing the replies for reference.

Halifax, Nova Scotia.

Alex. A. Macdonald, Imperial Theater, Halifax, N. S., says:

> May I add my mite of praise to the World and your department (or is it ours?) Some operators (?) are trying to knock it. The probability is, however, that these men have learned a large portion of what little they know from the department they are now using the hammer on. I know when I first started I could never have gotten along without it and my manager used to say: "I would as soon see my show late as to have the World come late."

> Our two Powers SixA machines are giving entire satisfaction. We have two operators, and give a continuous show from 2 to 5 and 7 to 10. The current is 220 volt, 60 cycle through an Edison economizer, getting about 60 amperes at the arc. We are now using ⅝ inch cored carbons above and below, but they burn to a pencil point. We tried ¾ top and ⅝ bottom and it worked better as to the carbons, but gave poor light. Then tried ⅝ top and ¾ bottom and got fair results, but that set can only be used in improved lamps, as one must keep pulling the top carbon back as it burns away. We are to have a license here soon. When are the questions and answers to be ready for sale? Am enclosing picture of the operating room showing myself and Brother Brown.

That picture had been folded in a letter, and was in pretty bad condition. Say, have you got a marble ceiling? Looks like a mighty classy proposition, but the floor appears to be somewhat on the order of a Coney Island "Bump the Bumps." No, if you are not using over 60 amperes A. C., two ⅝ carbons are best. Possibly the inside of your carbon arms is dirty and rough. I imagine the needling is largely due to imperfect contact of the carbons with the carbon arms, which adds mechanical heat and has the effect of disintegrating the binder. I cannot be positive it is the case, but it is very often the explanation of carbons needling. Next time you send a photo, don't fold it.

Wants to Enter.

B. Le May, Cairo, Illinois, says:

> I want to enter the class you so ably conduct in our very interesting department. I have been operating for five years and have been a reader of the department almost the same length of time. It certainly has been a great help. I have the honor of holding a card in the I. A., and there are three other card men in this city. We have seven theaters, and I have worked at the Bijou for four years. It is a straight picture house. The operating room equipment consists of two Powers Six projectors, one H. & H. current reducer, and a Fort Wayne compensarc. As to nitrogen filled lamps being used for projection, I thoroughly agree with you. Up to date there has not been a nitrogen lamp made that could possibly be used for projection. I have experimented with a 1000 watt nitrogen filled lamp, the largest I can get in this city, and found them useless for the purpose. I have the first edition of the Handbook and intend to own the second as soon as possible. I have already seen it and believe it has more good stuff in it than any other book printed.

All right, Brother Le May, just consider yourself as being a duly-jined, enrolled and accredited departmentite. Glad to have you with us. What is the matter with the Cairo boys that they don't form a local of their own if they have seven houses? It seems to me it could be done all right, and if it can be done it ought to be.

Liquid Fire Extinguisher.

The editor has always been a little skeptical as to the value of patent liquid fire extinguishers in the operating room. Recently, however, the manufacturers of "Pyrene" invited him to witness a demonstration to be conducted, for his benefit, at their factory, and, as a matter of fact, it turned out to be more of a demonstration than anybody, the editor included, was looking for. First some pieces of film were placed in the bottom of a metal bucket, set on fire, and the pyrene squirted on them. There was no question but it did put the fire out, even on half-burned pieces of film. Fine—as far as it went. Now, the editor had a scheme in mind, and the statement had been made that a film could be emersed in pyrene without receiving any damage whatever. After the first fire demonstration he asked for a half gallon of pyrene, which was placed in the bucket and a piece of ordinary film was soaked in it for a matter of five minutes. It may be made as a statement of fact that pyrene has absolutely no effect on either the celluloid or the emulsion of a film. A reel of film can be dropped in a bucket of pyrene without taking any damage whatever, except that it might have to be wiped off, or polished, but that operation would be very easy and simple.

After this had been done a pint of gasoline was poured on the cement floor, set on fire, and quickly extinguished with pyrene. Next an ordinary pine box, with the top and side knocked out, was set on end, filled full of broken boards, a pint of keresene poured over it, and a match applied. It blazed right merrily, in fact a little bit too merrily, because the reel of film had been laid on a shelf just over and a little to one side of the impromptu bonfire. Now, that roll of film was not on a reel, and was wound pretty loosely. I was watching the box burn, waiting for the demonstrator to get busy with the pyrene, and he had just started his squirt gun when I noticed doings upon the shelf. By the time I had attracted the attention of the demonstrator to the film it certainly was going some. We knocked the blazing roll on the floor, and squirted pyrene on it. The pyrene put out the blaze all right, but the instant its application was stopped it blazed up again, nor could the fire be extinguished until the entire reel was consumed.

Now, this was unfortunate in one way, but mighty fortunate in another, because I had had the thought in my mind that even if a fire could be put out in a bucket, how about putting out a fire in the reel if you opened the magazine door to squirt pyrene on it. I did not believe it could be done, still I did not have the nerve to ask them to burn a whole reel of film to satisfy me on this point. Well, all things work together for the good of those who serve the moving picture industry, and I got my demonstraation, and got it good and plenty too, without asking.

Now, here is the net result. I am prepared to say that, properly used, pyrene is effective. It will put out a gasoline fire, fire from carbide, or any other ordinary fire in the open, but it will not extinguish a film fire, if that fire be in the open, nor will it extinguish a film fire if the fire actually gets into the reel of film, but it nevertheless has very large value. My recommendation with regard to it is as follows: First, that there be an upper magazine made with a pyrene receptacle on its side, having its valve held normally open by means of a stout spring, the aforesaid valve only to be held closed by means of a link of fuse inside the lower magazine and terminating as nearly as possible at the fire trap, the idea being that in case fire comes through the fire trap and gets into the magazine, the film link will instantly burn, and the upper magazine be flooded with pyrene. This, I think, would prove absolutely effective in ninety-nine cases out of every hundred, nor would the film take any damage whatsoever by reason of being emersed in pyrene. The opening into the magazine from the pyrene chamber, however, must be large enough to admit the pyrene to the magazine rapidly; second (and perhaps the most practical to apply), I would heartily recommend the installation of a pyrene pump (pyrene comes in a metal pump) right near each projection machine, and the cutting of a hole near the top of the door of the upper magazine, the hole to be about ⅜ ins. in diameter, covered by a metal slide as indicated in the sketch. In case of fire the operator can then grab the pyrene pump, slide the cover back and squirt pyrene directly into the magazine. He can do this even though he thought the fire would not actually reach the magazine, because he would not do any damage to the film except to put it out of commission for a few minutes, and waste a little pyrene. He would thus be on the safe side.

WARNING. Operators having pyrene pumps in their operating rooms must under no circumstances open the magazine door to squirt pyrene in, because under those conditions they cannot put out a fire. Leave the magazine door closed. Never, under any circumstances, or conditions, open the magazine door when there is a fire. You will only make matters worse if you do open it. This holds good whether you have or have not a pyrene pump. If you have a pyrene pump take my advice and make an opening in the magazine door, as indicated, having it, say, one inch from the top of the door.

From Brother James.

Brother James, who is on the road, writes from Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, as follows:

> I am very busy, but must stop and hand this Harrisburg gang, local 318, I. A., a bunch. To start with let us land on President Max Hite. He is an electrician and camera man, and thinks he is an operator. Well if he operates as well as he can drive his Harley go-devil he is some operator. He took me eight miles in seven and one-half minutes, over a country road, and I didn't know whether I was in an aeroplane, on a motorcycle, or in a ditch, but when I came to feel myself after stopping found I was not in such deplorable condition as was the honorable editor when he tried to make Atlantic City by skating along the road on his unmentionables. And now for business agent W. A. Davis, who, by-the-way, is past business agent for 98. He is the proud possessor of a glad mitt and a smile that extends two inches back of each ear. When not running the largest and most sickly looking yellow auto truck in the city he is faithfully devoting his time to the boys of 318. Needless to say the union must have a secretary, and in that distinguished position we find S. R. Stilson, whose specialty is being a good fellow. Now we have just one more remark to make, and that is about vice-president, Brother Reuben. A deep, dark, dense mystery surrounds this brother. He has a partner by the name of Mitchell. I was elected a visiting committee of one to unravel the aforesaid mystery, but have fell down on the job. And, now, here is the mystery: don't tell a soul, but put it in print: What do they do with their money every Saturday night? I think perhaps it would be well to remark on the projection in Harrisburg, which, by-the-way, is exceedingly good.
> Visiting the Victoria I found Brother Filson as chief, with Reuben and Snaykwook as second and third men respectively. They have a 110 volt D. C. generator set and an economizer; equipment is two Powers SixA machines. The light was very brilliant and the speed well handled for the hour I had the pleasure watching them make their reels and wheels go round.
> The Photo Play Theater is about on the same par as the Victoria. S. Lemel is chief and Brown and Nichols are second and third men. At the Palace Leo Acra is chief, with Irish Glesner assistant. Here the projection was up to the standard, but the speed slightly excessive, due, I presume, to rush of business, rather than fault of the operators. Last but not least we have the William Penn Theater, and in my estimation P. Moyer, the assistant operator, has got them all taking his dust. I visited one other house, viz: The Regent, where the light was very good, but the operator seemed a little careless. On inquiry, however, I was informed that the manager is one of the kind who thinks his operator should be bill poster and janitor, which probably explains why he is only getting what he pays for, as I have personally seen the operator at this house doing big time projection. And here I will end my remarks on the finest little town and bunch of boys I have met in the state of 'Pennsylmadelphia.'

Now if I could only get reports of that kind all the time how pleasant it would be. My compliments to the Harrisburg boys. James knows what he is talking about, and if he says you are good I will gamble you are. As to the mystery, why I am troubled with the same thing in reverse. With me it is not what do I do with my money, but what in thunder does the money do with itself. It just seems to leak, ooze out and disappear. But maybe that is explained that here in New York City they charge you for everything you get except the air you breathe, and I am looking for some smart Wall Street guy to corral that before long.

A Correction.

The Editor of the Department is glad to make a correction in regard to an item that appeared in last week's issue referring to the Hippodrome installation. The size of the operating room or booth was given as about 6 or 7 feet by not more than 8, whereas the booth is regulation 8 x 9 size. I still claim, however, that it is unreasonable to expect the best work from men, especially in the hot season, when compelled to work in a space of this size with two machines where there is ample room for an operating room of much greater dimensions.

Comments on the Films

General Film Company.

SUE (Essanay), May 3.—This is the Chicago Herald prize contest film, featuring Dorothy Warshauer. The story is built around the contest, a star reporter and a love motive being worked into the plot. The subject makes a very fair offering and also illustrates the Chicago idea of female loveliness. Albert Roscoe and Charles Stine have little difficulty in handling their respective roles.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL NO. 35 (Selig), May 3.—The New York Police Parade appropriately leads the news items of this instalment. Following features are the Pasadena Golf Club winning the Exposition Cup, at San Francisco; Harvard Eight winning from the Naval Academy crew; forest fires near Danville, Conn.; baseball pictures; fire near South Boston; Canadian war pictures; and the latest designs by Lucile.

CUTEY'S SISTER (Vitagraph), May 3.—This one-reel farce has a rattling good plot and a whirlwind finish. Wally Van is the same cute cut-up and is given excellent support by Nitra Frazer, Albert Roccardi, Cissy Fitz-Gerald, Donald MacBride, and Garry McGarry.

TOYS OF DESTINY (Biograph), May 3.—A one-reel drama that, contrary to Lot's wife, never pauses to look back. In fact, it is the filmed essence of a four act play, and has heart interest, rapid action and a most satisfying climax. Isabel Rea, Wm. J. Butler, Frank Newburg, and Marie Newton constitute an efficacious cast.

NO OTHER WAY ("Road o' Strife," No. 5) (Lubin), May 3.—Events move at greatly quickened pace in this instalment of the Emmett Campbell Hall serial. Alene is married to Abner Gray, so that she may not be made to testify against him. At the "continued in our next" juncture, she is left struggling in a pool of slimy water.

CARTOONS IN THE KITCHEN (Edison), May 4.—Another of Raoul Barre's Animated Grouch-Chasers, and a particularly funny one. "Hot Off the Pen," "Nightmareland," and "Dr. E. Z. Bear" are the titles of the three cartoons shown. Jessie Stevens assists in getting the cartoons over, Andrew J. Clark, Herbert Prior, and Mabel Dwight also do their share.

"HAM'S EASY EATS (Kalem), May 4.—In this one-reel "Ham" comedy, the "titled" gent becomes a "crust-thrower," as working the "starving beggar" trick is called. He and Bud "clean up" with the trick, have the usual quantity of comic mishaps and land in jail.

THE TWIN SISTER (Lubin), May 4.—A half-reel farce, written by E. W. Sargent, and played by Mae Hotley and Babe Hardy. Short, sharp and to the point. Miss Hotley's performance of the two sisters is a clever example of character work.

CURSES! JACK DALTON (Lubin), May 4.—A funny animated Cartoon by Vincent Whitman, on the same reel with "The Twin Sister." Forms an excellent contrast to the other picture.

AN ARIZONA WOOING (Selig), May 6.—Tom Mix has the star role in this one-reel drama of the range. The plot deals with the feud between the sheep-raisers and the cattle men. It also has the mustn't-be-left-out love interest. A good offering.

JACK KENNERD, COWARD (Edison), May 5.—William Marston has written a fairly convincing tale of a young collegian in this one-reel drama. Charles M. Seay has brought its good points to the front, and Thomas MacEvoy looks and acts the title role capitally. Harry Beaumont and Olive Templeton also deserve honorable mention.

THE FABLE OF THE GALLOPING PILGRIM WHO KEPT ON GALLOPING (Essanay), May 5.—Ernest Maupain, Mayme Gehrue, and Hope Gordon are the Big Three in this George Ade chronicle, in which the searchlight that the Sage of Indiana keeps in the top of his physical structure, is turned upon the mistake of an old Bachelor, who thinks himself a match for a designing young woman—and her vigilant Mama.

HER CAREER (Selig), May 5.—The woman who is determined to leave her husband for a stage career, may learn a truthful lesson from this one-reel drama. Its story is not applicable to every case, but, one phase of the matter is presented with strict regard to fact. Leo Pierson, E. J. Brady, and Virginia Kirtley have caught the exact spirit of the play and reflect it in their work.

A LILY IN BOHEMIA (Vitagraph), May 5.—This one-reel comedy is immense. It merely skims over the surface of things as they really are, but does it with such buoyancy and light-hearted zest that the laughter and high spirits of its scenes are contagious. And then, there is Lillian Walker! Her bubbling humor and wholesome effervescence are the wellsprings of a large share of the enjoyment. She receives able support from Evart Overton and Templer Saxe.

THE MASTER OF THE SWORD (Biograph), May 6.—A veritable Dumas the Elder drama in miniature, this one-reel romance has all the highly-colored incident that marks the work of the celebrated Frenchman. Augusta Anderson wears a very becoming fencing costume, and runs her sister's deserter through with her trusty blade. Charles Perley and Madge Kerby also appear in the film.

HOW SLIPPERY SLIM SAW THE SHOW (Essanay), May 6.—"Barnstorming" in the West is amusingly burlesqued in this one-reel farce. The three act "drammer," played by the troupers, is a gentle reminder of the old ten-twenty-and-thirty days, and very funny. Harry Todd and Dick Turpin are the villains. Victor Potel and Margaret Joslin are a pair of laughable spectators.

SAFETY FIRST (MinA), May 6.—Mr. Henpecked is the leading character of this one-reel comedy. He manages to rush headlong into one compromising situation after another, until his wife discovers him rocking another woman's child. And then—well, it's all good fun to an audience, anyway.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL NO. 36, 1915 (Selig), May 6.—A number of beautiful views of the Panama-Pacific Exposition at night are the most striking features of this instalment. Boston newsboys being taught boxing by Jim Walsh; war pictures in Serbia; The Battleship Oregon; Coney Island crowds in bathing; and views at the San Diego Fair are other prominent news items.

THE PARK HONEYMOONERS (Vitagraph), May 6.—How to make an educational subject as interesting as a love story, is demonstrated in this one-reel offering. Striking views of the New York City parks furnish the background of a number of diverting or laughable episodes. Antonio Moreno and Betty Gray are capital as the honeymooners.

MASKED FATE (Biograph), May 7.—A neat little comedy-drama, that contains constantly shifting scenes, an interesting pair of lovers, a look-in at a bal masque, a burglar, and has for its leading motif the theft of a kiss. Kenneth Davenport and Frank Newburg fill the chief male roles satisfactorily, and Isabel Rea is the lady who wonders whether the osculatory depredation should be put down to profit or loss.

HIS REGENERATION (Essanay), May 7.—In this one-reel drama G. M. Anderson discards the "glad rags" which he has donned lately, and gets back into the old familiar togs. Once again he is an outlaw, and once again he meets the woman who accomplishes his reformation. The story is well told, Marguerite Clayton's embodiment of The Girl being a sufficient excuse for any man's breaking for the "straight and narrow."

THE SPY'S SISTER (Lubin), May 7.—Another echo from the struggle of '61 is found in this one-reel drama, credited to Elizabeth R. Carpenter. The lady has not unearthed any original material. The Union officer and the Southern girl are united at the finish, as usual. The film contains real drama, however, founded upon a theme which will always interest the American people. Edgar Jones, who produced the picture, makes a manly Lieut. Gladstone, Justina Huff and Arthur Matthews are excellent.

THE VANISHING VAULT (Vitagraph), May 7.—"The Vanishing Vault" is a vivid and vital vindication of Donald I. Buchanan's sense of humor. In this one-reel comic satire he takes a good-natured shot at the screen detective and his marvelous methods. Billy Quirk, Charles Eldridge, and Constance Talmadge are detailed to unravel the mystery and let loose the fun. They accomplish both purposes.

A DAY'S ADVENTURE (Biograph), May 8.—The hero of this one-reel drama puts in a strenuous twenty-four hours, but foils the villains in the end. An exciting crook play. Charles H. West, Harry Carey and Claire McDowell bring out all the strong points.

A SAD DOG'S STORY (Edison), May 8.—After the manner of Ouida's dog-hero in "Puck," Lee Arthur has Jerry, the brindle bull in his one-reel drama recount the doings of the humans in the play. The result is a humorous setting for an interesting picture from life. The canine actor carries off high honors. It was Johnny Mackey who remarked of the canine role in his dog drama: "Best part in the piece—if I had four legs, I'd play it myself!"

THE WILD ENGINE (Episode No. 26 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series) (Kalem), May 8.—Chasing a runaway engine with a motorcycle and plunging through an open draw into the river is the simple little stunt which Helen Holmes performs in this realistic one-reeler. The same accuracy of detail and pulse-accelerating action that were found in the previous Helen pictures, are given equal attention in the latest film.

THE BUSY BELL BOY (Lubin), May 8.—This is the first comedy film written for Pat Rooney and Marion Bent, and permits them to make a highly successful moving picture debut. Mr. Rooney's agile method and nimble legs are gilt-edge assets in his new endeavor, and Marion Bent shows corresponding ability in both acting and dancing for the screen.

THE LION'S MATE (Selig), May 8.—The African jungle is again the scene of an engrossing one-reel drama. The characters range from slave traders to missionaries, and the reproduction of the savage life of the country has been faithfully done.

General Film Company Specials.

AN INNOCENT SINNER (Kalem), May 3.—Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson on page 737 issue of May 1.

THE REAPING (Selig), May 3.—This two-reel photoplay will cause the heartstrings of all classes of audiences to vibrate in unison with it. The theme is built upon mother love, and the entire story is skilfully devised. Poverty and riches are shown in strong contrast, and the ending will never fail to bring a hearty round of applause. Robyn Adair, Virginia Kirtley, and E. J. Brady have the leading roles.

BLACK SHEEP (Biograph, May 4.—This two-reel drama is a film version of the play founded on the novel of the same name by Edmund Yates, the English author and critic. The story is intensely dramatic and has been transferred to the screen without loss of interest. Edward Cecil, Hector V. Sarno, G. Osmonde Nye, Jane Wolf, Violet Reid, and Viola Smith make the performance thoroughly satisfactory.

A CHILD OF THE NORTH (Vitagraph), May 4.—A strong, well-woven drama of life in the open, this two-reel photoplay will command the respect of all film patrons. The scenes are set in the forests of the North. In the latter part of the story, when heavy falls of snow have mantled the earth and the ice-covered water, they are of transcendent beauty. The final picture, with the little half-breed heroine frozen to death in her canoe, will be long remembered. The work of the cast is in keeping with the efforts of the producer, Margaret Gibson being especially good as the Indian girl.

THE CLAIRVOYANT SWINDLERS (Episode No. 15 of the "Girl Detective Series") (Kalem,, May 5.—Occultism and "high finance" get their wires crossed with those of the Girl Detective in this instalment, which Hamilton Smith has written for No. 15 of the Series. There is no lack of excitement in the unfolding of the drama, and Marin Sais, who now has the part of quick-witted Bertha, is fully entitled to the honor. Two reels.

SUCH THINGS REALLY HAPPEN (Lubin), May 6.—The dangers that lurk in scenario writing are forcibly illustrated in this two-reel drama by Emmett Campbell Hall. The author has sounded a word of warning for the ambitious but misguided soul who is in danger of being swindled by a fraudulent "College of Photoplay Writing." He has also managed to write a fairly good drama. Earl Metcalfe, Arthur Matthews, Herbert Fortier, and Ormi Hawley are all well cast.

WITH THE BRIDGES BURNED (Edison), May 7.—Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison on page 570 issue of April 24.

THE BREATH OF ARABY (Vitagraph), May 8.—Reviewed By Louis Reeves Harrison on page 241 issue of April 10.

"THIRTY" (Essanay), May 8.—Victor Eubank's two-reel drama is a bully good yarn, even if no real newspaperman will ever believe that the wonderful luck which falls to the star reporter in the photoplay has the slightest foundation in fact. It's a poor heart that won't rejoice over a bit of spirited romance—and "Thirty" is filled with it. Francis X. Bushman supplies the requisite amount of dash, nerve and physical perfection demanded of the hero, and Beverly Bayne looks and acts every penny of the several millions she is supposed to possess.

Mutual Film Corporation.

THEIR SOCIAL SPLASH (Keystone), April 26.—Murray and his company of funmakers appear in this. There is a lot of laughable business in this reel. The mouse crawling up the woman's stocking made a rather vulgar feature, but may be easily eliminated. The scramble over the roof tops and fall into the fountain was exciting and laughable.

A BEAR AFFAIR (Keystone), April 29.—A knockabout hunting trip is featured in this number. Some of the action is vulgar, but most of the incidents are amusing in spite of their roughness. It makes a fair number, with perhaps one or two eliminations.

GUSSLE'S BACKWARD WAY (Keystone), May 1.—A number featuring Syd Chaplin in his familiar part. The scenes are taken in and about a mountain inn and contain much that is very funny. Some of the incidents border on the risque, but are clever enough to get by without offense. A good low comedy number.

MUTUAL WEEKLY NO. 18, 1915 (Mutual), May 6.—Some of the interesting items of this number are scenes on the battle front in the Vosges mountains; Harvard winning from the Navy at the boat races at Annapolis; the Massachusetts Cycle Club holds its annual 300 mile run; Gun practice of the U. S. A. Coast Guards; and San Francisco celebrating the 9th anniversary of her resurrection from the great earthquake disaster of 1906.

FLOOEY AND AXEL (Komic), May 9.—"Vic" Forsythe the well-known cartoonist, whose work has appeared in the New York World and other newspapers, is featured in this picture. After trying very hard for success with a girl and an editor, he goes to sleep and dreams the most wonderful things, which tried in real life, make him a foil for considerable buffeting. The offering constitutes some very acceptable comedy.

LOVE AND MONEY (Thanhouser), May 9.—This story of an American widow and her daughter abroad contains two love episodes. The scheming count makes love to mother and daughter at the same time in order to make sure of the money, but his plans fail. The social atmosphere is only fairly well suggested; the reel is one of about average interest.

AT THE HOUR OF ELEVEN (Reliance), May 10.—A moderately interesting one-reel drama in which a child in a rather unique fashion prevents her mother from eloping. Part of the story has been attractively told in the film. The latter part, however, has not been done in quite as professional a manner as the first portion of the picture.

LIFE'S STAIRCASE (Beauty), May 11.—A pretty subject, with a slight but enjoyable plot. Webster Campbell and Neva Gerber play the part of a couple about to wed. Each reviews scenes from former love affairs, double exposure photography being used frequently. This proves quite entertaining.

THE SMUGGLER (Majestic), May 11.—This is not a very strong production. It treats of the efforts of a smuggler to bring about the final fall of his former pal with whom he has served a sentence in prison some years previously. The cast that has been chosen for the interpretation of the story is worthy a stronger subject.

THE BROKEN WINDOW (American), May 12.—A light comedy subject, with John Steppling, Winifred Greenwood and Edward Coxen in the leads. The servant girl and repair man break the window repeatedly in order to see one another frequently; the old professor thinks the damage is done by boys. This is not very strong, but agreeable and pleasing.

SON OF "THE DOG" (Reliance), May 12.—A nicely-pictured Indian subject, containing some good scenic effects. Dark Cloud, known as "The Dog" among his people, turns his son over to white people to be educated. Later the old chief saves the life of his grandson. The close is effective. A pleasing out-door number.

WHEN BEAUTY CAME TO KOSKOB (Royal), May 22.—A one-reel comedy of medium quality in which a couple of beauty doctors get into trouble with their respective customers in a country town.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

THE SPELL OF THE POPPY (Majestic), May 9.—In this two-reel production there is considerable that is interesting, but the picture has little if any moral backing, and could not be highly recommended. The story is of how a young girl enamoured of a professional pianist, forms the opium habit. The former sweetheart of the man tries to save the girl, and in so doing the pianist is shot and killed.

THE ALTAR OF AMBITION (American), May 10.—A very creditable two-reel production. It has an interesting story, well developed, and played in an intelligent manner. David Lythgoe, Vivian Rich, Harry Von Meter, Jack Richardson and Louise Lester are the chief members of the cast. The picture treats of political intrigue, and the almost ruined happiness of a family through a scandal villainously created by a member of the opposing force.

OUR DARE-DEVIL CHIEF (Keystone), May 10.—A two-reel low comedy number, with Ford Sterling and Minta Durfee in the leads. Ford appears in his familiar character of chief of police and keeps the observer laughing at his absurd antics. He gets into an affair with the mayor's daughter and is in bad repute with the city administration; then to make matters worse he signs his name to a present intended for the mayor which turns out to be a bomb. This follows in the line of numerous predecessors in plot and action, but is thoroughly amusing and acceptable throughout.

THE HEART OF PRINCESS MIRSARI (Thanhouser), May 18.—A two-reel mystery story, featuring Marguerite Snow, James Cruze and Harry Benham. The girl's father is Gunga Ras, a Hindu student of the occult. The girl's uncle is found dead and the lover blamed, but she personally investigates the crime. The father is suspected, but it develops that the death was really caused by use of liquid air in the hands of another. The plot itself is not exceptionally strong, but holds the attention. The liquid air demonstrations break the illusion somewhat, but are none the less interesting. The climax is quite strong.

THE OPERATOR OF BIG SANDY (Broncho), May 19.—A two-reel Western number, with Rhea Mitchell, J. Barney Sherry, Thomas Chatterton and others in the cast. The girl, who was staked in a card game by her father, flees from the gambler who won her. She takes refuge with the hero and his mother at a railroad station. Here she learns telegraphy and later saves the station and the hero's life. The gambler, a member of the holdup gang, is killed in the fray. This is a typical story of the kind, well-constructed and quite interesting considering the familiar character of the incidents.

HER ALIBI (Domino), May 20.—A two-reel number with a stock plot, handled in a fairly strong way. Elizabeth Burbridge and Frank Borzage play the parts of brother and sister, employed in the same office. Joe and a chum begin taking out fast girls. Joe gets badly into debt and is overseen robbing the safe. He is sent to prison and his sister loses her job. Later Joe escapes. His former chum tries to blackmail the sister, now married. The chum is taken for Joe and shot by pursuing officers. Joe is then carried away by his sister and her husband in an auto. This number makes an offering of about average interest.

"BAD BUCK" OF SANTA YNEZ (Kaybee), May 21.—A two-reel Western number, featuring Wm. S. Hart in his familiar character as a bad man. The most dramatic scene is where the child of the nester's widow allows a rattlesnake to strike her on the bare leg. Thelma Salter proved herself a very brave little girl in this scene; to some the feature will be repulsive but it makes a fine example of Western realism. The desperado sucks the wound and then risks his life in going for a doctor. He is in fact mortally wounded in carrying out this action. A strongly realistic number.

STRATHMORE (Mutual Masterpicture—Reliance), May.—Based on the story of Ouida, and played by a strong cast headed by Charles Clary "Strathmore" in its four-reel film version is still not without its faults. In many ways it is especially pleasing, and then again we find a something which might be fitly termed "wabbly" about the development of the story. The production is beautifully set and should be more impressive than it is. Perhaps one of its greatest faults lies in the arrangement and wording of its sub-titles. These sub-titles are in many instances unnecessary accessories.

THE LURE OF THE MASK (Mutual Masterpicture—American), May.—Another of the Masterpictures, and produced in four reels from the story of Harold McGrath. In this picture an unusual number of beautiful settings have been used, the usual excellent photographic quality of the American production is evident, and in fact there are a great many fine points about "The Lure of the Mask," although the story itself does not lend itself to the screen as well as some others. Frequently the sub-titles are at fault in that they are unprofessional in arrangement. An excellent cast has played the picture, including Harold Lockwood, and Irving Cummings.

North American Film Corp.

THE SILENT WITNESS (American), May 17.—Installment No. 3 of the continued photoplay, "The Diamond From the Sky." This number is full of exciting action. Arthur pursues Blair, after the murder of Dr. Lee. They fight a duel over an open grave; this was made almost too sensational. Thinking he has killed Blair, Arthur flees in his new auto. In this flight Irving Cummings runs some great personal risks, once speeding in front of an approaching train, and again falling over a high cliff in the machine. While he is swimming in the stream the diamond is taken from about his neck. This continues the strong interest awakened by former installments.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

THE WOMAN (Lasky), May 3.—Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush on page 1093 issue of May 15.

THE MIDDLEMAN (Cosmofotofilm), May.—Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush on page 1094 issue of May 15.

Pathe Exchange Inc.

PATHE'S WEEKLY NO. 34 1915 (Week of April 26).—The important events recorded in this issue are the Universal Athletic Contest, the Harvard and Navy boat races at Annapolis, some scenes in the Dardanelles, and the Sultan of Turkey starting out on a little boat trip by way of diversion.

THE OTTER, May.—An interesting treatise on the otter and its habits on the same reel with "Picturesque Caman," "The Agouti," and "An Excursion to the Vosges Mountains."

PICTURESQUE CAMAN, May.—On the same reel with the above named subjects, this is a delightful colored scenic.

THE AGOUTI, May.—This also on the same reel with the above subjects, is colored, and is an intensely interesting study of this queer little animal, which is evidently very easily tamed.

AN EXCURSION TO THE VOSGES MOUNTAINS, May.—Another colored subject on the same reel with the above three. This series of views of the Vosges mountains are doubly interesting on account of the present war, much of the fighting which has taken place among these beautiful mountains.

AN OFFICIAL LAPSE, May.—This is an excellent detective comedy made at the Paris studios of Pathe Freres. The well-known French comedian Prince is featured in the production, which is short, but which makes up in excellence. The detective set to watch the 10.45 train for the arrival of a crime suspect, is lured by the charms of what he believes to be one of the fair sex. Gaining admission into the home of the lady he is promptly drugged, while his suit and hat are substituted for the feminine disguise of the criminal. Comic incidents of course follow, ending with the capture of the right man.

FATHER'S BRILLIANT IDEA, May.—A one-reel comedy of a moderately entertaining sort. Father in contemplation of the heavy wedding expenses of his daughter, schemes to have the young couple elope, but his plans miscarry, and so poor old father has to foot the bills after all.

Pathe Exchange Specials.

WHEN JUSTICE SLEEPS (Balboa), Released Week of April 26.—This is the third of the "Who Pays?" series. Its three reels are, as is usual with the dramas appearing in this series, superceded by a short allegory symbolic in part of what is to follow. The story is a good one, and has the moral significance of the title of the series. It is a story of how a man forgot his honor in trying to cater to the demands of an extravagant wife. The brother of the woman tries to help him out, and in doing so lands in a convict's cell, while the others suffer the unhappiness brought about through the realization of having done wrong, and of having brought about results that can never be recalled.

THE NEW EXPLOITS OF ELAINE "The Saving Circles" (19th of Elaine), Released Week of May 3.—Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald on page 1094, issue of May 15.

THE LOVE LIAR (Balboa), Released Week of May 3.—The fourth of the "Who Pays?" series is decidedly the best. In it Ruth Roland does particularly good work. The same can also be said of Henry King. The scenario has been written by William Ritchie and has been directed into picture shape by Harry Harvey. This drama has been done in three reels and has been developed with unusual skill. It is distinctly professional, and is artistic in every respect. The story treats of a young woman of wealth, who upon losing her money through an unscrupulous broker lies to the old millionaire who asks her to marry him, and entreats her not to do so unless she loves him. Goaded by the loss of her fortune she pretends to be in love with the old man and marries him, afterward falling in love with the young physician whom the millionaire retains in his household to guard his health.

United Film Service.

ALL ABOUT A BABY (Superba), May 11.—This is a very acceptable comedy in which the situations which arise are for the most part of natural development. A young woman goes to visit her bachelor uncle and takes her baby with her. He is not in when she arrives, and when he does he finds the baby lying on the couch, and not knowing whose it is carries it out and puts it in an automobile that is standing on the street. The mother returning starts on a chase after the baby. The theme is of course not new, but its development is full of good comdy.

THE LITTLE BAND OF GOLD (Ideal), May 17.—Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald on page 921, issue of May 8.

DAVY CROCKETT (who was some hero) (Superba), May 18.—This is a comedy of the slapstick sort, destined, no doubt to please many audiences, but at the same time of a rather ordinary type. It is of course developed after the farce comedy fashion, and merely makes the hero do very extraordinary things by way of comedy.

THE SPENDER (Empress), May 19.—Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald on page 742, issue of May 1.

THE CURSE (Premier), May 21.—A two-reel subject dealing with the selfish attitude of a father toward his daughter, and the result of his refusing to listen to her confession of marriage with a young surveyor. He places a curse on her, and then after turning her out to battle with starvation, a message from her husband having miscarried, he goes insane. The production is only of average merit.

ALIAS HOLLAND JIM (Lariat), May 22.—A two-part production of considerable merit in which the daughter of a minister gets mixed up with an evil man, who deserts her at an inopportune moment. The woman goes west and the two meet again in a road house kept by the woman. The man who still follows his villainous ways is shot accidentally and the woman and her child find happiness with a well-to-do miner.

Universal Film Mfg. Company.

ANIMATED WEEKLY NO. 165 (Universal), May 5.—Interesting scenes on the French frontier, parade views in Atlanta, San Francisco and Chicago and other features are contained in this number.

DESTINY'S TRUMP CARD (Imp), May 17.—A story of the slums, interesting in its manner of development, but a little depressing in atmosphere. It concerns a thief's wife and her efforts to keep herself and husband straight. The cast is pleasing, but the plot only fairly strong.

A DAY AT THE SAN DIEGO FAIR (Joker), May 17.—A very pleasing eccentric comedy enacted by Max Asher, Gale Henry, Wm. Franey and others at the Southern California exposition grounds. The photography is fine and the incidents are full of interest.

WHEN CUPID CROSSED THE BAY (Nestor), May 18.—A short comedy number, with Jack Dillon, Neal Burns, Billie Rhodes and Harry Rattenberry in the cast. The comedy is light and pleasing; it has a San Francisco setting and gives good views of Golden Gate harbor and the famous park of the same name.

LOVE AND SOUR NOTES (L-KO), May 19.—Billy Ritchie, Peggy Pearce and a corpulent youth appear in this. The rival horn blowers indulge in numerous antics while striving for the girl's hand. The last scene, in which the church falls down, was quite novel. The number as a whole is only fairly good.

CELESTE (Big "U"), May 20.—A story of the present war, with numerous actual scenes in it, which are fitted into the plot very well. Muriel Ostriche plays the part of a refugee with two children in charge. All reach a neutral country and find a good home. The number is one of fair strength.

A FIRESIDE REALIZATION (Rex), May 20.—Ben Wilson and Dorothy Phillips appear as a young married couple in this domestic comedy. He goes over his diary and recalls scenes from their romance. Later he has a dream which makes him more attentive to her wishes thereafter. This is rather light and makes a fairly pleasing number.

THEY WERE HEROES (Nestor), May 21.—A typical Nestor comedy, written by Eddie Lyons and produced by Al E. Christie. The married couple miss the train because of an auto accident; their guests arrive and enter the house separately. The girl mistakes the young man for a burglar and much excitement follows. This is well-photographed and proves diverting.

DIAMONDS OF FATE (Powers), May 22.—A jewel story of about average interest, with Sydney Ayres, Doris Pawn and Val Paul in the cast. At a reception the rival of Horace steals a diamond necklace and presents it to the girl. He does this to cast suspicion on the girl, so Horace will give her up. But the plot is unsuccessful. This is presented with a fair degree of strength.

Universal Film Mfg. Company Specials.

THE GIRL WHO HAD A SOUL (Victor), May 10.—Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald on page 1092, issue of May 15.

THE JUNGLE QUEEN (Bison), May 15.—An unusually strong animal production in two reels, written and produced by Henry McRae. Marie Walcamp, as the heroine, carries out some very risky adventures with the leopards, lions and other wild beasts. Wellington Playter, Sherman Bainbridge and others are in the cast. There are many exciting features in this, particularly the scenes in the cabin where the girl is pursued by a lion after she has recovered her pet leopard from the jungle. The photography is clear and attractive and the production is all that could be desired for one of its type.

THE DESERT VENGEANCE (Universal Special Feature), May 16.—Episode No. 11 of "The Black Box" series. All of the scenes in the first reel of this take place on the African desert. Quest and his party are in danger of massacre by the Mongars when Craig calls his friends to the rescue. The part of Craig has proven by far the most complex and one of the most interesting in this serial and Frank MacQuarrie has given a consistent and fascinating picture of this cringing tool, or villain, or whatever he may be. The desert scenes are realistic and full of interest, as are also the later scenes in the jungle. The number closes with Quest in charge of Craig, threatening to take him back to civilization.

BABY (Victor), May 17.—A two-reel comedy number, by Harry C. Myers, in which he and Rosemary Theby enact the part of newlyweds. The young father is pasionately fond of the baby and neglects his work from thinking of it. Later in the story he is blessed with triplets. For a comedy with a slight plot this proves very artistic and entertaining. The settings are attractive and the title drawings are pleasing.

THE DANCER (Gold Seal), May 18.—A three-reel number, written by Ida May Park, with Cleo Madison, Joe King, Chas. Giblyn and others in the cast. The story is told in a leisurely way, with no very strong dramatic episodes. It is, however, well constructed and contains good complications. The chief character is a dancer whose daughter was taken from her as a baby. Later the man who marries the daughter becomes infatuated with the mother, but the latter learns the truth of the situation and sends him back to home and happiness. As a whole this production is only fairly strong.

FROM ITALY'S SHORE (Laemmle), May 19.—A two-reel number featuring Roy Stewart and Jane Novak as two Italian immigrants just landed in America. The characterizations are worthy of a stronger plot, both being pleasing. The plot as it unfolds is rather crudely constructed and not very new. The husband is beaten by thugs and loses his memory temporarily; the wife is separated from him and becomes a vocalist of note. The reunion later at a garden party has a happy touch. The story leaves quite a pleasing impression in spite of certain defects.

THE BATTLE OF RUNNING BULL (Sterling), May 20.—A two-reel war burlesque, with Dot Gould, John E. Brennan and others in the leads. The officers are known as General Delivery, Captain Smear, etc. The first reel is given up entirely to flirtations and wrangles over the girl; the battle scenes come in the second. This would have been much more amusing with a stronger plot to hold it together. There are a number of funny situations as it stands, but they are not of the cumulative sort and get only scattering laughter. The battle scenes are the strongest in the production.

COURT MARTIALED (Imp), May 21.—A strong three-reel offering of a somewhat somber type. It tells the story of a French general and his son, also an officer. The latter commits high treason by robbing his father of valuable military plans. He then throws the blame on his rival, who is sentenced to be shot at sunrise. This leads up to some strong emotion scenes where the guilty son's mother learns the truth and forces him to confess. Lydia Knott and Alan Holubar accomplish some very pleasing work in these scenes. Other characters are portrayed by Wm. J. Welsh, Howard Crampton, Hobart Henley and Frances Nelson. A strong offering of its kind.

WHEN LOVE IS LOVE (Rex), May 22.—A pretty two-reel story of love and business, written by Ida May Park. Pauline Bush plays the part of a stenographer who wins on a lottery ticket and turns the lucky number over to her employer, to save his good name. He discovers that she has substituted her ticket for his own and of course falls in love with the girl. The story is well constructed throughout, and while it never becomes unusually strong in any of the scenes, it serves to hold the interest very well. Wm. Clifford and Ray Gallegher are also in the cast.

LONGEST PROJECTION IN THE WORLD BY POWER'S.

When Mr. Presburg, president of the Arena Amusement Corporation, decided to use motion pictures in Madison Square Garden, the largest amusement place in America, he was confronted with many difficult problems, chief of which was the projection of the pictures.

Many suggestions were made as to the location of the booth for the projecting machines, and among them was one to hang the booth from the iron girders and place the machines therein. W. C. Smith, the well-known projection engineer of the Nicholas Power Company, manufacturers of projection apparatus, suggested placing the machines at the end of the hall and projecting the pictures a distance of three hundred feet.

This is the longest throw on record, and subsequent tests by Mr. Smith proved the practicability of the long throw, with the result that he was given carte blanche on the matter of projection; and the Nicholas Power apparatus, consisting of two Power's Cameragraph No. 6A machines, was installed.

Engages Carlyle Blackwell

CARLYLE BLACKWELL, one of the most popular regular motion picture stars on the screen to-day, has been engaged by the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company for a long term and will immediately begin work at the studios in Hollywood, California, on the film version of Harold MacGrath's story, "The Puppet Crown," in which he will appear with Ina Claire.

Carlyle Blackwell.

Carlyle Blackwell made his first appearance on the screen with one of the old established concerns and appeared under that management for three years, obtaining during this period, a large personal following, especially in society dramas; in fact one of the series of pictures in which he appeared became so successful that it is now being reissued.

After Mr. Blackwell left that organization he played a special engagement with Famous Players in Edward Peple's "Spitfire." He then went to California and organized his own company in which he has appeared for the past few months with exceptional, personal, artistic success. Among the five reel subjects in which he appeared for his own company were "The Key to Yesterday," "The Man Who Could Not Lose," "The Last Chapter," and "The High Hand."

Fania Marinoff's Portrait

A likeness of Miss Fania Marinoff, the star of the legitimate stage who will shortly be seen in Kalem's three-act "Broadway Favorites" feature, "The Lure of Mammon," done in oils by a prominent Southern artist, has been attracting considerable attention down in Jacksonville, Fla. It was painted while Miss Marinoff was at work in the "Broadway Favorites" feature.

Portrait of Fania Marinoff.

The artist, an intimate friend of the producing director, chanced to visit the studio while one of the scenes of "The Lure of Mammon" was being filmed. Attracted by Miss Marinoff's work he requested permission to paint her in the role of Dorinda. That he succeeded in catching the spirit which characterizes Dorinda is clearly apparent.

The "Broadway Favorites" feature will be released in regular service and exhibitors will therefore secure it without a cent of additional cost.

BAKER BUILDING $15,000 THEATER.

C. C. Baker, Britton, S. D., has started construction work on a $15,000 moving picture theater in that city. It will be one of the finest structures in the state. Mr. Baker is experienced in the motion picture business.

CHICAGO LETTER

BY JAS. S. McQUADE

George Kleine's Educational Moving Pictures.

FOR many years lovers of moving pictures, men and women, have been waiting longingly for the time when dependable bookings of educational film subjects could be absolutely guaranteed. Manufacturers for the past five or six years have been compelled to discontinue the making of educational films because of the lack of demand for them on the exchanges handling their regular product.

It seemed as if the public taste for film subjects, dramatic and otherwise, had altogether submerged the desire for even scenic or travelogue subjects; but recently I find that managers of picture theaters who had formerly belittled educationals have been anxious to book them. Why? The public taste like the pendulum is on a swing in the opposite direction.

Aside from regular picture theatergoers, educational films have always had an intelligent following, which has been largely growing for the past five or six years. Unfortunately these people, comprised largely of professional men and women—chiefly engaged in the educational field—did not act concertedly, nor yet in a business-like manner, in their efforts to secure educational films. They had no conception of the cost to the manufacturer of producing these films and of the outlay entailed in bringing them to the doors of the straggling few who were anxious to secure them.

In most cases these people were without projecting equipment and without money resources when matters were sifted to the bottom. They were also ignorant of the fact that an educational film must be able to go out on its rounds, just like the dramatic or comedy, and earn the cost of its production and distribution and a profit, before a manufacturer can engage in its production or distribution. Time has changed all this in the past few years; for the knowledge of moving pictures of all types has been increasing and the intelligent friends of educational films have grown in wisdom and multiplied in numbers.

I have before me a catalogue just from the press, compiled by George Kleine, the largest collector and owner of educational moving pictures in the world. The collection of these pictures has been a labor of love on the part of Mr. Kleine, much the same as that of the man who makes a rare collection of art works or books. But I shall let Mr. Kleine's introduction to his catalogue speak for itself:

This collection is in no sense merely a commercial stock of moving pictures. It is comparable, rather, to a collection of rare books, paintings or etchings. Many of the negatives from which these subjects were printed are no longer in existence, making it impossible to replace the film should it be destroyed. The collection, as a whole, is the result, not of a sudden effort to acquire all the educational film possible, but of the personal activity of a discriminating collector, covering a period of a number of years. The subjects which make up this collection were selected with no thought as to their commercial value, but because they represented, educationally and artistically, the highest development in the art of making moving pictures.

We do not claim that this collection is anything like a complete motographic library containing every subject that could be profitably treated in this manner. It could not thus be characterized even if it included every educational moving picture ever made. There is no branch of human endeavor which could not be treated as advantageously by cinematography, and the possibilities of this art as an educational factor have never been scratched. To do this, years of further effort and the expenditure of vast sums of money will be required. Manufacturers must receive a great deal more encouragement from educators than has been given them in the past. The manufacture and exploitation of educational films has never been commercially profitable, and the progressive manufacturers who have devoted brains, energy and money to this work have been unrewarded save for the satisfaction they have received from the knowledge of a valuable work well done. The public mind, however, and especially that part of it which is concerned with the problems of modern pedagogic methods, is awakening to the value of animated pictures as an educational force.

We have endeavored to provide life motion pictures in sequences which give the work of text-books without their dryness, and yet impart a degree of actual knowledge of the subjects which cannot be obtained from mere reading. Progressive educators will welcome this opportunity to instruct by means of motion pictures, not as a substitute for text-book instruction, but as an immensely valuable supplement to the older method. Education thus secured is not likely to be forgotten, and the ideal combination of sound pedagogy and wholesome entertainment thus achieved is possible only in cinematographic exhibitions.

We wish to make clear the fact that we are constantly adding to this collection of educational film, and to announce that supplementary lists of additional reels will be published from time to time and mailed to those who have received a copy of this catalogue.

Following the introduction are two pages devoted to "Practical Hints in the Projection of Moving Pictures" and special advice to operators, which, if strictly heeded, will prevent accidents and promote the artistic screening of the pictures.

The catalogue is of library size with handsome paper cover, and is substantially bound. It has 162 pages which are devoted to a description of the reels and subjects, the reels being numbered from 1 to 161. After this is given a list of special features, with a complete synopsis of the story of each. These special features and the dramatic and comedy subjects listed in "the arrangement of reels" will enable the lover of educational films to vary his educational programs at will, so as to relieve monotony.

As already mentioned in an extract from the introduction the arrangement of the reels has been effected so as to assemble on the same reel subjects of kindred type, and as close as possible to 1,000 feet in length. This does away with the split reel; that is one which is only part of 1,000 feet in length.

The indexing of the contents has been made very simple. There is a classified index from which the patron can easily select the subject desired. The subjects are subdivided into agriculture, aviation, biblical, botany, comedy and comedy dramas, dramatic, electricity, fisheries and pisciculture, historical, industrial, legendary, medical, surgical and public health topics, micro-cinematography, military and naval, mines and mining, morality plays, motor boats, mountain climbing, public institutions, public disasters, pyrotechnic display, religion, travel (the most extensive subdivision), and zoology and natural history.

The special feature index gives the number of parts in each subject, the approximate time required for projection, and the catalogue page number on which the subject and its synopsis may be found.

The general alphabetical index gives the reel number, the title of the subject and the catalogue page number, which gives a brief synopsis of the subject.

Altogether the catalogue is by far the most concise and simply arranged I have yet seen on educational subjects. The descriptions of the educational subjects are really gems; so inclusive and yet so brief and interesting are they. The synopses of the dramas, comedies and features show the same intelligent and happy treatment.

A copy of the catalogue will be mailed free to every bona fide user of educational films, on application to George Kleine, 166 North State street, Chicago.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Miss Beverly Bayne, one of Essanay's popular leading women, as has been told in the story of the conventoin held at the West Hotel by Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of the Northwest, visited the convention at the expressed desire of the members. This charming lady was highly honored for her visit, being presented with a loving cup at the grand ball held in the West Hotel Friday evening, May 7th. She also had the honor of leading the grand march with Mayor Nye, of Minneapolis, as partner.

Otis Harlan has been engaged by the Selig Polyscope Co. to appear in the leads of various Hoyt's plays which he made famous on the stage. These include "A Black Sheep," "A Trip to Chinatown," etc.

Louis Joseph Vance, well known author and writer of short stories, stopped over in Chicago, on his way to New York from Los Angeles, several days ago.

Two more directors have been added to the Selig staff in California, according to the general plan announced by J. A. Berst, vice president and general manager. George Nichols, who recently directed many of Griffith's stars at the Mutual, has begun work at the Selig Jungle-Zoo studio on "The Isle of Content," in which Miss Anna Luther, who recently joined the Selig forces, is featured. Another is Lloyd B. Carleton, who is producing "The Escape," taken from the novel of that name by Charles Belmont Davis. Miss Bessie Eyton is featured in this drama.

Miss Ethel Barrymore, who is at present making one of her finest successes on the dramatic stage at the Blackstone theater, this city, has announced that she will join the Metro Pictures Corporation in August. The play has not yet been selected, but she desires a big dramatic story. Miss Barrymore has in mind a Grecian character for a feature of about five or six reels.

The Current Events class of the First Congregational Church, Evanston, met Sunday, May 9, and appointed Joel Hunter, chairman of the class, to select a committee to investigate the character of moving pictures shown in that Chicago suburb. A meeting will be called in June, when a report will be made. At that time the members present will decide on the manner of eliminating objectionable moving pictures.

General Manager R. R. Nehls, of the American Film Mfg. Co., has informed me that on Monday, May 3rd, the date of the release of the first chapter of "The Diamond from the Sky," sixteen Chicago theaters showed the pictures. He is much satisfied with the daily reports coming in on the success of the exhibitions all over the country. When I was in Minneapolis many of the finest theaters had attractive announcements concerning the date of the first showing of the first chapter in that city.

The Strand Theater Co. offered for the second week's program at Orchestra Hall, Monday, May 10, Mary Pickford's latest picture, "Fanchon the Cricket." The first week's business far exceeded the expectations of the management. The director of the orchestra under Arthur Dunham's direction, will play another series of appropriate numbers, and prominent vocal soloists will be heard in accompaniment to the pictures.

"The Eternal City" is now in its last week at the Studebaker. The Dorsey travel pictures of the United Photo-Play Co., will follow.

"A Fool There Was" entered upon its second week at the Ziegfeld Saturday, May 8. In the film version of the great drama Edward Jose appears as the fool, the stage part of which was originated by Robert Hilliard.

"The Avenging Conscience" will close its fine run at the Fine Arts theater Friday evening, May 14.

George Kleine's "The Commuters" opened well in Chicago, and the subject is in good demand in the finer theaters.

Mrs. Carter H. Harrison recently requested several Chicago dailies to publish that she did not approve of "The Birth of a Nation." "I do not approve of it and believe it should not be shown," she said. "While it is a great picture from the producer's standpoint, it is the most awful thing I have seen. It would arouse racial feeling. I am a Southerner and you naturally would expect me to oppose such pictures as this."

Judge Willis Brown, the founder of "Boy Cities" in various parts of the United States, has gone moving picture censors one better. He was in Evanston lately, and announced that he is the author of a bill that will soon be introduced to Congress to censor scenarios. What next!

Justice has at last, and for the first time, been meted out to one of the throwers of a mal-odorous bomb in a moving picture theater. John Panegasser is the man. He was formerly a moving picture operator and the charge was made by George Zouzoneas, owner of a theater at 1511 West 18th street. Panegasser denied the charge when brought before Judge Caverly. Zouzoneas testified that he saw John shove the bomb with his foot. The judge requested the prisoner to take off his shoe, and the judge took a sniff at it and then turned it over to the city prosecutor, who made a wry face. "You are guilty, all right," said the judge to Panegasser; "$200 and costs." The owner of the theater stated that he had some difficulty with a Moving Picture Operators' Union some time ago.

Moving picture acting schools in Chicago are now under the surveillance of United States postoffice inspectors. Some interesting developments are expected soon.

In the brevities of my Chicago Letter of May 8th, reference was made to the rigorous censorship of films used by John D. Hodgson, manager of the Oak Park theater, by Chief of Police George Lee and the village board president. Mr. Hodgson declared he would appeal to his patrons. He did so by inserting an advertisement in a local paper asking for the opinions of residents on the matter. Two hundred and sixty-nine persons answered and urged him to take the matter up with the village board, promising him their support. All these people favor moving pictures on Sunday and there is no doubt that Mr. Hodgson will win his point.

The Playhouse, Oak Park, will henceforth devote every Thursday night to an educational program, the program to be selected by the board of directors of the Fair Hope League. "The school board of Oak Park is co-operating with the league in trying out this system of education," said George Blumenstock, president of the league, "and we believe this experiment will result in changing the school system, not only in Oak Park, but throughout the state of Illinois." The first evening's program was: "Picturesque Zurich," "Romeo and Juliet," "Malaga, Southern Spain," "Art and Furrier," "Iron and Steel Industry" and "The Children's House."

The branch managers of the central division of the World Film Corporation were the guests of W. R. Scates and Harry Weiss, of the Chicago office recently. Sunday, May 9th, was spent in discussing conditions. Those present were: Clay E. Brehm, Cincinnati office; R. L. White, St. Louis office; Jos. Klein, Detroit office; W. W. Kulp, Cleveland office; P. Goldstone, Omaha office; E. M. Lane, Indianapolis office; E. D. Selden, Minneapolis office, and M. J. Burnside, traveling representative for the Cleveland office. Max Levey, of the Chicago office, has been appointed the manager of the Kansas City office, to succeed C. L. McVey. Harry Weiss, of the Chicago office, has been appointed assistant division manager to assist Mr. Scates.

The Frude Film Circuit Closer, a fire prevention device manufactured by the Motion Picture Fire Prevention Devices Co., 1601 Indiana avenue, this city, has been recently installed in the Circle, Bijou Dream, Bryn Mawr and Austin theaters in this city. The company's office will furnish full information on the device, on application.

COLUMBUS EXHIBITORS EAT "DUTCH LUNCH."

A "Dutch lunch" was enjoyed by the members of the Columbus Exhibitors' Local at the Chittenden Hotel, Columbus, Ohio, on Tuesday, May 4. Max Stearn, president of the Ohio League, presided. J. A. Maddox, of the Majestic, and John Swain, of the Pastime, both ex-presidents of the local, were among those present.

The guest of the evening was M. A. Neff, National Vice-President for Ohio. He received a hearty welcome and made a brief address in which he urged the members of the league to stand by their officers, local, state and national.

President Stearn reported that old members were paying their back dues and that the State League would soon have as many active members as formerly.

Columbus Local has decided to hold monthly meetings and every other month there will be a luncheon.

EX-GOVERNOR SULZER IN PICTURES.

William Sulzer, the ex-Governor of New York state, is the featured star of a coming film production built around the evils of modern politics. The story is fiction, based on the play, "The Governor's Boss," which was produced soon after the sensational impeachment trial in which Mr. Sulzer was removed from the Gubernatorial chair. The producing company is backed by some of the most prominent citizens of Freeport, Long Island. The head of the company is J. Huyler Ellison, a well known real estate man and politician of Freeport, and the other members are equally prominent in the town. Some very well known theatrical folk, who make their homes in Freeport, are not interested financially in the film but they are very much interested in seeing it since they took minor parts, many of them making their first bow to the camera in this feature.

While the story of the film is based on fiction, still it presents some very big political issues which must be dealt with by the voters, and it was because of this exposure of bossism that the ex-Governor was willing and indeed enthusiastic over participating in the production. Director Charles Davenport, of the Davenport Producing company, has been working for the past two months on this feature to get every effect and thrill just as desired by the Freeport financiers and Mr. Sulzer. The cast of the production includes a number of very well-known film stars who have entered into the spirit of the film to such an extent that some unusual results are anticipated. The officers of this new organization are in the Times building, where President J. Huyler Ellison is in charge.

Doings at Los Angeles.

TOM MIX, manager and director of the Western Selig Company at Glendale, while taking a leading part in the Wild West Rodeo and Fiesta held annually in Los Angeles, was seriously, if not fatally, injured when he was trampled and crushed in a collision between two big four-horse chuck wagons which were racing. The injured film man was rushed to the receiving hospital and later taken to the Sisters' Hospital, where he now is lying in a precarious condition. His injuries are a badly shattered jaw, facial cuts and bruises, crushed chest, fractured leg and dangerous internal injuries and shock. The accident was most spectacular. Two heavy wagons were racing towards each other when a rein broke on one of the teams and the plunging steeds dashed together, causing one animal to be catapulted 25 feet through the air, the others thrown and bumped, and the wagons telescoped. Mix was caught under the horses' feet and crushed between the two vehicles. At first it was thought he was dead. Several other participants were severely injured in the crash.

Thomas H. Ince, who was so near death last week when his speeding car hit a wet spot in the road and turned turtle, is fast recovering, but the big producer came near cashing in his final checks. I drove out to his country home to see him the day that he was allowed to go outside in the garden, and he certainly looked like a changed man. His arm was plastered up to his chest, to allow the shattered collar bone to knit, and his face showed the unmistakable signs of pain harassed and sleepless nights. It is two weeks since the wreck, and he is just able to be on his feet. He said that life never before held so much for him, because he had never had time to sit out in the open and enjoy the beauties of nature, and to be glad of living as he has done for the past few days. He is on the road to recovery and is even now dictating scripts, superintending production, and seeing new films run, in his home projection room.

After finishing their present productions, the B. A. Rolfe Photoplays, Inc., players will trek back to the big city to work in their studio there. Today Mr. Rolfe said that they hated to go, but that it was necessary. It is not known what company will occupy the hill studio, but the Essanay have their eye on the location.

For the first time in the history of the film capital, a candidate for mayor, or any other office, has recognized the motion picture studios and theater men. Frederick J. Whiffen, candidate for the high city office, made a flying trip this week to many of the plants here to see the industry, interview the producers and players, and tell them that if elected he will be sure to see that the picture folks get a square deal. For many months and, in fact, ever since the industry has been here, the city has failed to recognize the first industry of this country, and many filmers have almost moved out of town on this account. They fail utterly to realize that our picture men own over a million dollars' worth of automobiles, keep them up and rent many others. The industry sends out perhaps twelve millions each year, according to estimates made by Ad. Kessel, who says that his company sent west over seven hundred thousand last year, and this season the drafts will almost be doubled. The Chamber of Commerce is just beginning to awaken to the fact that the industry picks up the pennies in the east and sends them out in dollars, to be spent here, and they are taking steps to recognize and co-operate with the picture men. Nearly every permanent actor and, in fact, everyone connected with the business who lives here owns his own home, and many have invested much money in land and other properties.

The latest fad here is to get married before the camera. This week Miss Beatrice Hoover, a member of "The Bride Shop" company at the Orpheum, and H. B. Shipley, manager of the show, were wedded to the click of the wedding camera instead of the piano, at the Rolfe studio. Mr. Rolfe wrote and staged the play, and he was best man at the film wedding. Society leaders are now going to preserve their wedding ceremonies in a can of film.

Here is a good one from the Times of current issue: "The United Pictures Co., of Chicago, is to come to California next year to stage a huge war picture. It is said that as a part of the photodrama they are to blow up some of the buildings at the Panama exposition at the close of the fair" ! ! !

Victor Moore is now working in "Chimmie Fadden" at the Lasky plant, with Camille Astor opposite. The play is under the direction of Cecil B. De Mille. George Melford has started work on "The Fighting Hope" with Laura Hope Crews. A new office and prop room are now under construction here, and other small buildings are being erected.

Another company has started work here, having taken the old Oz studio, recently vacated by the Famous Players. It is headed by William Parsons, who is president, Dr. Dane L. Tasker, vice-president, and Bruce Mitchell, who is director and manager. It is to be known as the National Film Co., and will make comedies of more than one reel. A. W. Coldeway, ex-Universal and Kriterion scripter, is to write the stories. They have secured players from the east who will come here to work. Production has already started.

Ad. Kessel and his brother, Charles, are now in New York on business. They went to attend a big meeting and to plan coming improvements in the western plants of the New York corporation. They expect to bring many new and big things west next summer. Work has already started on the addition to the Keystone studio and plant. A $35,000 building is under course of construction and several other small buildings have been started just across the street on a plot of ground just signed for. There will be a large stage housed in a big frame building, equipped with powerful electric lights so that the rain will not hamper work any more. The stage is 155 by 70. A garage is being built to house the Keystone cars, and additional dressing rooms and other operating spaces are being provided. Hale Hamilton, of Wallingford fame, has signed with Mr. Kessel, and Raymond Hitchcock will arrive here in June. Bert Clark, of Clark and Hamilton, will also appear in New York pictures. Mr. Kessel has been working at high tension for the five months he has been here and when he gets back home he is going yachting for a few weeks, after which he will come back to work.

Harry Pollard and Margarita Fischer, who for so many months have delighted film audiences with their Beauty brand pictures, released by the Flying "A," have left the Santa Barbara studios and are now with the Universal. In the parade of the annual Fiesta de las Flores, held in Los Angeles this week, were many gay floats entered by film companies. Among the most gorgeous was a Colonial coach-and-four, entered by Mack Sennett, of the Keystone. The vehicle was gilded with pure gold leaf, and the hoofs of the white horses were also gilded, as was the harness.

Lewis S. Stone, well-known leading man, who is now playing in New York, has been signed by Thomas H. Ince to appear in Ince features at the canyon studio this summer. He will be featured with Bessie Barriscale, thus renewing acting experiences, they both having formerly appeared at the old Belasco theater in this city.

Jimmie Douglas is directing Wallace MacDonald in "The Girl Next Door," the first of a series of one-reelers. Irving Cummings has replaced Director Jaccard who left last week. Cummings is playing the lead just the same, and is making good at both ends of the work with his stand-pat players in this thrilling serial.

Charlie Chaplin is being besieged by auto salesmen, realty agents and a hundred other sort of pests these days, since the Essanay has established its studio here. He has to keep out of sight most of the time and shunt the money getters onto his director, Jesse J. Robbins. The company has just finished a new thousand-foot comedy, "By the Sea," and it is a scream.

S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American, has returned from Chicago and is busy again at the Santa Barbara studios of the Flying "A." Archie McMackin has invested in a bungalow and seems satisfied to stay here for some time. Henry Otto and his company have been snowbound up in the mountains north of the studio city and they report it as no laughing matter, especially when they did not intend to stay but two days. A Loss to the Motion Pictures

Charles Frohman, Charles Klein and Elbert Hubbard Among the Lusitania Victims—Film Men on Board Were Saved.

THE tragic death of three of the prominent Americans on board the "Lusitania" has made a gap in theatrical circles and in contemporaneous literature. Charles Frohman was easily the foremost figure in American theatricals, Charles Klein stood high in the ranks of dramatists, while Elbert Hubbard had achieved no inconsiderable fame in literature.

The theatrical career of Charles Frohman is well-known; he was the great intermediary who gave to America the best that England produced and who made the American play acceptable to London. His achievements were notable and on an ever increasing scale; he stood at all times for clean and wholesome plays and for the maintenance of the best traditions of the English-speaking stage. He developed some of the most successful playwrights and some of the most famous histrionic stars, chief among them the distinguished Maude Adams. He sold several of his plays to the Famous Players Film Company of which his brother, Daniel Frohman, is the guiding spirit. Inasmuch as these plays were popular favorites and maintained high standards both ethically and artistically the motion picture owes a debt to Charles Frohman. In these days when the motion picture is so closely interwoven with the legitimate drama the elevating influence of a man like Charles Frohman was not to be underestimated from even a purely motion picture point of view. His death, therefore, is not only a severe loss to the legitimate stage, but will be deplored no less in motion picture circles.

Charles Frohman had been associated with all that was famous and meritorious on the American stage. His relations with Belasco were of the most friendly and intimate character and the latter has now paid him a most touching tribute in the public press. Mr. Frohman had enjoyed the respect and the confidence of all and the tribute to his memory is unanimous, none being more sincere and eloquent than that of the men who had been his rivals.

Charles Klein, at the height of his fame contracted, with the Lubin Manufacturing Company for the filming of his most famous and successful plays. The enterprise of the Lubin Company did full justice to the Kleine plays. Mr. Klein took a lively personal interest in the work of screening his plays and offered many valuable suggestions. The new art interested him deeply, he was one of the first if not the first American author of distinction who scouted the prejudice against the motion pictures and who was willing to give the screen the distinction of his fame and prestige. He never regretted his attitude. It was a source of pleasure and gratification to him to know that through the screen he had been enabled to reach a public to be counted by the millions. The screen greatly added to the fame and the popularity of the distinguished author. Mr. Klein had taken a good deal of interest in the work of the All-Star Company in which his son, Philip Klein, held a position of prominence. Among the plays of Mr. Klein which were successfully filmed by the Lubin Company were his first noted successes "The Lion and the Mouse," "The Climbers" and "The District Attorney." Mr. Klein had plans of associating himself more intimately with the development of the new art. His death, too, means a loss to the world of motion pictures.

Elbert Hubbard, best known as the editor of "The Philistine," a journal of radical tendencies scintillating with the author's peculiar caustic wit and at times tinged with Rabelaisian realism, was known as a staunch champion of the motion picture. He took a profound interest in the possibilities of the motion picture and what he wrote on the subject showed his thorough comprehension of the higher destiny of the motion picture. What appealed to him most was the tremendous educative value of the screen and he often predicted the revolutionary changes which the motion picture would bring about both in the field of amusements and in the field of education.

Among the saved passengers were two film men well-known on both sides of the water and Miss Rita Jolivet, the French-American film actress. The film men were Edward Barry, formerly connected with the American-Ambrosio and now the manager of a new enterprise the "Anglo-American Distributing Company," and Edgar Hounsell, the owner of the company and well known in the English midland counties as the distributor of Paramount productions. Mr. Barry had been on a flying visit to this country with Mr. Hounsell, buying American films for the British market.

Wilmuth Merkyl in "Wife for a Wife"

KALEM has just announced a change in the release date of its three-act feature, "The Haunting Fear." Instead of being issued on Monday, May 31, as was stated in the May issue of the Kalem Kalendar, and in recent trade paper advertisements, "The Haunting Fear" will be released Friday, June 11.

The three-act "Broadway Favorites" feature, "Wife for Wife," will be the Kalem release for May 31. The reason for the change lies in the fact that the issuance of "The Haunting Fear" on that date would have made it impossible for Kalem to carry out its original plan of releasing a "Broadway Favorites" feature every other Monday. The Kalem Kalendar for June will contain the synopsis of "Wife for Wife." The publication is expected to reach the exhibitors before this feature is released.

Wilmuth Merkyl.

"Wife for Wife" is the vehicle for Wilmuth Merkyl, a star who stands high in the esteem of New York theter-goers. He will be remembered for his sterling work early this season with Hazel Dawn in "The Debutante," which was presented at the Knickerbocker theater; "Adele," staged at the Longacre and Harris theaters; "Her Little Highness," and "Sari," both of which scored successes at the Liberty theater.

"Wife for Wife" was written by John A. Stevens, and is regarded as one of the most successful of the plays dealing with the South as it was "befoh de wah," which have been presented upon the American stage. The "Broadway Favorites" production of this famous drama was filmed at the Kalem Jacksonville (Fla.) Studios. Consequently, the producers were enabled to imbue it with the atmosphere of the part of the country in which the action takes place.

WASSERMAN LOOKING FOR SERVICE.

Among the visitors at the office of the Moving Picture World last week were H. I. Wasserman, general manager of several prosperous Massachusetts theaters, and his associate, George M. Rosen. Mr. Wasserman and Mr. Rosen came to New York to look over the feature market with a view to securing the best possible service for the houses they control, the Eagle Theater, Roxbury, seating 800; the Orpheum, Haverhill, seating 750 and the Victoria in Lawrence, with a capacity of 810.

POLLOCK BUILDING NEW THEATER.

Edward Pollock has had plans drawn for a moving picture theater he is to build in North Tarrytown, New York. The size of the structure will be 40 by 124 feet, and the auditorium will seat 1,000 persons. It will be practically fireproof throughout, and all modern conveniences will be installed. The theater will be known as The Pollock. It will be ready for occupancy in three months, and will involve an expenditure of $25,000. The dimensions of the stage are 14 by 40 feet.

H. Z. LEVINE DISTRIBUTING BOOKLET.

H. Z. Levine, until recently in charge of the advertising and publicity of the William Fox motion picture enterprises, is distributing among the trade a neatly printed booklet carrying the title, "Motion Picture Articles," and being "analytical of trade conditions in the United States and Europe." The subject matter is, for the most part, reprinted from the Moving Picture World and the New York Morning Telegraph, and consists of articles written for these publications while Mr. Levine was in the employ of various big film producing companies.

Sixty Chorus Girls at Cliffside.

How the Kalem Company Is Reproducing "Maxim's at Midnight"—Everything Real, Even to the Waiters.

By Lynde Denig.

THE Cliffside studio of the Kalem Co. is just across the river from Harlem, New York. When one passes through this section of New Jersey it is natural to wonder how land so near New York can be so vacant. Apparently no one ever goes there from anywhere else unless the call is urgent and then it is not customary to remain long. Nearly all of the houses are marked "to let;" but there are a few exceptions and for the occupants of these exceptions the past week has been distinguished from all preceding weeks. There have been two free shows, Uncle Sam's grey men-of-war riding at anchor in the river and sixty chorus girls dancing in the Kalem open-air, swept-by-river-breezes studio. Cliffside favored the more alluring of the two spectacles.

William Wright, of Kalem, does not pose as a connoisseur of feminine fascinations; but—well, he has not let the years in New York slip by without acquiring a discriminating judgment, and at a little luncheon party in the Astor he spoke as one having authority on an engrossing subject—the beauty of women, no less. And the very women to whom he referred were soon to be seen pirouetting merrily in the sunlight of Cliffside. The Kalem Company, it appeared, was prepared "to perpetuate for future generations" the American dancing girl at her best. When historians want to know how the husbands of 1915 spent their evenings they may turn to the picture "Maxim's at Midnight" and see the whole performance from soup to nuts, and even imagine the popping of corks. Maxim's can be transported to small hamlets; it can be screened at Sing Sing to remind favored inmates of the way they once spent money; it can be—but why go on? The girls are waiting across the river.

You have seen musical comedies in which the characters are shifted in a jiffy from civilization to a desert island. Well that was the first impression of the Kalem part of Cliffside on Tuesday afternoon, except that this time the people had taken a slice of their building with them. On a platform covered with a canvas top stood a three-cornered section of Maxims. There was no mistaking it and the night birds, in their electric light plumage, were seated at the round tables, sipping wine and smoking cigarettes, just as though it were midnight in New York, instead of a warm afternoon with the sun beating down on the canvas and the smell of spring in the breeze.

Carpenters pounded on Kalem's new studio right next to Cliffside's Maxims; a circle of spectators kept pushing closer to the platform and sixty chorus girls, not to mention a half dozen principals—the combined entertainment forces of Maxim's, Bustonoby's Rector's and a selected number from other restaurants—either danced or waited their turn. Every stepladder, every over-turned table, every board that could be placed on supporting barrels, held its quota of bare-shouldered, powdered, short-skirted fairness, being kept out in the open air and not appreciating, apparently, the joys of a day in the country. Maxim's orchestra was there, too, and even the waiters were the very ones that look for tips of an evening. Can photoplay realism go further?

Director George Sargeant had been set the task of reproducing the entire performance exactly as it is given at Maxim's, with a few additions. Sans coat and collar, with shirt sleeves rolled up to his elbows, he worked with the energy of a Billy Sunday, exhorting the pajama girls to keep within the lines, calling the property boys from the shade of nearby trees, beseeching the carpenters to rest a moment while the orchestra played, urging the waiters to behave just as though they expected the usual reward and crying for enthusiasm among the midnight birds at the round tables. "Picture," he shouted and presto! it was midnight at Maxim's.

Diagonally south from the platform stood an old house that once, no doubt, was called a mansion. It had become the prison of fairies. Every now and again, the door opened and a new species, ten or a dozen strong, wandered across the grass and looked for a place to rest until Director Sargeant called. The pajama girls were there, the girls from Rector's and many, many more, but best of all the bon-bon girls in the oddest and most fetching costumes that ever stirred the men of Cliffside to thoughts of a trip to Broadway.

But they were not fairies after all and they were very tired, and there were casualties to ruffle the temper. When the afternoon was over, the smooth expanse of one unprotected white stocking was marred by a smudge of green paint; one of the girls from Rector's regarded sorrowfully a scratch on her arm made by a rusty nail, and a bon-bon girl regretted the broken toe of a silk slipper. You see "Maxim's at Midnight" is human as well as gay, and the beauty of it is, you will be able to enjoy it without staying up late.

U. S. BATTLESHIP FLORIDA USES POWER'S.

The United States Battleship Florida, one of the largest of the North Atlantic squadron now anchored in the North River for a ten days' celebration, is equipped with a Power's moving picture projecting machine and during the electrical display at night, this machine is used as a searchlight to throw its powerful rays on the United States flag, thus dispensing with a regular searchlight, which can be used for other purposes.

Winik and Brock Buy Foreign Rights.

Deal With the World Film Corporation Whereby They Will Handle Pictures in All Countries Except the United States and Canada.

EXTENSIVE plans for the control of a world photoplay market have been completed by Hyman Winik and Henry J. Brock in co-operation with the World Film Corporation. According to the arrangements, which go into effect immediately, Messrs. Winik and Brock will sell the World Film products in all countries save the United States and Canada. Headquarters will be established in London under a firm name yet to be decided upon. Choice lies between the World Film Corporation of London and Winik, Brock and Co., Inc.

In speaking of the new enterprise, J. D. Williams, manager of the World Film foreign department, said that he knew of no distributing system on anything approaching the scale contemplated. The producers will profit by having the foreign market handled by one concern, the buyers of the rights to look after the circulation of the pictures and the building up of markets in other countries.

Messrs. Winik and Brock, it appears, have arranged to handle the output of other manufacturers, as well as that of the World Film, and with a very large supply to draw upon, they intend opening branch offices in all parts of Europe, with local men in charge, who will be able to pick out the type of subjects most suitable to their clienteles. At the present time there are approximately fifty World Film photoplays available for European exhibitors and buyers will always have a large stock from which to make a selection. The contract stipulates that one picture shall be used each week and the choice will be left with those best qualified to estimate the preferences of the market they aim to satisfy.

Both of the men in the new combine have long records for successful accomplishment in motion picture affairs. Mr. Winik, whose headquarters are in London, organized the Acme Feature Film Company, is the owner of three theaters in Tacoma, Wash., and back in 1909 introduced the Johnson-Ketchel fight pictures into the United States. Mr. Brock is general manager of the Mark-Brock Theatrical enterprises and recently became president of the Radium Gold Fibre Screen Corporation. Also he is managing director of the United Motion Pictures, Ltd., which controls a number of theaters in the United States and Canada.

Plans National Affiliation of Exhibitors.

A. W. Blankmeyer President and General Manager of the Michigan Theaters Corporation, Outlines Plans for New Organization.

READERS of the Moving Picture World are already more or less acquainted with the plans of A. W. Blankmeyer to make certain chosen exhibitors independent owners and distributors of the feature offerings that they show. He is an exhibitor and formerly conducted the Grand Circus theater in Detroit. Early in the spring he effected an incorporation in Michigan of the more substantial theaters into an affiliation with the object of buying big features and distributing direct without the help of any middleman. This organization is a success, it is reported. And it is only natural that from this success Mr. Blankmeyer should turn toward bigger things; for if the movement was of use in Michigan it should be as popular and as successful everywhere.

He is in New York now with the object of effecting the incorporation of a national organization to be known as The National Theaters Corporation. This parent organization will in turn organize local organizations throughout the United States, each of them to be known by some local name such as the Michigan Theaters Corporation. The former will be a national clearing house and the latter local clearing houses for feature pictures. Six of these latter are already incorporated: One in Oklahoma, three in Ohio and one in Michigan. Each of them will comprise a hundred theaters that do not compete and that are substantial and promising businesses. It is thought that thirty local clearinghouses will cover the United States. Thus, if the scheme goes through, there will be here 3,000 houses strongly intrenched in a co-operative buying agreement. What is more, its promoters contemplate producing features for themselves.

This producing plan would create a studio that, at first would be a separate organization, capitalized at $2,000,000. In time the National Theaters Corporation will buy half of its stock, applying to that purpose half of the net earnings of the local corporations. These local corporations will be owned by the interested exhibitors, each of whom will buy stock, five shares at $10 each being the limit allowed individual theaters. In each local corporation there will be a hundred theaters and 5,000 shares and these local corporations will own the National Corporation and will be assessed for the overhead charges of running its office.

When the local clearing house is formed, a meeting of the stock holders (theaters owning the local company), will be called. A list of future offerings will be discussed and franchises to every house will be issued, entitling that house to certain prints on certain days. The national corporation buys positives from the producers at the rate of 4 cents a foot and each of the local companies has two prints of every picture, so that after eighty days every exhibitor in the corporation will have shown it. As no theater is competing with any other house affiliated there will not be trouble between inside exhibitors, except where outside competition rubs. Only two houses in the district can have first runs and for these $50 a day will be asked for a term of one week, seven days. Twenty-three exhibitors following these will have the picture for two days running at $25 a day, and following these thirty exhibitors for a two-day run at $20 a day, and then the balance at $15 a day. When all have run any picture, it may be rented to houses outside of the organization.

It is contemplated that the producing company will make six pictures a month and although the exact organization of this is not given out, yet it is said that the money to float it is promised, if not already subscribed.

At Leading Picture Theatres.

Vitagraph Theater Program.

ANOTHER specially attractive program has been arranged for the Vitagraph Theater this week, and includes the Broadway Star Feature picture in three parts, "In the Days of Famine," Chapter II. of the Vitagraph Serial, "The Goddess," and three comedy films. "In the Days of Famine," written by James Oliver Curwood, tells the story of the "Red Year" in the frozen North, when plague and famine stalked through the land. Theodore Marston, who directed the picture, has succeeded in transferring a section of snow-clad wilderness to the screen that is uncommonly beautiful. Dorothy Kelly, James Morrison, George Cooper and Donald Hall enact the principal roles. The shorter pictures include "Sonny Jim at the Mardi Gras," with Bobby Connelly; "Mrs. Jarr's Auction Bridge," No. 9 of Roy McCardell's Jarr Family Series; and a two-part feature comedy, "Playing the Game," introducing Lillian Walker and Evart Overton.

Elsie Janis at the Strand.

The main feature at the Strand Theater this week is Elsie Janis in "Betty in Search of a Thrill," this clever young actress appearing as a vivacious little New York heiress who has been brought up in a convent and hungers to see life in the big city. Miss Janis plays "Betty" with the proper dash and performs a number of amazing feats during the action of the photoplay. Other screen attractions are a new Keystone comedy, scientific and travel pictures, and the Strand Topical Review. The musical program consists of vocal and instrumental solos, and the Concert Orchestra, under the direction of Carl Edouarde. The soloists are Miss Julia Beverly, Miss Alys Baldwin, Miss Anna Welch and Miss Isoline Harvey.

The Hippodrome Bill.

The Danish tragedienne, Miss Betty Nansen, in "A Woman's Resurrection," a five-reel photoplay made from Count Leo Tolstoi's celebrated story, "The Resurrection," is the feature picture at the Hippodrome this week. "The Pendleton Round-up." a one-reel thriller, showing the most daring riders in the West in exciting sports; the Mutual Weekly, the animated review of current events; "A Cluster of Gems," by up-to-date composers, rendered pictorially by the Hippodrome quartette, chorus and orchestra; and a Peace Tableau, an elaborate living picture symbolizing peace, complete the excellent program.

Clyde Fitch Drama at the Broadway Theater.

The Broadway Theater is presenting this week Clyde Fitch's powerful drama, "The Moth and the Flame," which has been splendidly produced by the Famous Players Company. The play made a great success in its original form, and the screen version is being received with equal favor. The bill also includes a number of the latest comedies, the Broadway Animated News, South American travel pictures, and humorous cartoons.

Canada Passes Fight Pictures.

Quebec Censors Find Nothing Objectionable to Public Morals in Willard-Johnson Fight Films.

AFTER a three hours' session, the Johnson-Willard fight films were passed by the Quebec censors on May 10. Twice the films were shown for the benefit of the judges, and upon their verdict the censoring boards in every province of Canada waited. The pictures were privately shown some time ago in Toronto, but the censors there did not come to a decision, preferring to hear what the Quebec board had to say. Dr. L. J. Lemieux and Messrs. G. Maxwell Sinn and M. J. Walsh, after considering the question from every viewpoint, and taking cognizance of a pile of letters received in the main from outside places in the province, came to the conclusion that there was nothing in the picturization of the combat at Havana that was injurious to public morals. Their decision is based on what is shown on the screen. After the session the following statement was issued by Sheriff Lemieux:

"The Willard-Johnson boxing match was unanimously passed by the Board of Censors after several days' consultation. It was decided finally by the censors that the Willard-Johnson contest was not nearly as injurious to public morals as many boxing matches permitted by the city's by-laws, and by boxing matches allowed and encouraged in almost every athletic club in the city, particularly after the cuts and modifications made in the pictures."

The cuts mentioned, it is understood, were of a trifling nature, and chiefly dealt with some of the titles to the reels. The battle for the heavyweight championship of the world is described as being clean-cut all through and the camera did not record one foul blow in all the twenty-six rounds.

This official O. K. by the censors permits the pictures to be shown in Montreal. While the censors were busy at their labors they were bombarded by inquiries by the film censoring boards from Vancouver to the Maritime Provinces, while interest in the fate of the pictures was not confined to Canada, inquiries regarding the censors' decision being made from New York and Boston.

Rival Fight Films.

There are two films being shown in Montreal purporting to depict the Willard-Johnson contest. A seven-reel version of the fight was shown at the Gayety theater the week of May 9th. An eighteen hundred foot length was also playing around the corner at the Casino and King Edward theaters, these two reels being switched back and forth. The owner of the big picture is George Kennedy, a local sport promoter. The Picture Playhouse, Ltd., claim to have the Canadian rights for their subject, the smaller one. Since both claim to have authentic films, we here publish their statements.

Mrs. Paxton, local Picture Playhouse manager, stated: "We are now handling and booking the Johnson-Willard fight in films. These films were taken at the ringside in Havana, and were developed and printed in Cuba. The films were placed in care of the Royal Bank in Havana and delivered under cover to the Royal Bank of Canada, when they were handed into our custody. The picture is now at the Casino and King Edward theaters, the managers of these houses having paid the highest prices ever paid in Canada for a similar picture. Seven hundred dollars a week is the amount."

Mr. Kennedy, owner of the longer picture, when approached, replied as follows: "There is really no statement to make. I have the genuine film of the fight. I am getting the highest prices in town, and we are turning the people away. I could take action against the owners of another film in town, but I do not wish to give the other folk the publicity." Later on Mr. Kennedy publicly told a Gayety audience these last words. Furthermore, Mr. Kennedy showed us a telegram from Jack Curley and Jess Willard claiming that he, Kennedy, held the authentic film.

All of which reminds us of the seven holders of keys in "Seven Keys to Baldpate." Everybody has the genuine article. We have had occasion to view both films and venture to give a candid opinion as to their merits. The shorter film shows scenes preceding the battle, gives a close-up of a negro said to be Johnson, and another of Willard; this last scene seems to be a "still." Several titles are in a foreign language, presumably Cuban or Spanish. The knock-out of Johnson is not cinematographically shown. Instead, it is described in words on the screen, and then follows a masked scene showing a negro lying prostrate; this scene also appears to be a still, and it is of short duration, being merely a flash. The photography is poor, although we are not an expert, the trouble seems to lie in bad focussing.

The seven-reel version of the fight is of good entertaining value. The audience seemed pleased with it. The photography was good. Many notables were shown in the picture, and there were some humorous situations. The taking of this picture, we are given to understand, was under the personal supervision of Fred Mace. The entire twenty-six rounds were shown, and the knock-out was clearly demonstrated. One thing we noticed concerning the two films was that the Picture Playhouse version did not appear to have the same backgrounds as the Fred Mace film. The pictures may have been taken from different angles, it is true.

My sole aim in expressing myself in the above terms is to give to readers an idea as to how the two films appeared to a disinterested party. In any circumstance the above is to be regarded as a purely personal opinion.

GERALD GALLAGHER.

Bushman Tells it to Thompson

Francis X. Bushman, now a member of the Quality-Metro Corporation, Wednesday morning, May 5, at the City Hall, Chicago, held a two hour conference with the Mayor, William Hale Thompson, in which the noted screen star made an effort for the moderation of the censorship laws of Chicago.

Mr. Bushman brought out points which the Mayor willingly admitted to be worthy of special attention. Mayor Thompson seemed to be better educated regarding the welfare and uplift of motion pictures than Mr. Bushman ever dreamed of. He accepted each statement made by the popular motion picture actor as authentic because he knew each to be so. "We were the ones to be enlightened by the information that the Mayor already had preparations under way whereby the photoplays would be given their censorship due and that he had long recognized the fact that a better method of dealing with the 'past' and 'ban slips' were surely necessary and that the corrective methods were already being considered," said Mr. Bushman. In the film world such a move will place Chicago in the popular limelight and awaken considerable talk which will soon bring motion picture business to our own home town.

Francis X. Bushman and Mayor Thompson.

Mr. Bushman left Chicago last Thursday to enter upon his new duties as a star of greater magnitude, playing leading roles with the Quality Pictures Corporation on the Metro program. He will arrive in Los Angeles Sunday and begin work Monday on the first production, "The Second in Command," in which Marguerite Snow, the former Thanhouser star, will play opposite him.

"ONLY NERVOUS BREAKDOWN," SAYS JOHNSON.

Alarming reports regarding the health of Arthur Johnson, the popular Lubin director, brings forth the statement from Johnson that he is not so ill as reported. "Please tell my friends," said Johnson, "that I have had a nervous breakdown—not a very serious one. I have been working very hard for the past few years and have needed a vacation. The doctors told me this some time ago but it's hard for me to keep away from the studio. Now I'm going to take a vacation and follow the line of least resistance. Then I shall return to the Lubin studio and resume directing again. I expect to write a number of photodramas while I am taking life easy at the seashore."

New York Making Big Features

Kessel and Baumann's Companies Busy with Large Feature Subjects for Early Release.

WITHIN two or three weeks the people and plant of the New York Motion Picture Corporation will begin to be busier with the production of feature pictures than ever before in the history of the company. Two multiple-reelers are being completed this week, and with their shipment to New York the wheels of activity will begin to move with even greater speed.

The productions on which finishing touches are being put this week are "Rumpelstiltskin," the four-part adaptation from Grimm's Fairy Tales, and "The Reward," a powerful story of a chorus girl, starring Bessie Barriscale. "Rumpelstiltskin" is being directed by Raymond B. West, the "boy director," and except for about a dozen difficult scenes demanding double exposures it is ready for its journey to the cutting and assembling room.

"The Reward" is being produced by Reginald Barker. For more than six weeks Mr. Barker has been concentrating his efforts on this beautiful picture story, and he declares his work has not been in vain. As Jane Wallace, the chorus girl, who battles to be good, succumbs to her environment and eventually finds peace of mind and consequent happiness, after bearing witness to the birth of a baby, Bessie Barriscale is said to have rendered a remarkable performance. The other principals in the cast are Arthur Maude, Louise Glaum and Clara Williams. The big cabaret scenes were made last week, and it is likely that with the taking of the many exteriors the script will be turned in at the end of this week.

Miss Barriscale will next make her appearance under the direction of Raymond B. West, when that director finishes "Rumpelstiltskin," in "The Mating." This is a refreshing comedy-drama of college life, by C. Gardner Sullivan and Thomas H. Ince, and will offer Miss Barriscale in a somewhat different role. Lewis J. Cody, former Broadway legitimate favorite, will be co-starred with Miss Barriscale. West expects to begin production of "The Mating" next week.

Director Barker's next task will be that of filming a virile political story, to be called "The Man from Oregon." This is a big vital tale of love and intrigue whose scenes are laid in Washington and Oregon, and will have Howard Hickman and Clara Williams as its stars. It, too, was written by C. Gardner Sullivan and Mr. Ince and is expected to prove one of the most pretentious productions of its kind ever made at the Inceville studios.

Simultaneous with the production of these two big features, Charles Swickard will undertake the staging of a spectacular feature of Oriental life, to be known as "The Beckoning Flame." This will present Henry Woodruff, the noted legitimate star, as an Ince player. Tsuru Aoki, the celebrated Japanese actress, who has appeared in a number of the big Ince productions, and Rhea Mitchell will be the other principals in the cast. Carpenters already have begun the erection of many costly settings for use in this picture. Two other features of a like nature, their scenes being laid in the Orient, will occupy Swickard's attention following "The Beckoning Flame." These are to be entitled "The Toast of Death" and "The City of the Dead." "The Scales of Justice," "Shorty Turns Knight" and "The High Card" are other features contemplated. Each of the forthcoming multiple-reelers, of course, will, like all previous productions, be given the personal supervision of Thomas H. Ince.

HOWARD ESTABROOK IN "FOUR FEATHERS."

"Four Feathers," the new five-reel Metro feature, in which Howard Estabrook is being starred, is almost completed; the final scenes are being made up at the big Dyreda studio on Sixty-first street, New York, and J. Searle Dawley is working night and day to finish by May 10, in time to allow Mr. Estabrook to fill a two weeks' vaudeville engagement. Immediately following, he will go on tour with the Lambs' All-Star Gambol, beginning May 29 at the Metropolitan Opera House.

"JUST OUT OF COLLEGE," BY FROHMAN.

The Frohman Amusement Corporation has started on its new feature, "Just Out of College." Eugene O'Brien, now playing in "The Celebrated Case," Jack Boynton Sherrill, who was in "The Builder of Bridges," Wright Kramer, late of "Androcles and the Lion," Ben Hendricks, Marie Edith Wells and Kate Jepson have been cast for this breezy, bright comedy. Mark Swan wrote the scenario, and George Ade himself will edit the titles.

George W. Howard

ANOTHER evidence of the thoroughly up-to-date policy of Knickerbocker Star Features in securing the best talent available, is seen in their closing a contract with George W. Howard. Considering the country-wide reputation of Mr. Howard as a leading man under the best managements and with the greatest stars that have played on the American stage in the past few years, Knickerbocker Star Features feel warranted in promising superior work on the part of their new leading man.

George W. Howard.

Mr. Howard is a man of strong temperamental nature, warmhearted, clear minded, with a strong sympathetic nature and a personality with force and character, all of which have been seen in the many difficult parts he has assumed during his very successful career.

The record of Mr. Howard includes nine years with Charles Frohman's Empire Stock Company. In all, he played under Charles Frohman's management 12 years and was the leading man with all of Frohman stars during that period. As Capt. Jinks, he played three years with Ethel Barrymore. Under Henry B. Harris, Mr. Howard played lead in Charles Kline's play, "Daughters of Men." He was leading man in "Du Barry" with Mrs. Leslie Carter, playing the difficult role of "Cosse." Other important engagements followed with A. H. Woods and W. A. Brady.

In the first three-reel feature of Knickerbocker Star Features "The Kick Out," Mr. Howard will play the difficult role of the newspaper man, a part calling for the display of wit, wisdom and varied emotions as he endeavors to resurrect an old newspaper and make it the means of a city's salvation. During the struggle, which involves large political issues, the newspaper man also is struggling for the hand of the Mayor's daughter, and in this struggle is given an opportunity for the display of the strongest types of character.

In his first work before the camera, Mr. Howard is coming well up to the expectations of the company, and under the direction of Robert T. Thornby, the director of Knickerbocker Star Features, the company anticipates the best possible work.

These feature dramas will be released on alternate Wednesdays on the General Film Company's program.

KRITERION IN RECEIVER'S HANDS.

Pending the consummation of plans already under way for the reorganization of the Kriterion Film Corporation with the introduction of fresh capital, the affairs of the corporation have been placed in the hands of a receiver appointed by the United States District Court, with the usual powers to continue the business and borrow the necessary funds.

Upon the application of several film manufacturers, who are creditors of the Kriterion Film Corporation, Judge Mayer appointed Samuel Strasbourger receiver of the property under a bond of $5,000. The receiver will assume all contracts entered into by the corporation and continue the releases constituting the so-called Kriterion Programme.

The defendant corporation was formed last November with an authorized capitalization of $1,100,000 and succeeded the Mica Film Company. The assets are said to be $200,000.

BLISS MILFORD WITH PATHE.

Bliss Milford, the magnetic young film star, was first discovered by Elsie Janis, who found her in a small western town, and, seeing in her a girl of exceptional intelligence and rare personal charm, brought her to Broadway for "The Candy Shop." Miss Milford followed in the footsteps of her winsome "godmother," and now, after leaving the footlights for the films, and playing leads in many big feature pictures with Edison, she will be seen in the principal role in the forthcoming Pathe feature production, "The Beloved Vagabond," playing opposite Edwin Arden, better known to film patrons as Wu Fang, in the "Exploits of Elaine."

Reviews of Current Productions

"The Purple Iris"

Princess Hassan Appears in First Picture in the "Under the Crescent" Series, Produced by Universal.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

"THE PURPLE IRIS" is the first of a series of two-reel pictures to be released by the Universal Company in a series called "Under the Crescent." The stories are woven around the personality, and, so it is asserted, actual incidents in the life of Princess Hassan, who is credited with all sorts of odd experiences while living in Egypt. This same Princess Hassan, otherwise Ola Humphrey, is the featured player, assisted by Edward Sloman, William Dowlan, Carmen Scene from "The Purple Iris" (Universal).

Phillips, Helen Wright and many others under the direction of Burton King.

The initial production, on June 1, will be followed at weekly intervals by "The Cage of the Golden Bars," "The Shadow of the Pyramids," "For the Honor of a Woman," "In the Name of the King" and "The Crown of Death," all complete stories, yet designed to fulfill the same purpose—a photoplay depiction of the romance, the mystery and the splendor of Egyptian court life.

In "The Purple Iris" there is plenty of splendor in the settings, and at times a disconcerting amount of mystery in the plot that may prove too much for an audience anxious to grasp the significance of many emotional demonstrations, all inspired by a charming prince. He falls in love with a beautiful American actress, although his royal mother is irrevocably set upon his marrying Princess Narde. Then there is still another young woman who believes that she has very definite claims upon the prince. Under the circumstances he finds a custom of his country, whereby the faces of the women are covered by veils, to be most convenient. A similarity in attire and a veil that conceals the features, enables him to marry the American girl while those attending the midnight ceremony believe the bride to be Princess Narde.

The picture is lavishly staged and rather uncommon in its material. With a few more sub-titles to make the purpose of the action clearer, it should be a popular attraction. Princess Hassan is an excellent type for pictures, dark, handsome with intelligent and expressive features.

Marguerite Loveridge May Change Name.

Marguerite Loveridge, who is now connected with the Griffith forces in Los Angeles, is at present considering a very vital question. It has been suggested that she discard the name of Loveridge and resume her own name of Marsh, it being well known that she is the sister of the famous Griffith star Mae Marsh. The main objection raised by Miss Loveridge is the fear that by changing her name at this late date she would lose all the prestige that she has attained under the old name, and on the other hand she feels that she would be encroaching on the laurels won by her sister Mae if she now adopted the name of Marsh. However, much pressure is being brought to bear, so if in the near future you should see Marguerite Marsh billed instead of Marguerite Loveridge you will know that she has succumbed to the demand.

"The Shooting of Dan McGrew"

Robert W. Service's Poem Inspires Five-Part Drama to be Released by Metro Pictures Corporation.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

IN the picturization of "The Shooting of Dan McGrew," the Popular Plays and Players have a production that at its best is excellent and at all times is more than passable. With Edmund Breese in the part of "the man from the creeks," called Jim Maxwell in the photoplay, Director Herbert Blache had an actor of much power to head a company which was wisely chosen throughout, presenting Katheryn Adams, Audrine Stark, Betty Riggs, Wallace Stopp and William A. Morse in the more important characters. The excellent points of the production are found in the powerful acting of Mr. Breese, in the grip of the story at climactic moments and in a wealth of beautiful snow scenes, for the most part suggestive of the Alaskan wilds in which the action is supposed to transpire. The picture is so good in the main that a few unconvincing turns in the development of the plot are the more to be regretted. It just misses being a notably impressive interpretation of Robert W. Service's stirring verses.

The spirit of the poem is perfectly caught in the prologue laid in the Malamute saloon:

> When out of the night, which was fifty below
> And into the din and the glare
> There stumbled a miner fresh from the creeks
> Dog-tired and loaded for bear.

As each verse is thrown on the screen the conditions described in the poet's lines are faithfully depicted in scenes starting with the meeting of Maxwell and the woman, who was his wife before she became the companion of Dangerous Dan McGrew. The prologue is distinguished by accuracy in the details of characterization and settings and its power is appreciably increased by the verses, serving the needs of sub-titles.

The transition from poetry to prose is somewhat sharp when the action shifts back to earlier years and events prior to the dramatic meeting are pictured. Naturally, the original story has been altered and amplified, somewhat, to meet the requirements of a five-reel photoplay; but for the most part the alterations are in good taste. And the happy ending we still have with us; for Mrs. Service's line, "And two men lay stiff and stark" has been modified. Maxwell is allowed to recover and all save Dangerous Dan McGrew are started on the orthodox journey to a happier life in a more salubrious clime.

Of the many finely contrived scenes, one calls for particular comment. To all appearances a horse with two riders leaps from a cliff into swift rapids, and then all three struggle through the icy water to the shore. If there is any deception in this scene it is very well concealed.

"Graustark" Breaks Record.

Word comes from C. A. Meade, manager of the Dallas office of the V. L. S. E., Inc., that "Graustark," the six-reel Essanay feature, has broken all records at the big Hippodrome theater in Waco, Tex.

"The Heart of Cerise"

Pauline Bush Gives Varied Performance in Three-Part Universal Drama Adapted from "The Spitfire."

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

THAT Pauline Bush is not limited to the depiction of sombre characters is shown conclusively enough in this three-part drama, adapted from "The Spitfire." For a change, and it is a change, Miss Bush plays a woman blessed with high spirits and something of the joy of life, combined, in this instance, with a quite ungovernable temper. Through about half the picture, Cerise is an astonishingly animated creature, an actress liable to smash the bric-a-brac without warning; but charming even in her tantrums, Miss Bush possesses the requisite vivacity and is, of course, perfectly at home in the darker passages of the drama that brings several chapters of misfortune for the actress.

Scene from "The Heart of Cerise" (Universal).

The picture is French in its characterizations and atmosphere and Director Joseph DeGrasse is fortunate in gaining the requisite effects in staging. The opening is appropriate with its introduction of Cerise and her company in a performance of "Camille." These early scenes, showing Cerise in a temper, soon give place to a pretty romance that has every promise of happiness up to the eve of the wedding. It is on this eventful night that Cerise goes to a hotel for her first glass of champagne. Her escort proves to be a good deal of a cad. Left alone in the street, the girl loses her way, falls ill and is given shelter by kindly nuns. But when she returns to her company a week later, her sweetheart refuses to credit the story and she is turned away before he finds a note testifying to the truth of her statements.

The third reel follows the actress through various persecutions and introduces a strongly acted trial scene prior to the reunion with her sweetheart. Mollie Elliott Sewall constructed a plausible scenario, introducing a number of dramatic climaxes and Director DeGrasse made a first rate copy of French buildings without leaving his California studio. Mr. DeGrasse acts an important role himself and has competent players to direct, in William Clifford, Henry Nelson, Agnes Vernon and Ray Gallagher.

United "Character" Man Writes Book.

Will Sheerer, Ideal character lead and master of make-up, will shortly have ready for the press his second book on the art of handling grease paint and wigs to the best advantage. Mr. Sheerer has made a profound study of make-up in its entirety for many years and in the profession is regarded as an authority on the subject. His collection of wigs, character clothes, and in fact everything which enters into the depiction of types, is looked upon as one of the most complete in the country.

Strong Cast in "The Island of Regeneration."

The second Vitagraph "Blue Ribbon" feature on the V. L. S. E. program to be released May 17, will be "The Island of Regeneration."

In this feature, the "big four" are presenting one of the strongest as well as one of the most subtle plays ever produced in motion pictures.

Miss Edith Storey, S. Rankin Drew, and Antonio Moreno, are in the leading roles, supported by a strong cast.

Buck Massie at Universal City.

H. L. Massie, known as "Buck" Massie among the showmen of the country, with whom he has traveled for twenty years, has left the road and is now in the employ of the Universal Company at Universal City. Among other duties Massie is taking care of the notable visitors to the "capital of filmland." He has a warm personality and is making hosts of friends for the Universal Company.

Edna Maison in De Grasse Company.

Miss Pauline Bush, who was married to Allan Dwan on April 24, will not return to the Universal Company for several weeks. In the meantime Miss Edna Maison will take the place of Director Joseph De Grasse's leading woman and opposite her will play Ray Gallagher in a two-reel western story entitled, "Oh, Man's Evil."

Gretchen Lederer Again Universalite.

Miss Gretchen Lederer is once more a member of the Universal forces, having come back to the company at its West Coast Studios during the past week. This charming actress, who will play heavy leads, as heretofore, probably will be attached to Frank Lloyd's Laemmle Company.

"Prejudice"

A Three-Reel Offering With a Big, Good Purpose—Shows How the Hypocritical Christianity of Deacons Tries to Block Pastor's Work and Fails (Kalem).

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THIS offering, a three-reel Kalem picture, "Prejudice," will excite either great admiration or distate. It is the reviewer's duty to say which and to state his reasons. I believe the picture is going to make a decided "hit" in any place where it is given a chance. The public must be made ready for it by the right kind of publicity. Where it is "put on" right, it will surely go well. It is a preachment against hypocrisy and it slams the old hard-shell kind of religion that everybody who is alive hates, and slams it hard. This is the big thing about the picture and it must be brought out so that the people will know what to expect. It not only shows what is the matter with the church, but it shows how the church, to be healthy, should be run. It takes account of the humanity of the people in the audience and shows that the church should be run for the people in the church and not for the deacons and elders alone. Where this is being done the church is alive; where the country churches are being run for the deacons and elders alone, they are going to pot. That is why I think the picture (considering the quality of interest its incidents excite) is destined to make a stir in the community where it is ably exhibited.

There is a love story in it, but it is not the minister's love story; it is slight and of secondary interest; is employed to illustrate personally the effect in the community of the minister's methods. These methods are the big interest and the picture is kept active and pertinent by their effect as shown on many other characters, village types, in which the offering is most rich. They are fine. Among these which, after the minister, will come closest to the audience is the hard deacon's young son who is sent out to cut a switch because he was caught playing ball on the Sabbath. At one point, the picture leaves the ordinary level of typical, homely doings to get a "punch." This incident is a picturization of a newspaper account and shows us the good people of the village stoning a man whom they suspect is a leper, a lurid account of whose escape was read by them in the morning paper. It is fear of the contagion that makes them do this fiendish thing and the incident is used to contrast the minister's humanity with theirs. It is not a pleasant incident.

Tom Moore, the picture's producer, plays the leading role. The old deacon, his chief opponent in the good work of saving souls, is played by Richard Lyle. The deacon's daughter, heroine of the picture's love story, is taken by Marguerite Courtot and Robert Ellis plays the hero of this as the village doctor. Herbert Conley plays the deacon's son and does splendid work, human and likable. But nearly every player in it is thoroughly acceptable. The author is Harry O. Hoyt.

Griffith Pictures Re-Issued

Subjects Selected by the Biograph Company Are Models of Single-Reel Photoplay Development.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

THE re-issue of a number of Biograph pictures produced by D. W. Griffith in 1912-13 is a response to many requests from exhibitors. It is one of the most interesting moves made by any manufacturer in a long while, for, talk about great advances notwithstanding, the fact remains that, tucked away on the shelves of the Biograph vaults, are negatives beside which the customary output of to-day looks tawdry and inartistic.

In the years that Mr. Griffith made the subjects chosen for re-issue, the best energies of producers were concentrated on single-reel pictures. The market was so constituted that time and money might be invested in brief photoplays with a reasonable assurance of a profitable return. Most of these old Biographs if produced to-day would be extended into multiple reel features and liberally advertised, and they would be worth it.

To all, save newcomers in the field, these titles will recall pleasant memories: "The Battle," "Love in an Apartment Hotel," "Fighting Blood," "The Sands of Dee," "A Timely Interception" and "Broken Ways," to be released in the order given, beginning June 11. Each week will bring a new-old Biograph until the best of the Griffith pictures have been revived. The selection is being made from a stock of something over 300.

A recent showing of the first six releases suggests comparisons. Photographically, the pictures are flawless. No exhibitor need fear that because the subjects were made a few years ago they are in any way inferior to work of the present. In sharpness of detail, lighting and atmospheric effects, scenes in "The Battle," a Civil War drama, are quite on a par with similar spectacles in "The Birth of a Nation." Hundreds of men were used and in much the same way adopted in the more famous production of later date. "Fighting Blood" is equally notable in its masterly treatment of a pioneer story presenting an attack by Indians and a fierce encounter almost terminating in a massacre. This is said to be the first production introducing a long distance panorama of Indian warriors circling a besieged cabin, an effective scene that since then has been imitated times without number.

The casts in all of these pictures are significant in emphasizing the rapidity with which fame and fortune have been acquired in a few short years. Actors and actresses who now are receiving large salaries as directors or stars were playing "bits" under Mr. Griffith's direction and their reputations, in most cases, had not spread beyond the Biograph studio. If the same people were assembled in one company now, it would be an all-star cast with a vengeance and the pay-roll would be unpleasant reading for the producer.

A fair sample of an old Biograph cast is that in "Love in an Apartment Hotel," acted by Mae Marsh, Edward Dillon, Blanche Sweet, Henry Walthall, Walter Miller, Jack Dillon, Scene from "The Battle" (Biograph).

Robert Harron, Harry Carey and a few others, now celebrated, who at that time were beginning as "supers." Then there is "A Timely Interception," with W. Chrystie Miller, Lillian Gish, Robert Harron, Lionel Barrymore, Joseph McDermott and William J. Butler, or "The Sands of Dee," Mae Marsh's first important picture, by the way, in which she was assisted by Edwin August, Charles H. Mailes, Claire McDowell, Mr. Miller and Mr. Harron.

But these productions are by no means dependent upon the sentimental interest aroused by the first appearances of actors who have since become famous. The stories come pretty near to being models of photoplay development, finely artistic in their presentation and carrying an impression of completeness all too seldom attained in single reel pictures.

"The Test"

Three-Reel Edison Feature by Lee Arthur, Visualized by James W. Castle.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

LEE ARTHUR dares picture a phase of life very much according to the way we live it, instead of offering a Laura Jean Libby arrangement for the edification of school girls in curl papers. "The Test" is a man's story about men with the inevitable love interest as a minor issue. Not to please a young lady, but to demonstrate that his inherent honesty is unaffected by one breach of confidence, a young attorney, impersonated by Herbert Prior, signs a confession of his crime, that of stealing a few hundred dollars from his employer to help a friend in dire need, and he agrees to return every dollar within a specified time.

Interested in his struggle is his employer's niece, and she proves to be his good angel at every stage of it, the direct cause of his ultimate success. We are all fond of woman thus idealized, and we know that her intelligence, when in league with her warm-hearted sympathy for the erring, has been the making of many a successful man, but she is so very, very good in this story that she barely escapes being superhuman. Opposed to her, and to the young lawyer's redemption is the black-hearted stage villain, that ancient incarnation of evil who used to make the gallery gods boil with suppressed indignation. This relic of melodrama is without a redeeming trait—he is always where he should not be, and he hounds the hero to the very last. Mr. Arthur can certainly do better than that—if we are to picture contemporaneous life as it is, let us, at the same time picture human nature as it is, a composite rather than a characteristic.

After the erring young lawyer's redemption, his employer, supposedly a man of high intelligence, merely tears up the incriminating confession and throws the fragments in a scrap basket, instead of destroying them completely. At the exact moment that he does this stupid thing, the villain is on hand and sees it all through a keyhole. He is then given access to the private office that he may pick up these scraps and paste them together for future villainy. He now has the "papes," all this in spite of the fact that the maker of a written promise has it returned to him on redemption in plain, ordinary, everyday life.

The two most threadbare devices used by amateurs in motion-picture scenarios are those of the dropped letter of incriminating purport and the dying confession of the villain when the resourceless playwright in embryo can find no other means of straightening out his entanglement. Barring the villain incarnate and his inevitable dropped "papes," "The Test" contains the material of a live and plausible story. The hero wins his first case in court and rises in poularity until he contests the election for office of District Attorney with a live incumbent and a rival for the hand of the girl.

The villain is about to destroy all his chances, when the girl, the one who has helped him from the outset, secures one scrap of the incriminating document, that bearing his signature, and all ends well. Virtue is triumphant and vice defeated according to the good old school. The play is well handled and the acting of Herbert Prior, Charles Sutton, John Sturgeon and Frank McGlynn is in highly intelligent response to all the opportunities offered.

Ed. Lincoln, the former Vitagraph star, and principal in "The Littlest Rebel," has branched out on an independent venture, which from present indications has all the ear-marks of success. He has surrounded himself with a capable company, and already is happily engaged producing his own pictures, which will bear the trade name of "The Lincoln Players."

"When It Strikes Home"

First Production of Charles K. Harris Is Released by World Film Corporation in Five Reels.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

PARTICULAR interest attaches to this drama in that it is the initial offering of the Charles K. Harris Feature Film Corporation and marks Mr. Harris's debut as a successful photoplay author. The writer of innumerable popular songs has adapted his gifts—the gifts of a born story teller with a keen eye for human interest—to the new medium with remarkable readiness. Especially in the opening reels, "When It Strikes Home," is natural, convincing drama with few exag-gerations to detract from its effect. After that the plot becomes more involved and reveals ingenuity in working up a plausible conclusion, rather than the sincerity which characterizes early passages.

The story at its best is quite typically a page from the life of Broadway as revealed in occasional newspaper accounts of the escapades of young millionaires, given to spending their time and their fathers' money on the entertainment of women addicted to wine suppers. Dick Hartley is engaged to marry a perfectly respectable girl; but at the end of a convivial evening he forgets all about that and, tempted by his friends, foolishly weds an actress for whom he has taken a sudden fancy. Because he is under age the marriage is annulled without much difficulty and Hartley marries the young woman in his own social circle. This ends the first chapter in Mr. Harris's story, and really the best chapter, although there is plenty of melodramatic excitement and no little suspense in what follows.

Grace Washburn, despite a tendency to overact, does reasonably well in her interpretation of the actress, who becomes a self-sacrificing mother and eventually a trained nurse that she may be near her son when he is a physician in a hospital. Edwin August plays Hartley with varying success. His chief handicap is an inability to look like a youth under twenty-one. Muriel Ostriche, appearing in the last two reels, is charming, as usual, and, of course, becomes a real asset to the picture. Director Perry N. Vekroff supplied a first rate production in which there are many carefully staged and strongly acted scenes.

"Diamond From the Sky" Has Fox Hunt.

Real huntsmen after a real fox will be seen in a forthcoming release of "The Diamond From the Sky" and it is a sensational thrill the scene gives. The best riders of the "Flying A" studios were impressed into service to make the hunt look like the old fashioned meets in Virginia.

Then it was that one of the cowboys, doubling as a Virginia gentleman, suggested that a genuine honest-to-goodness fox hunt would be a big improvement over the aniseed chase. So a posse started up in the hills and caught Mr. Fox.

Then the entire party rode out to Montecito where the meet was the spacious grounds of the country club. A pack of real hounds was shipped to Santa Barbara from Virginia and when they were released and sent in full cry after Mr. Fox the field of riders made a picture seldom equalled.

There were jumps—water, turf and trees—and of course some spills. It would not be a real meet without some fractious animal demonstrating his strength to his rider. Two spills are very amusing although for an instant each looks as though the rider were in great danger. It affords a stirring moment in the chapter and is a sure enough red blooded scene.

United Civil War Drama Features George Larkin.

United exhibitors have something "coming to them" when the two-part western subject, "Stepping Westward," is released on Monday, June 7. Another scenario creation from the fertile and artistic imagination of the Rev. Clarence J. Harris, this story has a broad human appeal. The leading roles, in the hands of Mabel Van Buren and George Larkin, are characterized by splendid work on the parts of both these capable Ideal performers. The story runs from the Civil War up to the days of the present time and the contrasting periods and necessary atmosphere are cleverly suggested.

"The Esterbrook Case"

An Exceptionally Fine Vitagraph Mystery Melodrama in Three Reels.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

WITH an exceptionally fine cast, tasteful and appropriate settings, and admirable treatment, "The Esterbrook Case" enjoys an additional advantage in structure—it is a genuine photodrama and not a theatrical corpse reviver. It is to be taken for granted that the author, Ouida Bergere, is responsible for the architectural design, or of working in harmony of spirit with director Lorimer Johnston, for the complete result is a pictured story of carefully conserved suspense, one which holds close attention until the crime mystery is solved. The tension is not relaxed by the introduction of a new line of action at a critical period—to the contrary—the audience is made to feel that there is no infirmity of purpose—suspense is increased from scene to scene until the new line unites with the old and the whole narrative moves swiftly to its pathetic and logical conclusion. Such flawless work is very rare.

The entire initial action takes place in one evening during the entertainment of a week's end party. Rogers Lytton, as a social crook, becomes involved in a quarrel with the fiance of a beautiful young debutante, and the outcome is a violent physical struggle between the two men. There is bad blood between them when they retire to their respective bed chambers. The social crook fumes and frets in his dressing gown, going out on a portico for air and finally seating himself near the window. The hot-blooded young fiance is seen attempting to effect an entrance to the other's room, a weapon in his hand. A few moments later the crook's servant finds his master dead in the chair by the window, stabbed with a dagger which formed part of a collection in the young fiance's room adjoining. On this overwhelming evidence the young man is accused of deliberate murder, and he is condemned to death during an interval not shown. At the expiration of that interval, he is about to be executed, when a new line of action leads skilfully up to the old one to unite with it in high tension.

In recognition that melodrama forms a legitimate and interesting part of any varied program, not because of admiration for that class of play, I extend high praise to "The Esterbrook Case" because of its many merits. Skill in conception and construction, imagination and taste in treatment, intelligence and personality in interpretation, all these are big factors of success. Rogers Lytton, Julia Swayne Gordon and Cissy Fitzgerald respond to their opportunities in a way that leaves nothing to be desired, though that is expected of such experienced artists. Garry McGarry and Zena Keefe are revelations, and delightful ones at that. Their last scene might easily have been weakened, but they rose to its dignity.

To the author and to the director may easily go the highest commendation for their consistent, plausible and logical presentation of a difficult subject. The story is original, and the treatment of a kind that is bound to win respect for the new art. They and the entire cast have done something worth while in elevating "The Esterbrook Case" to a place among the topnotchers of its class.

"Houses of Glass."

No. 6 of the "Who Pays?" Series, Which Proves to Be Interesting and of Moral Import.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

WITH each number of this series of dramas there seems to be a marked improvement, not so much in the story as in its development. Any crudeness that may have been evident in the earlier numbers, has entirely disappeared, and the "Who Pays?" series has now developed into the sanely entertaining sort of film as well as being possessed of an element of moral enlightenment. It appears on the program of the Pathe Exchange in strong comparison to the thrilling "Exploits of Elaine," each holding to its own particular kind, and each striking an entirely different chord in the human mind. The one touches the adventurous side of human nature, while the other stirs the philosophical impulse.

Perhaps no young woman could have been chosen whose personality would have fitted so well into this particular sort of drama as that of Ruth Roland, who combines all the qualities of beauty, health, a strong vitality and gentle winsomeness. The drama in question gives her ample opportunity for the display of her ability as an actress, and is human in every particular. The idea of the story, as is implied in the title, covers the folly of judging too quickly of others, while they at the same time are scanning our deeds of similar nature with the same critical eye with which we are scanning theirs. The story is based on an unpleasant situation which arises out of the most trivial affair between two young married couples. The idle gossip has of course much to do with stirring up ungrounded jealousies. The story is not a particularly strong one, but has been clothed in attractive garments, and will be found very entertaining, and in many instances useful.

"The White Terror."

Impressive Four-Reel Production Made by the Universal in Conjunction with the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE purport of this film is a distinct drive at the dope-laden patent medicines that wheedle what the picture terms "blood money" from unsuspecting and anxious-to-be-well tuberculosis victims, and which in place of effecting the cure represented, hurries the consumer to an earlier grave.

Philip P. Jacobs, assistant secretary of the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis, has been largely instrumental in the preparation of the film, which has been staged by Stuart Paton. The film is an impressive one and brings home to the spectator conditions which exist and of which we are apt to be forgetful, unsanitary conditions in the manufactories, and the methods through which individuals are overworked, and thereby tempted to have recourse to stimulants and injurious drugs.

The story of the film treats of a successful attempt to expose the wrongs perpetrated through the placing of patent medicines warranted to cure tuberculosis on the market. One of the interesting points of the picture is the war waged between the press and the manufacturer. An additional human interest element has been added by having the son of the idle rich who is in love with the daughter of the manufacturer, on her suggestion that he seek to make life profitable by attempting the doing of something worth while, buy out the newspaper which is attacking the manufacture of tuberculosis medicine, on the strength of some startling information he has received concerning the horrors of the factories where the medicine is made. The climax of the story is reached after the accomplice of the manufacturer has had the newspaper office blown up, no one, however, being especially injured, but the perpetrator of the deed, who is afterward found dead amid the debris. The story ends happily for the lovers, and also leaves the impression of its main issue having been satisfactorily lodged in the mind of the spectator.

"Pro Patria."

Five-Part Great Northern Release Presents Battle Scenes in a Graphic Fashion.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

NO DOUBT this five-part Great Northern war drama will be welcomed by exhibitors on the watch for pictures reflecting to some degree the tragedies in Europe. From first to last it is a military picture presenting a succession of maneuvers culminating in battles depicted with sufficient graphicness. It probably is a fact that scenes of wounded and dead, which a few months ago might have been considered overgruesome, nowadays will be taken as a matter of course, so accustomed has the public become to horrors. "Pro Patria" is not without scenes of carnage that will stand comparison with others known to be real. Much the same holds true of the improvised hospitals with their rows of wounded soldiers stretched on cots. They might have been photographed in France or Germany, last week.

Scene from "Pro Patria" (Great Northern).

The story in this production follows the orthodox lines for a war drama, with a young woman whose sweetheart is an officer in one army while her father and brother are in the opposing force. The plot development may or may not, be followed with interest, according to the sophistication of the spectator and the readiness with which convenient relationships and fortuitous happenings are credited. But it is quite possible that one may dismiss the story as being of little moment, yet respond to the military spectacles, for the most part strongly presented. Clear photography and appropriate locations are among the production's assets. The acting, kept in a highly emotional key throughout is good of its kind.

"The Law of Nature"

First Issue of the New Smallwood Brand Features Edwin August and Iva Shepard.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

Under the name of "Pyramid" appears the new brand of films on the program of the United Film Service. Pyramid films have, by the way, materialized in the natural evolution of things at the Smallwood studios, and promise to give the public pictures that are well made and interesting, if we may judge from the initial offering.

Edwin August appearing for the first time in Smallwood productions plays opposite Iva Shepard in "The Law of Nature," a two-reel picture which, although handling an exceedingly delicate subject, does not fail to make a distinct impression. With the exception of the sub-titles, which are to be subjected to a modifying process we understand, the problem of race suicide and its unhappy consequences, has been presented, not too aggressively to be effective, but in a clear and concise manner. The production has been exceedingly well made, and is able to tell its story with very few and carefully worded sub-titles.

Scene from "The Law of Nature" (Pyramid).

There has been a successful effort made to set the picture artistically; and doubtless some of the black and white sets, which are most effective, will attract much admiration. Another point about the picture that is noticable is that it is well-dressed; or, rather, its players are tastefully attired. There are also inconsistencies, for it is to be questioned why the second wife (Ruth Blair) walks about her new home with her marriage veil and orange blossoms still a part of her attire, while there is no evidence that the wedding has only just taken place. This seems rather too obvious a manner of stamping the fact that the two have been joined in the bonds of matrimony. Another inconsistency appears where the first wife of the man, and now the wife, or mistress, we are not sure, which, of another and villainous type, about to die in childbirth, arises from her bed while her nurse is out of the room, takes her baby and walks to the house of her former husband, places her child in his automobile outside of the door, and returns to her home, dropping dead on the bed.

These are probably the only faults that could be found with the direction of the picture, which must be considered an unusually impressive production.

Myrtle Stedman Gets Valuable Ring.

That the power of the film is quite as mighty as the power of the press in bringing the peoples of the earth into heartier unity and concord is the rather unanswerable conclusion to be derived from the costly ring, encrusted with a small fortune in gems, which has just been received from an admirer in far New Zealand by the beautiful Morosco-Bosworth star—Myrtle Stedman.

This priceless example of the jeweler's and goldsmith's art is all the greater tribute coming as it does from a wealthy woman in the Antipodes whom Myrtle Stedman had never known nor seen, and whom, as the generous donor rather wistfully suggested, in all probability she never will.

The ring is a rare example of the finest hand carving. It is fashioned in a perfect likeness of a turtle, much the shape and fully the size of an almond. The shell is a finely chased design in rich old gold. Its rim is studded with twenty diamonds, a large sapphire is set in the middle of the back, and two smaller sapphires take the place of the two eyes in the head. Aside from the great value of the gems, as an example of art work the ring is a masterpiece. It was on exhibition recently in the window of a Los Angeles jeweler and attracted large crowds. Myrtle Stedman is initiating the ring as a professional talisman of good luck in the new Morosco-Bosworth production, "Kilmeny" a spectacular story of a gypsy belle.

"Fanchon, the Cricket"

A Masterly Film Version of the Old Drama with Mary Pickford in the Title Part.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

CAREFULLY weighing my words and trying to use them with a conscience I find that any term other than perfection will be inadequate in appraising the merits and the artistic value of this feature. It simply disarms criticism. It is a thing to be enjoyed to the utmost. It captivates and fascinates and before we know it we are beguiled into happiness.

The charm of the cricket has made its appeal to the poets from the days of Anacreon, but there was never a sweeter cricket than Fanchon and let me hasten to add there never was a Fanchon like Mary Pickford. Yes, I know that the greatest of the French and the English and the American stars have attempted and have successfully rendered Fanchon, but I stick to my belief that none ever surpassed and few approached the work of Mary Pickford. Of course the part suited her uncommonly well; the chords of rogueishness, of tenderness, of awakening love are familiar to her, but her art in this feature, it seems to me, is more dainty and delicate than ever, she is merged into her part as if her soul had been poured into the mould, the characterization is charmingly complete in every detail and the performance as a whole leaves a host of pleasant sensations and memories.

"Merry Cricket
Ever wicked
Art so little black and fine
Kissed by th' yellow moonshine
Flies dancing in the sun
Cricket's chirping full of fun."

Next to the incomparable performance of Miss Pickford and to the capable and well selected cast, the atmosphere and the direction of the play call for unqualified commendation. The original foundation of the film-play was the sweet tale of George Sand. This prolific writer with her keen sense for the value of color and atmosphere inspired the adapter with her own particular talents. Every thing is there even to the rude musicians that ushered in the feast of St. Andoche and to the dances on the green around the Maypole. The settings of every scene—I make no exception—will tempt any painter if only the screen would hold them long enough. The interior of old Fadet's hovel and the exterior as well may serve as illustrations of my meaning. There is an even excellence throughout that makes detailed appreciation difficult.

The direction and the upbuilding of each scene shows skill of a most uncommon order. I would be willing to take out every title. There are not many titles, but the picture runs so naturally, the development of what plot there is comes with the convincing simplicity of a fairy-tale. An art which can produce such films is "fated never to die." We must remember that color and voice played an integral part of the drama as we saw it years ago and here the director had neither color nor voice to depend on in spite of which he has given us a visualization of which the conventional stage is quite incapable. He must have resolved the story into its simplest elements as he found it in the original form rather than in the drama. Clean, simple, beautiful, endowed with infinite charm this feature deserves to rank at the very top.

Scene from "Fanchon, the Cricket" (Famous Players).

There is an incidental lesson, too, for the ambitious producer. This story was open to all on even terms, it only required proper handling. There is much more in George Sand's abundant materials and in literature generally. No other keys than a little knowledge and a little power of selection are needed to unlock this treasure house at any time and at any door.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"ALIAS HOLLAND JINNY" (United-Lariat).

One of the most gripping and well presented two part photo dramas which have appeared on the United Program will be the release of May 22, "Alias Holland Jinny" in which the excellent directorship of William V. Mong, the new assistant director, scenario editor and leading actor of the Lariat Company at Colorado Springs is shown to good advantage. Mr. Mong has written a play with a peculiar "punch" to it which now thrills with its daring and again tightens the throat with its human touches. The story is that of a happy, fun loving girl, a minister's daughter, who is led into the wrong path by the profligate son of a railroad president and disappears, leaving the impression that she has commited suicide behind her, rather than face her disgrace and her father's sorrow. She is not dead, however, and the second scene sees her the proprietress of a gambling resort in a western town where she has hidden her identity under the name of "Holland Jinny." Reparation comes to her, in part, for her broken life, by the love of a good man for her and her child, and the end of the drama sees her headed for the hills with her daughter and her new husband. Mr. Mong has spared nothing to produce an extraordinary picture. The opening scenes are exceptionally well staged, set as they are in the home of the railroad magnate and at the country club. The photography is excellent, and Mr. Mong shows his ability as both an actor and a director in the excellent double exposures where he, as the miner, plays against himself, as the real road president's son, at a gaming table.

METRO SECURES TWO NEW DIRECTORS.

William J. Bauman and Lawrence B. McGill, two prominent motion picture directors, were this week added to the long list of Metro Pictures Corporation accessions and from now on will devote their time entirely to that company's productions.

McGill, formerly a noted stage director, first came into prominence with the French Eclair Company, with whom he stayed a year, after which he produced "Arizona" and "Checkers" for the All-Star Corporation and "The Greyhound" for the Life Photo Film Corporation. McGill, for the past several years, has been with the Mutual Film Corporation and severed his connections there only last week to join the Metro staff. McGill is now busily engaged reading plays, novels and scripts and will shortly begin active operations with the Broadway stars under the Metro banner.

William J. Bauman, whose screen work was as Shylock in Thanhouser's production of "The Merchant of Venice" has been with Thanhouser, K. B., Vitagraph and American, and produced such noted features as "Ghosts," "The Yellow Streak," "White Feathers," and "The Lure of the Violin." Bauman will devote himself entirely to the productions of the Quality Pictures Corporation in which Francis X. Bushman will star, supported by Marguerite Snow and special Metro casts. Bauman leaves for Los Angeles Monday in company with Miss Snow, the other players engaged by General Manager Fred J. Balshofer. Mr. McGill will locate in New York at one of the Metro studios.

FRANK DANIELS IN "CROOKY SCRUGGS."

Frank Daniels, who will make his initial appearance in motion pictures in the name part of the Vitagraph Company's four-part production, "Crooky Scruggs," has a profound respect for animated photography since he saw his picture run for the first time. Mr. Daniels had, what for a better term might be called, "stage fright," during the first few minutes of the unfolding of the story, and it is to this feeling the power and influence of motion pictures was brought forcibly home to him. As is customary at the Vitagraph Studios, the principals in "Crooky Scruggs" formed an audience that assembled in the exhibition room to "see themselves as others see them"—later. From the time he was seated until it was absolutely certain the picture would be a success and the comic opera king had registered a "hit" Mr. Daniels acted as he would have done and experienced the same feeling as if it were the initial production of one of his legitimate stage successes. In speaking of it later, he remarked, "If I had had lines to read I would have 'hit the ceiling hard,' for the first few scenes until I had gained control of my nerves."

"Crooky Scruggs" was produced under the direction of C. Jay Williams, with Harry Morey, Anna Laughlin, Edwina Robbins, Evart Overton and Charles Eldredge in support of Mr. Daniels and will be released as a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature.

"THE RACE LOVE" (Mutual).

"The Race Love" is an unusually interesting and picturesquely produced two-reel Indian drama by G. N. Terry. It is released in the Mutual program by Reliance and was filmed under the direction of Arthur Mackley. Joseph Henaberry, Bessie Buskirk and Ray Myers are featured, and Miss Buskirk's impersonation of the little Indian girl, White Dove, is of the kind sure to appeal to picture lovers in no small degree. The story gives her unusual opportunities to exploit her charming personality and she makes the best of them.

Walton, a young man of high ideals, is ordered by his physician to take a much needed rest from business. He leaves for the great Southwest, and while on a long tramp becomes lost and exhausted. He falls in a faint near a high rock from which two Indian lovers, White Dove and Grey Crag, have been accustomed to watching the sunset. Walton is found by them and taken to the Indian village, where he is nursed back to health, a return to normality which is viewed with suspicion by the Indian, Grey Crag, for between the white man and the sweet-faced Indian girl, White Dove, there has arisen a friendship which gradually strengthens.

At the settlement house Grey Crag is set on by a crowd of roughs and rescued by Walton. Deeply grateful, Grey Crag goes to the trysting place and there fights out with himself the old struggle between jealousy and gratitude. On his return he proposes to Walton that they each make their plea to the girl and abide by her decision. That evening around the camp fire both press their claims on her. By a series of pictures Walton's description of the claims of civilization are effectively illustrated. Then Grey Crag speaks, telling her she, the pride of the race, would become an outcast. The girl goes to him and Walton turns sorrowfully away.

"THE GOLDEN WEDDING" (Universal).

The two oldest actors in the Universal organization, "Daddy" Manley and "Mother" Benson, are featured in "The Golden Wedding," a Laemmle drama which is to be released on May 30. Mark Robbins and M. K. Wilson support their seniors in as charming a play as has ever been released by the Universal.

The play possesses a gripping heart interest and a wholesomeness which marks it from the usual run of photoplay releases. "Daddy" Manley is 84 years old and has been engaged in theatrical work for a round seventy years. He played with Booth, Barrett, Kean and Forrest in the old days and was one of the first of the veteran actors of the legitimate stage to enter moving picture work.

Scene from "The Golden Wedding (Laemmle).

"Mother" Benson, who is the oldest actress engaged in moving picture work, is universally beloved on the Pacific Coast. She has had a long experience both on the legitimate stage and in moving pictures. She makes an ideal leading woman for "Daddy" Manley.

The story of "The Golden Wedding" is by John Fleming Wilson, author of "The Master Key" serial. The play was produced by Frank Lloyd. It tells of an aged actor who, unable to obtain a position on the stage, accepts a job as doorkeeper, but tells his invalid wife that he is starring in a role he made famous years before. The star of the play, hearing the old actor repeat his own lines, gives him a chance to appear in his stead for the remainder of his stay in the city and "Daddy" delights his aged wife by playing his old role with the fervor of his youth.

MACK AND KEENAN WITH THOMAS H. INCE.

Willard Mack, author and actor, and Frank Keenan, according to the announcement of Thomas H. Ince, are to join his forces in Southern California immediately. They are slated to appear in forthcoming Mutual Masterpictures. Mr. Ince's "Big Six" now includes Mack, Keenan, H. B. Warner, Dustin Farnum, George Beban and William S. Hart. Julia Beane, the character actress, is also under contract.

Willard Mack is the author of "Kick In," in the New York production of which Jack Barrymore and Jane Grey played the principal roles. He also wrote "So Much for So Much," in which he and Marjorie Rambeau starred.

FRANK POWELL STRONG ON "SETTINGS."

Frank Powell, director of the Fox Film Corporation and whose production of Porter Emerson Browne's "A Fool There Was" has made him famous on two continents, is a firm believer in backgrounds for bringing out the strong points of his characters. In other words, he believes that the "setting" of an important scene is as vital in its way to the "punch" of the production as the acting and photography. Mr. Powell gave a notable demonstration of this in "A Fool There Was" and is particularly endowed for his pet hobby of picking "locations" by his experience with the Pathe Freres Company abroad, where he staged picture scenes in almost every part of Europe.

"THE ETERNAL SACRIFICE" (Lubin).

Nearing completion at the Lubin studios in Philadelphia is one of the most unique and vitally interesting feature pictures that has ever been made there. It is called "The Eternal Sacrifice" and was writen and is being produced by George W. Terwilliger.

Terwilliger has taken for his theme, in this remarkable play, the greatest thing in the world, mother love, and has not only succeeded in telling a most interesting story, but has carried the mother love instinct from the animal world up through various periods of human existence to modern days and he has driven home a lesson that should have a lasting influence wherever the film is shown.

GIRLS TO SELL RADIUM GOLD FIBRE SCREENS.

In connection with the extensive sales campaign which is being formulated under the direction of J. L. Kempner, treasurer of the Radium Gold Fibre Screen, Inc., a decided novelty is to be introduced in the moving picture industry. Mr. Kempner has marshaled a force of a half dozen comely and aggressive girls who are to call upon exhibitors throughout the country with the idea of interesting them in the company's product. Heretofore, it is claimed, the selling of moving picture accessories has been confined to men.

Mr. Kempner, while familiar with the moving picture business by reason of his important connections with Kinemacolor and other big ventures, is primarily a commercial sales manager, having achieved great success as a "business doctor" in commercial lines. After a careful study of the situation he has decided that projection screens are among those commodities which girls can sell as well, if not better, than men.

The girls who are soon to start out to tell the Radium Gold Fibre story are now being trained in the company's offices in the Candler Bldg., New York City, and in the big factory in Jersey. When they approach an exhibitor, according to the plan, they will be able to go right into the operating booth and run in an expert manner any projecting machine on the market in order that they may demonstrate the advantages of the product which they are attempting to sell.

NICHOLAS DUNAEW IN "MEINE VERLORNE."

"Meine Verlorne" (My Lost One), by Jesse Datus Smith, has been accepted for production by the Vitagraph Company and will be placed in immediate production under the direction of Harry Handworth, with the Russian character actor, Nicholas Dunaew, in the title role, supported by a specially selected cast. "My Lost One" was written especially for Mr. Dunaew, and his enactment of the principal character, Otto Von Geuder, an orchestra leader and composer, will give him an opportunity to present in pictures a characterization more in keeping with his ability than has heretofore fallen to his lot.

MARGUERITE CLARK AS "THE PRETTY SISTER OF JOSE!"

The next release of the Famous Players Film Co. presents the adorable little star, Marguerite Clark, in a five-part photo-adaptation of Frances Hodgson Burnett's picturesque romance of old Spain, and Maude Adams' former starring vehicle, "The Pretty Sister of Jose." This subject will be issued on the Paramount Program May 31.

The title role of this celebrated romance has been so devised as to exhibit to the fullest extent the many capabilities of the magnetic little star. It is that of a Spanish girl, full of life and buoyance, instinct with haughty Spanish pride and throbbing with the power of love, who comes for the first time to live amid the splendors and delights of Madrid.

It is not necessary to say that Miss Clark can portray this complex and bewitching web of emotion as no one else on the screen. She is admirable in her scenes with Sarita, dying for hopeless love of Sebastiano, and full of tenderness and awe-struck horror. She is more admirable when she first confronts the matador, and with shoulders thrown back and head aloft glares scorn and defiance of his power. Miss Clark denotes exceedingly well the struggle in the girl's heart to maintain a haughty demeanor toward the man she adores, while longing to yield to the impulses of her love. With her fascinating dark beauty and charming grace of form and motion, she is exceptionally adapted to the role of the exquisite Spanish belle of a thousand moods and whims. The scenic environment of California, where the subject was produced, lends itself faithfully to the atmosphere of the story, and its rapidly changing development, with its wealth of color and romance, has resulted in a thoroughly unusual and picturesque photoplay.

"STOLEN GOODS" (Lasky).

"Stolen Goods," which is to be released by the Lasky Feature Play Company through the Paramount Pictures Corporation on Monday, May 24, is the third photodrama in which Blanche Sweet has appeared for this company. It is stated that her two previous Lasky successes in the Lasky-Belasco production of "The Warrens of Virginia" and "The Captive" are much excelled by the new offering. It is evident that Miss Sweet has now become fully accustomed to her new surroundings and that she is doing her utmost to increase her immense popularity even further and take full advantage of the opportunities afforded her by the very liberal and artistic Lasky management.

Scene from "Stolen Goods" (Lasky).

"Stolen Goods" is a five-reel subject based on the famous emotional drama of the same name by Margaret Turnbull, the noted author and playwright who has recently become associated with the scenario end of the Lasky enterprises. It may be described as distinctly an emotional romance.

The concluding episodes are tremendously dramatic. It is said that the bursting of shells is shown in an entirely new and startling manner in "Stolen Goods" and that the explosion of the shell which wrecks the hospital is so close up as to be positively startling. Never before have the effects of explosions been so marvelously photographed.

In addition to Miss Sweet, the cast of "Stolen Goods" includes House Peters, Cleo Ridgley, Sydney Deane, H. B. Carpenter and Theodore Roberts. The production was made by George Melford.

"THE ISLAND OF REGENERATION" (V. L. S. E.).

During the past year considerable attention has been given to the matter of improving the paper for multiple reel productions, and the composition and quality of the posters prepared by the Vitagraph for its V. L. S. E. release, "The Island of Regeneration" is a striking example of what can really be accomplished with care and thought.

Scene from "The Island of Regeneration" (Vitagraph).

All the paper for this big subject is printed in soft warm pastel shades but so arranged that, while harmonious and pleasing to the eye, the reds, yellows and blues stand out and command attention.

The figures are all idealized paintings, representing scenes from the film story; the minor details on the stills from which the artist drew his inspirations, are eliminated and artistic color combinations substituted. This brings out the principal figures in bold relief.

Paper of this kind is expensive but it is appropriate to the dignity and present standing of the picture art. It will attract the class of patronage the picture deserves, and in fulfilling this mission, it is well worth the expense.

At the Vitagraph Theater in New York, "The Island of Regeneration" broke all house records on it's merit alone and with the aid of this attractive paper to boom the showing, it is expected that new attendance figures will be recorded wherever it is presented.

MOROSCO-BOSWORTH SECURES WILLIAM DESMOND.

William Desmond, one of the country's most noted matinee idols who has been with Oliver Morosco for the past ten years, has been engaged by the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company, in association with Bosworth, Inc. to appear on the screen opposite Leonore Ulrich, the popular little star at present appearing in "The Bird of Paradise" with big success.

Mr. Desmond played opposite Miss Ulrich in "The Bird of Paradise" for the past two seasons and received much praise from the press and public through his splendid characterization of a rather unlikable role. "Bill" Desmond, as he is popularly known, has been around the world twice on tour, having in Australia one of the biggest special stock seasons in the history of the Antipodes. For years he appeared at the head of the Burbank Stock Company and when Oliver Morosco made his maiden bow to Broadway with "Judge and Jury" he chose Desmond as leading man for this production. The biggest drawing team western stock ever had were Bill Desmond and Blanche Hall, who are also well known all over the East.

LADY MACKENZIE'S BIG GAME PICTURES.

Lady Grace Mackenzie has just returned from a year's thrilling expedition after big game in East Africa. She is the first woman who ever penetrated so far into the depths of the African jungle and she has outdone Rainey, Roosevelt and all the other big game hunters in her achievements. She has not only potted every known specimen of big game in that next-to-nature section, but she has succeeded, at great expense, in photographing them all under the most interesting conditions with a moving-picture camera. The result is the best set of big game pictures ever taken.

Lady Mackenzie the Modern Diana.

This Diana of to-day, this modern huntress par excellence, has four miles of film such as has never been seen. In it will be found the most wonderful lion hunt ever photographed, showing a huge African lion charging straight at her; a furious rhino accompanied by his mate and countless pictures of elephants, giraffes, zebras, babboons, buffaloes, apes and wild dogs. All are beautifully pictured and the charges of the hunted wild beases are thrilling in the extreme. In one rare picture three hundred and sixty elephants are seen watering at a pool in the jungle. The best of this vast assortment of film has been worked into a two and a half hours' entertainment and will soon be seen at one of the leading theaters on Broadway, New York City.

HOW TO GET SELIG "RED SEAL" STORIES.

Since the announcement that the Selig Company would supply daily newspapers with an illustrated story in plate form of each of their Red Seal attractions, especially written by the leading lady in each production, hundreds of exhibitors have written the V. L. S. E. and the Selig Company for further particulars. Several hundred others have availed themselves of this attractive advertising feature, but evidently quite a number did not thoroughly understand the offer, and for their benefit, the plan is again explained.

The story of "The Carpet from Bagdad" and the interesting incidents that occurred during its production, has been written by Kathlyn Williams. The story is intensely interesting and over the signature of this popular star, has great value both as a news story and an advertising feature.

The Selig Company has had the story set up in type and cast into plate form all ready for printing. Proof sheets will be sent to all exhibitors booking the feature, and they may show it to the editors of their local newspapers, and request its publication.

Where the editors agree to publish the story, the exhibitor by writing or telegraphing direct to the Selig Company at Chicago, may have the plate sent direct to the newspaper, without any cost to either the newspaper or the exhibitor.

Stories will be written on all Selig "Red Seal" features, by the principal star in the production, and requests for the plates should be addressed direct to Selig, and, as the publicity department suggests, it is better to telegraph instead of writing. It is quicker and certainly worth the cost of a telegram.

CANADA "IN" ON "RUNAWAY JUNE" CONTEST.

Reliance Management Arranges the Voting Plan to Let in Seven Candidates from the Provinces.

In response to the demands of many exhibitors, the "Runaway June" contest was extended this week by the Reliance Motion Picture Corporation to Canada.

Prior to the request of Canadian exhibitors that they receive a chance to send some of their women patrons at the expense of the Reliance, to the California Exposition, a great popular interest has been created in the contest. The advertising and publicity had aroused the women of Canada. In spite of the fact that Canada is at war, popular appreciation of the contest spread rapidly. This interest was made practical when patrons demanded of Canadian exhibitors that they, too, make some arrangement to run the contest in their theaters.

The Canadian exhibitors at once got into communication with the Reliance Motion Picture Corporation, producers of the serial "Runaway June" and by the latter organization were placed in touch with the Serial Publication Corporation which is marketing "Runaway June."

The arrangements made this week for the extension of the contest to Canada provide for one woman winner from each of the seven Canadian provinces. Thus seven women patrons will go free as guests of the Reliance to the Panama-Pacific Exposition in San Francisco and to the San Diego Exposition.

The interest which the people of Canada are taking in the contest is operating there just as it is in the United States. Heavy bookings of "Runaway June" and the contest are pouring into the offices of the Serial Publication Corporation.

As in the United States, there will be fourteen votings for candidates by photoplay patrons in theaters in which "Runaway June" is shown. At the first showing of the serial candidates will be nominated. As each nominating and voting coupon represents a paid admission it can be seen how profitable this Canadian interest in the contest will be to Canadian exhibitors.

Canadian exhibitors were notified this week that their urgings to be allowed to enter the contest had been favorably acted upon, and that they could start the contest at any time. Those who began to show "Runaway June" in advance of the determination to permit them to take part in the contest, were informed at the same time of a Reliance plan which enables them to enter the lists, even though they have shown some of the episodes of "Runaway June," and to enter on terms of equality with theaters just now booking the serial and the contest.

Such theaters are permitted to hold extra votings, at times other than those at which the film is shown. In this way they have fourteen full votings.

Advices to the Canadian exhibitors point out that small theaters and large are on a par in the voting. At each of the showings at which candidates are voted for, the three who receive the largest number of votes are given one credit each on the final result. Thus in a house where 2,000 vote, three candidates receive one credit each; in a house in which only 200 vote, three candidates likewise receive one credit each.

"PROHIBITION" MAY BE GOVERNMENT AGENT.

England, Russia and France have now before them a proposal to use the feature film "Prohibition" to support their prohibition measures against alcoholics. The efficiency experts of the three named nations have decided against vodka, absinthe, and the Britisher's toddy. Robert T. Kane, president of the Prohibition Film Corporation at No. 220 West 42nd Street, New York City, this week through foreign agents, has practically arranged for a showing of the picture as soon as copies can be dispatched to the countries named.

In the event of the film being adopted by the English Ministry, as proposed, the active film photographs of Lloyd George, Lord Kitchener, and Winston Churchill, will be substituted for the scenes in office action of Hon. William Jennings Bryan, Hon. Josephus Daniels, and Hon. Richmond Pearson Hobson. The English Temperance Societies have played an active part in bringing the crusade to a head, operating not only in England, but through representatives in Petrograd and Paris.

The tremendous moral lesson showing the pernicious effects of drink, is thought by the foreign governments to substantiate their edict against alcoholics during perilous times of war, during which time soldiers' physical efficiency has much to do with their ability to fight and to fight hard, and to stand the rigors of trench and battlefield. The American temperance societies are active boosters for the adoption of the film abroad, and through their powerful affiliations, the film may become the organ of governmental belief.

MARY PICKFORD TO STAR IN HER OWN STORY.

Mary Pickford, the Famous Players Film Company's idolized star, will shortly be seen in a feature story conceived and written by her and now being produced at the western studios of the Famous Players, entitled, "A Girl of Yesterday," a novel American comedy-drama woven about all the mechanical marvels of our present-day life, in which the aeroplane plays a conspicuous part.

Aside from this unusual fact, the subject attaches a unique interest because connected with the production are a number of original and totally unconventional incidents. For the first time in their entire association with the screen, Mary Pickford and her younger brother, Jack, will in this production play together in their true relationship. In the golfing, riding and ball-room scenes that form an important factor of the story, eight of Southern California's most prominent society people play parts.

The aeroplane scenes will be conducted and participated in by Glenn Martin, and already trial flights have been made by Miss Pickford in his new four-seated machine to map out a route by which it will be possible to secure the proper backgrounds for the picture. It is planned to ascend about three thousand feet. Other aeroplane scenes will be taken at the Government Aviation Field in San Diego, which has never before been photographed.

The yacht scenes that terminate the story will be produced aboard John D. Spreckles' five million dollar yacht, the first time this palatial vessel has ever been used for the purposes of a motion picture.

Notes of the Trade

W. J. TEDMARSH, playing Quabba, the Italian, in "The Diamond from the Sky," was formerly a member of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police and also served the Cape Colony Mounted Rifles in the Boer War.

Director Edward "Komic" Dillon and his company went to Venice, Cal., recently to perform before the camera a scene in the Komic comedy, "Gasoline Gus."

The action of the play demands the driving into a canal of an auto bus with the heroine and two contending suitors.

"Beans" is the offering on which Robert Daly's company is working. The story is funny and the picture is something out of the ordinary. As in the other Daly productions, Fritzi Brunette, who has recently joined the Universal forces again, is featured, and the release is to be a Joker.

The "Overland Monthly," in recognition of the fact that Bret Harte was its first and most famous editor, prints in its June number a twelve-page article on the work now being done in turning his famous California stories into motion pictures. Mrs. Josephine Clifford McCrackin, associate editor under Harte in the sixties, has written the account, "Bret Harte in the 'Movies,'" describing the productions finished and contemplated by the California Motion Picture Corporation. The article is handsomely illustrated with halftones from "Salomy Jane" and "The Lily of Poverty Flat."

Reliance and Majestic photoplays in which Spottiswoode Aitken appears will become very popular with the suffragists. Aitken has been converted to the suffrage cause since joining the Reliance-Majestic forces on the coast. He is usually making speeches for the suffragist gatherings in Los Angeles, when not working in pictures.

Mae Marsh, Robert Harron, Spottiswoode Aitken and Jennie Lee, old favorites, and Elmo Linkenhalt, are busily rehearsing "Her Shattered Idol," by Ella Woods, under the direction of John B. O'Brien, who produced "Captain Macklin" and "The Outcast." "Her Shattered Idol" will be released in four parts as a Mutual Masterpicture.

The entire Lubin studio is to produce "50 Miles from Boston" the latter part of the month in Philadelphia for the benefit of the Lubin Annual Beneficial Association. Every leading man and leading woman among the Lubin players has volunteered for the occasion and in order that the public may have an opportunity to see all their favorite players, a different cast will appear in each of the three acts. Practically every player in the studio, who hasn't a part, will appear in specialties and in the chorus. Percy Winters will be the stage director.

Does YOUR Theatre Appeal to the Sense of SMELL?
The hot weather is nearly here. Don't let your theatre have that foul, close, musty odor that keeps people away. Why not have the atmosphere perfumed like a fragrant garden of flowers by AIROZONE—the Perfect Air Purifier?
This is the latest scientific chemical discovery and it solves one of the greatest problems of the Moving Picture House. Managers throughout the country who have tested it are loud in their praise of this highly concentrated, powerful disinfectant and antiseptic. One gallon is equal in strength to 10 gallons of the ordinary disinfectant solution and will impart a delicious, delicate fragrance which will last for weeks in even a large theater.
SPECIAL OFFER—To prove our claims, upon receipt of $3 we will send you a gallon of Airozone with an absolute guarantee of satisfaction. With the first order from any theater we will give a Continuous-Action Sprayer, valued at $1.50.

LUBIN

LIBERTY BELL Features

"LIBERTY BELL" is the name we have chosen to identify those Lubin photo plays of unusually high quality (of 4 reels or more) with famous theatrical stars in the leading roles, to be released through the V. L. S. E., Inc.

For the present we are offering in 6 parts, which is playing to packed houses in all parts of the country. "The Eagle's Nest," featuring Edwin Arden and Romaine Fielding, is one of the most picturesque and thrilling dramas ever shown on the screen. The scenic effects are notably beautiful, having been photographed principally in the world famous "Garden of the Gods."

"THE EAGLE'S NEST"

—Also

"THE COLLEGE WIDOW"

from the celebrated play of the same name by George Ade, featuring Ethel Clayton and George Soule Spencer. "The College Widow" is unquestionably the greatest college picture shown. It comprises an exciting football game, a "snake dance" of nearly 10,000 students and the most sensational fire scene ever pictured.

The Lubin LIBERTY BELL feature for release June 7th is Cecil Raleigh's successful comedy drama with the popular and famous star, Rose Coghlan, in the cast.

"THE SPORTING DUCHESS"

Graustark, the Story of A Love Behind A Throne

HE offered to lay down his life for the woman he loved!

NO greater test of a man than this can be made. It is the supreme sacrifice.

WHAT woman does not thrill to the love of a man willing to die that she might be happy?

WHAT man is not carried to the loftiest heights of sentiment by such devotion and sacrifice?

ALL the world is akin and a really great love is the one emotion that stirs the depths of every heart. It is uplifting, ennobling, inspiring.

THIS is the story George Barr McCutcheon tells in Essanay's six-act photoplay, "Graustark." Grenfall Lorry, the young American, loves a princess. He is young, rich and has everything to live for. Yet because of his great love he offers his life to save a woman.

THIS is the emotion that stirs that indescribable something in all spectators and holds them tense and forgetful of everything else in the world. This is what lifts "Graustark" from the ordinary and stamps it a GREAT play.

Arrange Children's Shows

St. Paul and Minneapolis Civic Organizations Are Promoting Special Children's Shows—Aim to Prove to Exhibitors That There Is Demand for Educational and Substantial Offerings—Three Theaters Give the Shows on Alternate Weeks.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

THREE Twin City houses were selected for the early special fairy tale shows for children on Saturday mornings. The dates were: Strand, Minneapolis, May 8; Lyric, Minneapolis, May 15; Dale, St. Paul, May 22. Mrs. Carleton F. McNally, of St. Paul, a narrator of children's stories, will talk about the films. One aim of this survey is to prove to exhibitors that censored and educational films are demanded. If the plan works in downtown theaters it will be extended to outlying houses.

Behind the movement are the Drama League, the Fourth and Fifth Districts of Woman's Clubs of St. Paul and Minneapolis, the Mothers' Council, Woman's Civil League, Guild of Catholic Women, playground organizations, children's department of the public library in St. Paul and the Minnesota Congress of Mothers.

MINNESOTA BRIEFS.

Winfield Sheehan, of the William Fox Film Company, was recently at Minneapolis and looked over the surrounding country, including Minnehaha Falls, with a view to producing some pictures there.

Orchard Gardens, a rapidly developing town, has erected two buildings which will be units in the social center of the place. A moving picture theater will be included in the complete group.

Ben Huntly has been at Wimona making a local film built about the comic adventures of two rival salesmen.

A. J. Mack, who recently secured control of the Lyle, at LeSueur Center, has purchased a site and expects to open about July 1 a new one-story 28x80 brick and tile picture and vaudeville theater.

B. F. Frazier has sold the Rex, at Hutchinson, to B. C. Werdin and Ralph Habberstad.

Ed Buckley, who recently sold his picture house at St. Peter, planned to take possession on May 15 of the opera house at Foley, which he has leased from O. N. Vista.

A moving picture show has been opened in the Eagles Hall, at Little Forks.

Walter Heine, operator at the Colonial at Tracy, since it started, and Adam Bahmer of that pace have taken a three years' lease on the theater.

Nels Jensen has purchased from C. E. Williams the opera house at Mora, Minn., in which he has operated a picture show for two years. Jensen will make improvements to the house and has increased the schedule from three to six nights a week.

Prosper Schwie, assistant manager and treasurer of the Lyric at Minneapolis for the last five years, has assumed the management of the New Calhoun theater at Lake and Hennepin avenues, in Minneapolis. The new house, seating 800, and costing $75,000 is owned by the Calhoun Theater Co. It will run high-class pictures exclusively.

WISCONSIN ITEMS.

Special to M. P. W. for Midwest News Service.

William E. Hamilton, secretary of the Greater Milwaukee association, has been appointed a member of the Citizens' Motion Picture Censorship board to succeed E. M. Barron, who resigned. Mrs. L. Celeste Constant is another member.

Capitalists from Superior were in Kenosha recently looking for a location for a new picture house, it is reported.

Manager Joseph G. Rhode of the Rhode at Kenosha has contracted for the Paramount and World film services.

Manager A. A. Green has instaled a new cooling system in the Neenah theater at Neenah. He has taken on the Mutual Service.

Fred Jacobi is now devoting his time to the Rex at Sheboygan Falls, having sold his interest in the Idle Hour to Otto Kock, who, with Frank Steffen, will operate it under the firm name of Kock & Steffen.

Sunday matinees have been discontinued for the summer months by the Monroe at Monroe.

Work of remodeling Ben Rosenburg's building in River Falls into a photoplay house seating 300 will start about July 1. Rosenburg will operate the show.

J. E. Andrews sold the opera house at Bloomer to William Prince.

ILLINOIS NEWS LETTER.

By Frank H. Madison, Illinois Correspondent Moving Picture World.

THE establishment of a board of moving picture censors not only for East St. Louis, but for every city and village in St. Clair County was favored in a resolution passed at the convention of the St. Clair County Federation of Catholic Societies in session at Freeburg.

Organic education ideas are being assisted in Oak Park by the Playhouse, which has set aside Tuesday nights for educational programs under the auspices of the Fair Hope League. These will run until fall and the proceeds will go to the league's summer school of organic education. The programs include industrial, scenic, natural history and comedy films.

A private showing to all pastors and Sunday school superintendents and many other church workers caused a favorable feeling toward Harry Paulo's Sunday show of Pathe's "The Life of Our Saviour" at the Grand Opera House, in Aurora. Several pastors would have been willing to show it at their churches had not expense prohibited. One Sunday school worked who had never seen a moving picture voiced his amazement at the possibility of this film as a Bible teacher.

The South Side theater, at Aledo, has a good plan to keep its name always in the home. It published its program in a weekly paper to be hung on the wall. When ten of these have been collected they are good for an admission. The Lyric, at East Moline, helped a junior baseball team get new suits. Manager Harold J. Johnson, of the Grand Opera House, at Jacksonville, had a benefit for the local lodge of Rebekahs.

Plans for the W. R. Lyon and Delmar Schnepp motion picture theater, at Bloomington, have assumed definite shape. The firm of C. O. Williams & Son will erect a six-story building, the lower two floors of which will be used for a theater. Schnepp will retire later from the management of the Chatterton Opera House, but the Chatterton will still carry some picture programs. Lyon, who operated the Castle, is now running his picture show at the Chatterton.

A. B. Campbell, who operates a show at Hardin, will erect a 30x50 picture airdome, seating 400, at that place.

Al Phelps and Frank Allen have opened an airdome at Oglesby.

A. J. Roath has opened a picture show in Columbia Hall, at Algonquin.

The Photoplayers' Statuette Company, of Chicago, has been incorporated with $1,000 capital stock to manufacture and deal in statucttes, miniatures and art goods of all kinds, to be manufactured from all kinds of material. Incorporators, Charles E. Stark, Nicholas Miller and F. H. Owens.

Bruce E. Henry has bought the A-Muse-U theater, at Princeville, from J. F. Warren.

Edwin Johnson, William Lavery and Annette Graff have incorporated the Madison Street Theater Corporation of Chicago, to conduct moving picture shows, exhibitions, entertainments, etc. Capital stock is $120,000.

The Jitney Garden, pictures and vaudeville, has been opened at "A" and Richland streets, in Belleville.

Blayney & Black have opened a moving picture airdome seating 1,000 at Fairfield.

Manager Joehrendt has opened the Airdome at Monticello for a summer season of pictures.

The Family Airdome, at Eleventh street and South Grand avenue, Springfield, has been reopened by George Hopper.

Roy McMullen, of Joliet, made plans to start early in May remodeling the Colonial and enlarging it to a capacity of 600. A new heating and ventilating system will be installed. A stage will be installed for vaudeville. The house will be closed for about three months.

William H. Pemberton, formerly with the Colonial Amusement Company of Eldorado, is assisting Manager Parker with his new theater at Carmi. The new house runs four reels of pictures and vaudeville.

Robert Mathes, of Quincy, has joined the ranks of the camera men and will film events in that part of Illinois, also in Eastern Missouri.

Al Carney, of Dubuque, Ia., has opened the Rex, on Sinsinua avenue, in East Dubuque.

Wilson McKim, proprietor of the Lyric, at Sterling, is the newest owner of the Grand there, having purchased it from Cole & Geddes.

A moving picture show and dance pavilion has been opened at Wauconda by P. A. Hoffmeyer.

CURREN BILL RECOMMENDED.

A special telegram to the Moving Picture World as we are going to press notifies us that the License Committee of the lower house of the Illinois Legislature has reported out and recommended passage of Curran Censorship bill.

SOUTHWEST NEWS LETTER.

Special to the Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

AMONG the first pictures to be produced by the new Excel Fotoplay Company at San Antonio, Tex., are Clarence Bennett's two road successes, "The Royal Slave" and "The Holy City." Bennett has arrived at San Antonio to help in producing these. Raymond C. Parent, who was with the St. Louis Motion Picture Company, is on the ground to act as scenario editor and to take part in some productions. Among the actors now under contract are Ed Sedgwick, Carol Arden, Marguerite Miller, W. W. Blake, Eileen and Josie Sedgwick, Nick Baker, Robert Longmire and Katherine Child.

FORT WORTH CENSOR RESIGNS.

William Massie has resigned as a member of the city board of censorship at Fort Worth, Tex., and Mayor Tyra has accepted the resignation. His action is attributed to the fact that the Mayor, without seeing the pictures barred "Three Weeks" after the board had passed it.

WITH THE MANAGERS.

The Gem, at Little Rock, Ark., urges patrons to 'phone its office to get the correct starting time of each show of a big feature. Dreamland, at Denton, Tex., gave a benefit for the local high school baseball team. The Byers Opera house, at North Fort Worth, Tex., is running a voting contest with a Maxwell auto as first prize. A dry goods store in Greenville, Tex., took over the Queen for a Saturday morning show of "The Fairy and the Waif" for children. The only condition was that the mothers call at the store for the tickets. "Visit the Gaiety twice and you'll have the habit" is a slogan of that Muskogee, Okla., house. Moving pictures of Austin's greatest flood were shown at the Bes-Mar, in Austin, Tex. The Empress, at Muskogee, Okla., did good business with local films. When "Hiawatha" was shown at the City Auditorium, in Houston, the street railway company arranged special service to carry children from the more distant sections to the Auditorium. The Isis theater, at Houston, Tex., is running the Ford-Detroit weekly. The Knights of Pythias lodge at Ardmore, Okla., entertained lodges from neighboring cities and gave the visitors a special show of "Damon and Pythias" at the Theatorium.

OVER THEIR HEADS IN IOWA.

"Ted Sullivan, the noted baseball expert, is disgusted with the Iowa City," says the Iowa City Press. "Even though this is the seat of Hawkeye culture, he declares that the beautiful classic he presented here during the past two days (his lecture and the moving pictures of the White Sox and Giants' world tour) went clear over the heads of the populace.

"This is worse than the jungles of the copper country of Lake Superior," he predicted wrathfully, at the close of a second performance, with scarcely enough people as his auditors to pay for a good lunch at a first-class cafe.

COLLEGE WILL ADVISE SCHOOLS BUYING PROJECTORS.

The following announcement has been sent out by the department of engineering extension, Iowa State College at Ames:

"High schools, libraries, women's clubs, Y. M. C. A.'s or other organizations which are considering the installing of moving picture machines will find the engineering extension department at Iowa State College ready to advise with them on their purchase. This department has, for the past six months, been testing various makes of moving picture machines and on the basis of its experience is ready to give advice to intending purchasers.

"School boards and school officials throughout the state are awakening to the possibilities of instruction through the aid of moving picture machines and a good many of them are planning purchase of this kind of equipment. The department is also ready to give aid in the purchase of different kinds of service and to extend information on the various industrial films available."

HOW IOWA SHOWS ARE GOING.

Requests came so thick that the Palace, at Waterloo, returned "The Spoilers." The Casino, at Des Moines, got a lot of good publicity with a creditable double of Charles Chaplin on the screen. The Princess, at Anamosa, had some good slides right after a big railroad wreck near that place. Manager Iverson of the Superba, at Lyons, showed the Essanay "One Wonderful Night" for the benefit of the Girl's Friendly Society. Another Francis X. Bushman picture that went big was "Every Inch a King," the Star, at Mt. Vernon, heightening the interest in it by featuring the author, Miss Laura Hinkley, a local girl. The Busy Hour, at Jefferson, got 15 and 25 cents for "Tillie's Punctured Romance," but offered $10 to all who did not laugh. The Eagle, at Grand Junction, gave a six-reel benefit for the local fire department.

Pictures in "Dry" City

In Des Moines Closing of Saloons Has Boosted Amusements—People Have Money to Spend and Are Taking In Moving Picture Shows and All Harmless Diversions—Saturday Nights Bring Out Throngs.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

A RUSH to the picture shows in Des Moines since that city went "dry" is related by a special correspondent of the Iowa City Press.

"The closing of the saloons in Des Moines has enormously increased the business done in the amusement houses of the city," he says. "The amount of money being spent for pleasure and sport of one kind or another is simply appalling. The Saturday night crowds that throng the movie houses, bowling alleys, billiard halls, etc., are larger than ever before known in the city. The purveyors of entertainment report their business having increased by 25 to 30 per cent. in recent months."

INFLUENCE OF PICTURES ON CHILDREN.

If Iowa exhibitors held to cleaner pictures their juvenile patronage would be larger, believes H. J. Whitacre, who has been making a survey of Des Moines and Waterloo for the State Teachers' College of Cedar Falls. "Most of the answers we receive indicate that the children want better films," he said.

"It is interesting to find that the children of the poorer classes attend the shows perhaps more than any others. In some cases I find that they go to the shows in the winter because they can keep warm there better than at home.

"Our investigation indicates that moving pictures are doing some good in the way of education. Children are learning things that they use in their geography, history and science. They read newspapers more as a result of attending the shows. Very few of them say that the shows affect their religion. Scarcely any of the teachers attribute poor work to the influence of the shows.

"Some of the questions were: How often do you attend picture shows? What time of the day? What day or days? Do your parents like to have you go? Do they go with you? Do you go with friends. Do you learn from seeing picture shows? Does it make you want to read? Newspapers, magazines or books, and what kind of each? How does it help you in your studies? Do the pictures affect your religion? Hurt your eyes? Do you dream of them? Think of them while in school? What kind of pictures do you remember longest? Do they affect your desire to attend school? What kind do you like best, spectacular, tragedy, comedy, romantic, travels, western, thrillers, educational?"

The teachers' college will continue the experiments by installing machines in several schools next year.

SUIT OVER LOST FILMS.

Martin & Estes filed suit in the United States District Court at Sioux City to recover $1,175 from Maurice W. Jencks for seven reels of "The Spoilers" destroyed in Sioux City last January. The films are valued at $675 and the losses from necessarily canceled dates at $500.

PEOPLE SEE MORE GOOD ACTING THAN FORMERLY.

Perhaps the moving picture as coach may bring better acting to the home talent drama. High school seniors at Iowa City gave "The Man From Home" at their annual class play. While they were in rehearsals Thomas A. Brown showed that film at the American theater in Iowa City. Both the school and photoplay house profited. The school turned out to get pointers and friends of the pupils decided after seeing the films to hear the lines.

ON THE SHELDON CUT-PRICE WAR.

Apropos of the fight at Sheldon, where admission was cut to three cents of two for a nickel, the Burling "Hawkeye" sees that many managers cannot cut prices:

"Perhaps the right way to win out in Sheldon would be to get better pictures than the competitors are showing and to raise the price. If the pictures are poor the low admission will not add to the number of patrons, while there will not be sufficient space in any of the theaters to hold all who will be willing to pay better prices to see high grade pictures. It takes but a very short time for the dear public to learn the difference, and then the majority will be demanding the best that is to be had, regardless of the price.

IOWA BRIEFS.

The Keck, at Wapello, had a benefit for the local baseball team. "The Devil" was run at the Guthrie Center theater under the auspices of the local Woman's Relief Corps. D. Orville Reese, manager of the Grand, at Fort Madison, had a two-reel local "The Guiltless Fugitive" made. Before the picture was taken the members of the cast appeared at a show at the Grand and were introduced to the audience.

F. E. Leonard has purchased the interest of his partner, C. W. Melcher, in the Lyric, at Hawarden.

A partnership has been formed by Guy Mahoney of the Palm, and Manager Shlaes of the Airdome, at Missouri Valley.

H. Holloway has opened a picture show in his building at Whiting, McBeath & Howe having moved their show from it to the Opera House.

William Fruehling and F. P. Otten, who have reopened the Princess, at Ft. Madison, will use a Mutual program. Mrs. Fruehling will have charge of the musical programs.

Saul & Son, of Carroll, have opened another show at Lidderdale.

G. A. Spelbring has opened a show at Silver City.

Clarence Rhole has purchased the moving picture show at Lake Mills.

The Pastime, at Maquoketa, ran "The Hypocrites" April 28 and began using other Paramount pictures May 1.

L. A. Whaley, of the Lyric, at Preston, has just been married.

C. Dirks has been making preparations to erect a one-story moving picture theater at Holland.

The Royal theater, at Drakeville, has been sold to Dewey Williams.

The moving picture show at Williams has been moved from the State Bank Opera house to the Hayse building.

Manager Williams did not care to raise his prices of 5 and 10 cents at the Isis, in Lake City, so leased the house for one night to Martin & Estes, of Kansas City, who have the rights for "The Spoilers."

G. H. Carlson sold his show at Pilot Mound to Rollin Wolk and Thomas Tomlinson.

Fairchild & Paine opened their new show in the Blotcky Building at Onawa May 1.

H. Bopp Hampton is having the Callan building at Clear Lake remodeled for use as a moving picture theater.

The Real Amusement Company of Newton and Colfax has purchased the picture house of A. M. Stover and L. E. Alexander, at Marengo. Manager Lundgeon, of Colfax, will supervise the new properties.

Censors and the Public

Kansas Newspapers Are Having Fun at Expense of State Censorship—Mayor House of Topeka Writes a Few Pertinent Paragraphs on Subject for the "Capital"—Many Other Kansas Editorials of Like Mind.

Special to Moving Picture World from Kansas City News Service.

SOME of the editors in Kansas are inclined to make fun of the moving picture censorship. One of the most outspoken of the newspaper writers is Jay E. House, paragrapher on the Topeka Capital, and recently elected mayor of that town. Mr. House does not care what he says so long as it expresses his opinion, and the fact that they elected him mayor shows that his opinions coincide with a majority of the citizens of Topeka. In a recent issue of the Capital, Mr. House in his column had the following paragraphs, three of which together indicate his attitude toward the censorship and toward other efforts to regulate the public:

"There is always a good deal of foolishness going on. You are right. We had in mind the work of the Kansas board of moving picture censors.

"We have watched many Legislatures come and go, and have observed one thing. If there is a chance to pass a law which is sure to annoy men in legitimate business the Legislature always passes it.

"Our further observation in the matter is that if you have a boy who can be corrupted by the ordinary run of moving picture films you might as well kill him now and save trouble."

THE ONLY GOOD CENSORSHIP.

Public Leaves Theater When Bad Films Appear—Keeps Away for a While.

The Parent-Teachers' Association of Missouri held its annual convention in Kansas City the week of April 26, but without taking definite action in respect to moving picture shows. A year ago the association had adopted a policy with reference to neighborhood shows, and informal reports of the operation of this policy were made in the "circles," or small sub-meetings, in connection with the convention.

The resolutions of last year recommended that the patrons of a neighborhood show exercise an informal and unorganized censorship over the exhibitions and programs, and enforce this censorship by means of what is practically a boycott. The patrons understand that if, on the nights when the children of the neighborhood are generally to attend the exhibition, usually Friday or Saturday night, the program does not meet with approval, the audience that is in sympathy with the practice get up and leave, and not again patronize that show until assurance is given that the desired quality of program is given.

This method of indicating influence by the censors has not made any headway in St. Louis, but is practiced rather extensively in Kansas City, Springfield and some other cities. One of the reports made is indicative of them all.

"Quite a number of the patrons of our neighborhood show have agreed to the method of bringing pressure on the exhibitor. One night, for instance, one picture was far below the standard, and a kind of picture that we had explicitly asked the exhibitor not to show on Friday nights. When the reel began, one of our number rose, and looked at others—about thirty men, women and children—got up and left the show, telling the proprietor as we went out that we were dissatified with the way he had met our suggestions. We stayed away for two weeks, until he sent announcements around of a specially good program, which we attended, and found quite up to standard. It is sometimes a hardship, apparently, on the children, and they often object to leaving in the middle of a show; but the parents of course insist, and it is increasing our ability to secure the right kind of programs for our neighborhood."

One of the difficulties mentioned by another person making a report, was the fact that a change in ownership of the house often makes necessary several weeks' of "demonstration" before he falls into the habit of his predecessor of cooperating with the parents.

Another of the problems of the neighborhood show which was mentioned, was that of satisfying both the children and the young people. The latter are fond of the serials and features, while the children are better satisfied and benefited by the simpler short comedies, educational films, brief spectaculars, and single-reel romances.

In neighborhoods where the parents cooperate most sympathetically with the exhibitors, the Friday night programs are most carefully adapted to the children, and the houses are filled, the older persons become accustomed to patronizing the house on nights when the pictures especially suited to them are shown. The Parent-Teachers' association are helping to simplify this problem, since the teachers insist that Friday or Saturday night, following which there is no school, are the proper times for children to attend the shows.

The agitation of the subject is in fact rather spreading the notion that the children should go on the nights of the special programs, so that the tendency is to make all the school children picture fans.

CENSOR JESS WILLARD SCENES.

The films of the Kansas hero, Big Jess Willard, have been barred by his own state for a time at least. Willard was shown at his training camp and at his home. One of the scenes objected to was a barroom with one of the best collections of prize fight followers ever on the screen, and the other was a scene of Willard leaving the bedside of his sick baby to go to Havana to fight Jack Johnson. These two scenes barred the pictures in Kansas, although they will again be shown before the appeal board and their judgment of them will be final. The appeal board consists of Governor Capper, S. M. Brewster, attorney general, and J. T. Botkin, secretary of state.

SALISBURY'S WILD ANIMAL FILMS GOING WELL.

The Grand Feature Film Company which recently opened in the Gayety building at Kansas City started off their business with a rush on their one feature photoplay, "Salisbury's Wild Animal Life of America." Manager Joseph Gilday, after reviewing the seven reels of film, immediately signed a contract for a week's production at the Willis Wood theater. Manager Gilday received a wire from Manager Rothapfel of the Strand theater in New York to be sure and secure the first production of these pictures in the city. But Manager Gilday beat the telegram and had the pictures already booked for a week's engagement. They were shown in the New York Strand.

CENSORS GET FIRST VIEW.

The censors of Kansas have had ridicule heaped upon them that not they, but the lawmakers there, justly deserve. In truth the censors have passed nearly every picture that has been tendered to them without making any cuts and the public can have its drinking scenes and all the other scenes that go toward making moving pictures that the puritanic legislature called vice. These pictures are being passed, although the law says that they should not be, and the one woman censor did make a mistake at one time. The fact is the censors just like to be the first ones to see a picture show in Kansas and the law pays their way.

SUFFRAGISTS' FILM WILL GET BY CENSORS.

Kansas City was somewhat overrun with parades last week, especially on Saturday afternoon. Ball teams paraded the streets first, then the Suffragettes marched in a body from their headquarters to the Twelfth Street theater to see the moving picture production "Your Girl and Mine," which was made and endorsed and censored by the National American Women Suffrage Association. Manager Durrin said that the crowd of suffragettes almost frightened him at first, but that they quieted down in the show and watched the performance through just like school children. The suffragettes have censored their own film, but its a cinch that they will get it by the censors in Kansas and other states that are supposed to have such strict censorship laws.

KANSAS CITY BRIEFS.

The German War Relief Committee at Kansas City has announced that they will show pictures showing the mobilization of the European armies that have never before been shown in this country at the New Turner Hall. The proceeds of the three days' exhibition will go to the German relief fund.

Miss Etta Arthur, representative of the Kansas City Feature Film company, has returned from a trip to the East to visit her mother and is now in the state of Kansas booking orders for her favorite pictures, the Paramount releases. Miss Arthur has proved to be one of the best booking agents on the road and has turned in a very large number of excellent contracts. She is the only woman booking agent working out of Kansas City so far as is known.

News has reached Kansas City that K. L. Williams, who left the 101 Ranch Picture company the first of the year to handle the Pawnee Bill pictures, is back with the Miller Brothers, and has the picture factory running at full speed. The picture that he is now busy on is the Expositions First Romance. The picture, which is a five-reel feature, will be handled like other 101 productions through traveling agents and Mr. Williams is busy making twenty-five prints and that many men will be sent to that many states during the next month.

MISSOURI ITEMS.

J. J. Sprague, manager of the Star theater at Sarcoxie, Mo., has added a new machine and screen and has made other improvements at his moving picture theater there. Mr. Sprague says that the good business demanded that the new installations should be made immediately and he has just had to put them in.

A. E. Holten, formerly manager of the airdomes at Booneville and Webb City, Mo., has located at Bethany, Mo., where he is going to manage the airdome for the summer. Mr. Holten says that it is one of the liveliest little town that he has ever been in and he feels certain that the airdome will be most successful there.

Houses's Gem theater at Appleton City, Mo., opened recently and the first show was free to the public.

"Cabiria" was shown under the auspices of the Improved Order of Redmen at the Landers theater at Springfield, Mo.

KANSAS SHORT NOTES.

Frank Yates is building a new airdome at Augusta, Kan., and he promises to have the best one in the state erected there.

The Cozy and the Nest theaters at Topeka, Kan., opened again last Sunday, showing the semi-religious pictures, "Judas of Bethulia," "Nero and the Burning of Rome," and "Joseph in the Land of Egypt."

BUNNY WAS A MANAGER IN SALT LAKE CITY.

By H. W. Pickering, Salt Lake Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

As with many localities, there was a "local end" in Salt Lake City in the story of the death of John Bunny. About seventeen years ago the late comedian was manager of the old Grand theater, now the Garrick, in Salt Lake, at the time that a popular stock company occupied the boards of that house. Many members of the company, like Bunny, who also appeared in the casts, became famous in after years.

SALT LAKE CITY BRIEFS.

George E. Carpenter, editor of Real Reels, the house organ of the Notable Feature Film Company in Salt Lake, boosting Paramount productions, comes out this week disguised as a sporting editor. Real Reels appears on the pinkest of pink paper, a la sporting sheet, and all items of news as well as the editorials are written in approved sports style. The back page, carrying the Paramount advertisement, features a large mat of Jess Willard, labeled "Paramount Champion." Carp is the true little friend of the advertising departments of magazines and newspapers and shows no mercy to managers with "cold feet."

A. P. Cahill, swinging around the circle for the Mutual Film Corporation in this territory, sends a whole shipment of optimism regarding the outlook for the motion picture business in these "valleys of the mountings."

A. S. Hatfield, who resigned recently as manager of the Pathe office in Salt Lake, has purchased a half interest in the Princess theater, in this city which, under management of Sam Loeb, was built up from a hoodoo house and a steady losing proposition to one of the best little money-making houses in this city. While the Princess is known principally as the home of "tabloid" musical comedy it is a heavy user of first class films and has featured Keystone comedies with considerable profit to itself. It may be mentioned in passing that Mr. Hatfield resigned from the Pathe office for the purpose of taking part in a legal contest over a will in Philadelphia in which he and his mother, Mrs. W. F. Powers, of Salt Lake, are mentioned to the extent of about $25,000. Mr. Hatfield, however, found that his presence in Philadelphia was not imperative and remained in this city to keep up his end of the show game.

Nathan Offer, manager of the Salt Lake office of the United Film Service, is preparing to issue a house organ which, he says, will be a new departure in this line of publicity.

The Princess theater, in Provo, has added vaudeville to its film attractions, and the new addition is said to have made a strong appeal to Provo patrons of the house.

Charles F. Tabler, motion picture manufacturer of Denver, was in Salt Lake this week with his bride, formerly Mrs. J. A. Snedeker, a wealthy widow of Denver, on their return trip from a honeymooning jaunt in the Hawaiian Islands. Mr. Tabler has in production a number of reels made in the Garden of the Gods, Colorado.

Salt Lake's motor equipped fire department was caught in action last week by Joseph E. Howard, who was featured on the bill at the Orpheum theater. Mr. Howard is an expert camera man and carries his camera over the circuit with him for his own amusement. The pictures will be shown here at the Orpheum next week.

Children's Feature Co.

The New Louisville Picture Making Company Has Been Incorporated—Hopes to Begin Production Within Thirty Days and to Release About July 1—No Site Chosen as Yet—Who Are Behind the New Venture.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Louisville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

That Louisville is to have a film-producing company to produce special childrens' films for use in theaters handling special matinees for children, noticed recently in this column, is now an assured fact. Louisville was the first city in the country to start censored pictures for children and the idea has now spread until theaters in all sections of the country have adopted the plan. The new film corporation has filed incorporation articles under the title of the Children's Feature Film company of Louisville. The capital stock of the concern is listed $50,000, divided into 5,000 shares of the par value of $10. There are 2,000 shares of common stock and 3,000 shares of preferred stock. The incorporators are: Thos. J. Morrow, Jr., R. W. Conant and Norman M. Sweet, each holding three shares. The corporation is authorized to incur an indebtedness not to exceed $25,000. The officers are: Thomas J. Morrow, Jr., president; A. T. Macdonald, vice-president; Norman Sweet, secretary-treasurer, and R. W. Conant, director and producer. The company expects to be in position to start making films inside of thirty days, but will not be able to make releases until about July 1. Several locations for studios have been considered and a deal will shortly be closed.

WILL DEVELOP LOCAL FILM.

The Royal Photo company of Louisville, which recently secured comodious quarters, taking the entire third floor at 421 South Fourth street, announces that it is making arrangements whereby a full equipment will shortly be installed so that the company will be in position to develop moving picture films in Louisville. The concern for a number of years has been giving its entire attention to making commercial photographs. The studio was burned twice inside of a few months and new quarters were taken which are the largest and most commodious in this section of the country. Abundance of room is to be had, and the studio could easily produce indoor moving picture scenes under the larke skylights. Heretofore it has been necessary to send almost all films taken locally to Chicago or other points to have them developed. The concern also specializes on slides.

BROADWAY THEATER COMPANY TO BUILD AIRDOME.

The Broadway Theater company, which recently built a new theater at Shelby and Broadway has just torn down the old theter and is contemplating erection of a large airdome on the vacant lot. The company has increased its capital stock from $70,000 to $85,000. The additional stock is divided into 8,500 shares of the par value of $10. This stock is divided into 6,500 shares of common and 2,000 shares preferred. Louis Steurle, president of the company, said that the increase was made to take care of the new building, although it had not been definitely decided whether the airdome would be erected this season or next.

SUMMER PROGRAM AT THE MARY ANDERSON THEATER.

The Mary Anderson theater has announced that several changes have been made in the ventilating system for the hot weather. The program will be changed three times a week instead of twice, as heretofore. Fox films will be shown on Sundays, Mondays and Tuesdays. World Corporation films will be exhibited on Wednesdays and Thursdays, and the last two days of each week will be devoted to the four-company productions known as the V-L-S-E features. One of the first pictures will be "The Juggernaut." Manager Goldberg stated that he would try to continue special children's features throughout the summer, even after the public schools closed.

THE BEN ALI OF LEXINGTON TO SHOW PICTURES.

C. H. Berryman, of Lexington, Ky., manager of the James B. Haggin estate, recently announced that he intended to switch the Ben Ali theater, of Lexington, to a moving picture house. Mr. Berryman was lately admitted to the Kentucky Exhibitors' League, at the Lexington convention.

QUEEN THEATER DID NOT PAY.

The Queen theater, of Winchester, Ky., which was recently closed, has since been placed in the bankruptcy courts. Chris Sideras and Mike Catson filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy. A petition was filed for the firm and for each of the owners individually. Liabilities are placed at $6,400 and assets at $6,000. The Queen theater started last February, but has had hard sailing all the way, due to strong competition on the part of the older houses. The owners went to considerable expense in converting the Fraternity building into a theater and used expensive materials in the work. When settlement time came around the partners were unable to meet their bills and a creditors' meeting was called. The house was run by the creditors for a time, but the patronage was small and a levy was made in the form of an attachment against Sideras, who is supposed to have property in the old country. The theater was at once closed down. The American Seating Company, The Amusement Supply Company and local concerns were among the creditors. Lewis R. Hampton, on motion of the creditors, was appointed receiver in bankruptcy for the firm.

LOUISVILLE BRIEFS.

F. B. Masters, manager of the Crescent Amusement Company's theater at Bowling Green, Ky., was recently in Louisville calling on some of the film and supply men. The Crescent Amusement Company is located at Nashville, Tenn., but operates the Colonial at Bowling Green. This theater was erected about a year or so ago and is one of the handsomest theaters in the smaller cities of the state.

Roland Clark, of Lebanon, Ky., who recently completed remodeling the Arista, which was badly damaged by fire during the winter, was in Louisville during the first week in May. He placed orders for some special feature productions with the local film exchanges.

The Henderson Theater Company, of Henderson, Ky., recently filed articles of incorporation, listing the capital stock at $12,000, divided into 1,200 shares of the par value of $10 each. The incorporators are: George A. Bleich, 1194 shares; Emma C. Bleich and A. S. Zelt, three shares each. The debt limit is placed at $10,000. Mr. Bleich owns the Empress theater and is preparing to open the Peoples' theater on Third street. He also owned the Princess theater, which was recently closed.

The Scenders Amusement Company of Louisville has leased the Crescent airdome from the Crescent Amusement Company.

Essanays at Chicamauga

Company of Film Folk from Chicago Studio Will Make Picture on Famous Battle Ground—"Vain Justice" Is Its Title—It Will Have Battle Scenes as Nearly as Possible Like Those There Fifty Years Ago.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Tennessee Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE hills and gullies of Chicamauga, which tingled fifty years ago during one of the greatest battles of the Civil War, are to be treated in much the same way in a mimic reproduction of the great struggle which occurred half a century ago. The picture will be made by the Essanay Company, now quartered at Chattanooga. The wearers of the blue and gray will be represented in the conflict. "Vain Justice" will be the subject of the production and many "supes" and a portion of the Eleventh Cavalry will probably be used in making the picture. Richard Travers, of Chicago, will play a leading role in the production, and will be assisted by Capt. Calvert, Lillian Drew and other well known actors and actresses. Trouble will probably be experienced in keeping the younger generation out of the film, as it is expected that many Chattanoogians will endeavor to see the reproduction of the famous battle while enacted.

OTHER ESSANAY PICTURES.

Mr. Travers has come to Chattanooga especially to take part in another Essanay production entitled "Dynamite Special." This picture has been postponed for the time being, however, as some of the details, such as dynamiting an express train or two, have not been arranged for. Following the production of the Chicamauga pictures Mr. Travers will return to Chicago to take part in Viola Allen's production of "The Little White Sister," and later will return to Chattanooga to produce the "Dynamite Special."

CHANGE AT VENDOME LIKED.

At the Vendome, of Nashville, the change to pictures has proven popular. The theater has already proven an ideal moving picture house. It is comfortable and convenient, and with its new ventilating system coolness is assured in the hottest weather. The house is naturally arranged in a far more elaborate and expensive manner than is the average moving picture theater, but the patrons are given these added advantages at the price of admission to the cheaper houses. "On the Night Stage," the Mutual production in which Robert Edeson takes the leading role, was one of the first pictures to be shown at the theater. This picture has been well advertised and is going good.

NASHVILLE ORPHEUM WILL BE PICTURE HOUSE.

The Orpheum is to be a picture house not only for the summer months, as we erroniously stated in this column on May 1, but will be devoted exclusively to films hereafter summer and winter, spring and autumn. Roy Shelton, vice-president and general manager of the Dixie Amusement Company of Nashville, Tenn., has written to the World to that effect. The house is having a very successful week with "The Clemenceau Case" and will play it for the entire week. Other features of like size and quality will follow. A six-piece orchestra furnishes the accompaniment. Success seems to be assured to the house.

TENNESSEE BRIEF NOTES.

Moving picture houses are specializing just now upon Tennessee-made pictures in a number of cases. The first productions of the company of Essanay actors, located on Signal Mountain, near Chattanooga, Tenn., are expected to "go big" throughout the state. The first of these pictures made was "A Lesson in Romance." This picture was shown as soon as completed at the Majestic theater, under the auspices of the Chattanooga King's Daughters' Society, the proceeds going for the benefit of the Children's Refuge, a home for orphans. The admission price for this picture was 25 cents, and four shows were given, two in the afternoon and two at night. Commercial pictures taken in Tennessee are also being shown at various points with good results.

John M. Dean, chairman of the Memphis Board of Censorship, formally passed upon the Memphis moving picture film entitled "Cotton Bolls and Wedding Bells," on Saturday night, May 1. Viewing this film was really a matter of formality, as it was clean throughout and was largely a commercial production. The picture was first shown at The Lyceum theater on Sunday and throughout the following week. Interest in the picture was keen and Miss Clarkson and a number of residents of Clarksville, Miss., came to Memphis to see the first run. Miss Clarkson was the leading lady in the play.

The Glendale Zoo, at Nashville, Tenn., was formally opened for the 1915 season on the afternoon of May 2. The Glendale Zoo theater, a moving picture house, is one of the main attractions of the park. A big program of special interest to children was arranged for the opening day. Prizes and souvenirs were given away at the big opening. The park has been greatly improved, the illuminations enlarged and a greater number of animals installed in the various cages.

INDIANA NEWS LETTER.

By Special to Moving Picture World from Indiana Trade News Service.

INDIANA managers of moving picture shows have been notified by the state fire inspection bureau that boys wearing roller skates must not be admitted to the theaters. The roller skate craze has hit the state hard and children have had a habit of wearing their skates into the theaters, a practice regarded as dangerous.

The airdome, Warsaw, Ind., opened the season May 1.

The Princess theater, Rensselaer, Ind., has just successfully passed through a baby show. The prize contest proved a great stimulant to attendance.

Manager Boyer, of the Kendalville, Ind., opera house, will operate a moving picture show every night from now on, according to his announcement. The season for legitimate attractions is about over, and Manager Boyer says that the movies have always pulled well for him on open Saturday nights, so he proposes to use them every night.

Frank J. Rembusch, mirror screen and motion picture manufacturer at Shelbyville, Ind., will add a roof garden to his demonstrating theater within the next few months.

Maurice Less, owner of the American, the fine new picture theater in Terre Haute, Ind., has made a change in prices, and is now making the admission 10 cents to any part of the house, matinee or night. Box seats can be reserved at the same rate.

The Orpheum theater, Elkhart, has closed its vaudeville season and expects shortly to reopen with all picture program.

Mrs. Chares Krieger, Valparaiso, Ind., the first woman in the northern part of the state to operate a jitney show, is dead of heart disease.

Education by pictures is to become a permanent feature of the Connersville High School, Connersville, Ind., science department.

Walter Downey is remodeling his Main street property in Princeton, Ind., and will open a picture theater in a few weeks.

The DeLuxe theater, Hammond, Ind., packed them in for the reception of film actors that accompanied the Essanay film, "The Song in the Dark." The players in reel life were seen in real life at the same time, as Miss Gerda Holmes and Mrs. Rapley Holmes, Bobby Bolder and Lester Cuneo had part in the original production of the film.

The police at Columbus, Ind., stopped an exhibition of supposed Johnson-Willard fight pictures.

Henry K. Burton, manager of the English opera house, the Isis and the Lyric theaters, properties owned and leased by Barton & Olsen, has leased the new house in Greenfield, Ind., now being built by A. L. New.

NEW KRITERION MANAGER.

David Bershon, who has been in charge of the San Francisco branch of the California Kriterion; at 111 Golden Gate avenue, since the establishment of this office, has resigned and has been succeeded in this capacity by W. W. Ely.

TO ISSUE STOCK.

The Turner & Dahnken Controlling Co., of San Francisco, has made application to the Commissioner of Corporations for permission to sell 200,000 shares of preferred stock at a par value of $5 per share. The money to be secured from the sale of stock is to be used in fitting up and operating new houses in several coast cities not covered at the present time. Statements have been filed showing that the profits of the corporation for 1914 were $122,372.

IN SAN FRANCISCO.

Davis Bros. Poster Exchange has issued a unique Mary Pickford one-sheet with interchangeable title, which is meeting with considerable favor here, especially since all the reissues of Mary Pickford pictures are now being released in the regular service of the General Film Company.

The Arcade Amusement Company, of which M. A. Fisher is manager, has opened a $100,000 amusement hall at Eddy and Jones streets. It will be used primarily as a dancing pavilion, but is also arranged for moving picture entertainments.

The operating room of the new Hippodrome theater has been fitted with two Powers cameragraphs No. 6A by Walter Preddey, who has also furnished a Powers equipment for the San Joaquin Valley Counties building, at San Diego.

Mrs. May Pettengill was a visitor here this week from Eureka. Cal., arranging for service.

The great Selig production "The Spoilers," has been booked for an indefinite run at the Filmland theater on the Zone at the Panama-Pacific Exposition.

CALIFORNIA NOTES.

The Arlington, at Tracy, Cal., is now being conducted by Charles Fraler, who has placed an order with George Metcalfe, of San Francisco, for a new Powers cameragraph No. 6A.

A company has been organized by Messrs. Klink, Deacon & Barry to conduct the Princess theater, at Oakland, Cal. Two Powers cameragraphs No. 6A have been installed.

W. C. Kolthoff, formerly of Stockton, Cal., is arranging for the erection of several airdomes in the upper San Joaquin Valley.

W. Thompson, manager of the Theater Visalis and the "The" theater, at Visalia, Cal., is planning to erect an airdome on Main street, with a seating capacity of 500.

Charles Moser, a well known operator and former exhibitor, is to have charge of the new moving picture house being erected at Telegraph avenue and 41st street, Oakland, Cal.

A Wagner motor-generator set has been installed in the Bell theater, at Redwood City, Cal., by Walter Preddey, of San Francisco.

H. C. Schmidt has just installed a fine $7,500 organ in his handsome photo-play house, the Marquee, at Palo Alto, Cal.

William Elliott, former owner of the Swastika theater, at Sausalito, Cal., is erecting a new theater at that place, and will open this about the middle of May.

The Marquee theater, at Oakland, Cal., has been taken over by Auslen & Sons, formrly of the Home theater, of that city.

J. W. Wright, manager and owner of the Dreamland, at Riverbank, Cal., is preparing to enlarge the capacity of the house to 600.

The San Jose Film Company, of San Jose, Cal., has been granted a temporary permit by the Commissioner of Corporations to sell 25,000 shares of stock.

No State Censorship

In California, General Public Wants No State Interference with Censoring Films —Public Debate in Berkeley Shows Strong Opinion Against It—Press and Public Agree on Its Dangers—Local Authorities Have Ample Power.

By T. A. Church, San Francisco Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE agitation that has been under way in a number of California cities of late for the establishment of local boards of censorship does not seem to have made much headway, and it is not likely that any legislation will be passed for the formation of such bodies. The public debate on film censorship held recently at the Shattuck Hotel, Berkeley, Cal., a leading suburb of San Francisco, brought forcibly to the front the fact that the general public is not in favor of regulation of this character and practically all of the addresses that were made were against the proposition. That the present police powers in that city are ample to cope with any situation that may arise may be judged from the fact that the chief of police recently informed a leading exhibitor that it would be unwise for him to book "The Clansman" as the presentation of this production would not be allowed.

At Fresno, Cal., the agitation for local censorship has been even stronger than it has been at Berkeley, but from present indications there is no danger of adverse legislation along this line there. The press of that city, scenting in the agitation for film censorship a movement for the censorship of news, threw open the columns of its daily publications to discussions of the subject, and several splendid articles appeared from the pens of leading citizens expressing opposition to the plan. In other localities plans for censorship have been nipped in the bud and invariably the agitation has been stopped when it has been made clear that public opinion has been against the proposition.

JURY DECIDES "HYPOCRITES" NOT IMMORAL.

A stubborn attempt was recently made at San Jose, Cal., by Mayor F. R. Husted, Acting Chief of Police Dave W. Campbell and members of the Board of Police and Fire Commissioners, constituting a board of censorship, to stop the showing of the photoplay "Hypocrites," scheduled to be shown at the Theater De Luxe during the last week in April, and the right to display the picture was established only after a jury trial had been held. Immediately upon the announcement that this picture was to be shown, efforts were made to have the booking cancelled, but without avail. Before exhibition to the general public it was displayed before the board of censorship and other city officials and William F. Hanell, manager of the theater, was warned that it could not be exhibited as it was immoral.

The warning was disregarded and after several ineffectual attempts to stop the show the films were finally seized about the close of the first day's performance. The case was called for trial the following day and City Attorney Earl Lamb for the prosecution made the contention that the display of any nude human figure on the moving picture screen constituted a violation of the city ordinance and called for police censorship. He sought to exclude the introduction of the pictures as evidence, but this was insisted upon by the defense, as well as a jury trial. The theater was cleared in the midst of the afternoon performance and the jury and court witnessed an exhibition of the films, with the result that a unanimous verdice of "not guilty" was at once returned. The films were at once returned to Manager Hanell and were shown to packed houses during the rest of the engagement of four days.

Judge Dougherty held that the complaint as drawn by the city attorney involved other issues that merely the question as to whether Hanell had refused to obey the order of suppression, and agreed that the pictures themselves should be inspected by the jury. The attorney for the defense tore the opening argument of the prosecuting attorney to shreds and called attention to the fact that he section of the city ordinance prohibiting the display of a nude figure on the screen also contained the qualifying clause: "In such manner or details as tends to corrupt public morals."

The objection to the picture at San Jose was based entirely on religious grounds, but the jury decided that no direct attack was made on any particular church or creed and some publicly advised that all see it who possibly could do so.

BUYS BILLPOSTING PLANTS AND THEATER.

Foster & Kleiser, bill posters and outdoor advertisers of Portland, Seattle and Tacoma, have purchased the plant of the J. Charles Green Company, of San Francisco, and this branch will be in charge of A. F. Lausen, Jr., formerly manager of the Tacoma office. The California purchase includes plants at San Francisco, Fresno, Stockton, San Jose and other large cities in Northern California, as well as the Valencia theater, a vaudeville and moving picture house at Valencia and Thirteenth streets, San Francisco.

STUDIO ON EXPOSITION ZONE IS MAKING PICTURES.

The Exposition Players' Corporation, which is under the management of George Collins, has opened a studio on the Zone, at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, adjoining the Filmland theater, and here the general public is given an idea of the manner in which moving pictures are made. Part of the talent used has been secured from the 101 Ranch, which has a concession close at hand.

OTHER SAN FRANCISCO NOTES.

A fine Edison phonograph has been presented to the Screen Club, of San Francisco, by the Eilers Music House, for use in the new club rooms.

W. E. Legg, an experienced exhibitor of Northern California, has taken over the Cosy theater, on Fillmore street, and has installed new Powers projection equipment.

A moving picture theater has been completed in the Iowa pavilion at the Exposition and has been fitted up with a Powers Cameragraph No. 6A.

The Hippodrome has succeeded the Gaiety, on O'Farrell street, and has been opened with vaudeville and moving pictures at 10 cents and 15 cents. The moving picture attraction for the first week was "The Heart of a Painted Woman."

Irving Lesser, of the Golden Gate Film Exchange, Inc., 234 Eddy street, is convalescing at a local hospital, where he has undergone an operation for appendicitis.

D. H. Bergh, of the Chicago office of George Kleine, has returned to this city from a trip to the Northwest and will shortly leave for the East.

Children's Shows Popular

In Grand Rapids, Mich., Special Shows for Children at the Colonial, Under Patronage of Drama League and Other Local Societies, Brought Out 2,500 Youngsters on First Day—Pictures Given—Effects of Such Shows.

By Frank H. Madison, Michigan Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH., is also seeing the beginning of what is fast becoming a very important field of motion picture activity, viz., special programs of interesting and instructive pictures chosen for children and given in the regular theaters at special times. The really important element in the movement is the cooperation between the exhibitors and the civic and community organizations who supervise the shows and in large part provide the audience of children. In practical effect it is the public choosing its own offerings and paying for them as a person buying books at a store rather than as a person buying a magazine and paying before the contents are known. The pictures chosen will have some influence on the exhibitor in making his own choice for his regular shows and this will be the more marked if the special shows are popular and well attended. In turn it will reflect back on the manufacturing of pictures.

The Drama League and other local organizations of Grand Rapids have chosen the Colonial theater for experiments with these special Saturday morning shows for children. For the first Saturday the pictures that were chosen were "The War of the Lilliputians," "Yellowstone Park," "The Legend of the Lone Pine," "Col. Heeza Liar—Ghostbreaker," "Sleeping Beauty" and "The Great Eared Bat." The first day 2,500 youngsters appeared and it was necessary to give two shows to accommodate them.

MICHIGAN BRIEFS.

A band concert in Eaton Rapids was cancelled recently because there were Mary Pickford pictures at the Bijou. Mrs. Minnie Woodruff has installed a new Powers 6-A in the Bijou. This house has booked "Neptune's Daughter" for an early date.

Manager Pierce, who opened the New Colonial at Paw Paw, had four free nights of the "Creation" film.

Films of the state Y. M. C. A. camp were shown two days at the Auditorium in Saginaw to help the local boys' camping fund.

James B. Starker has taken over the Gem at Holly, which has been operated by R. G. Hinkley.

A. L. Favier made a good impression at Alpena by opening his recently acquired Rex with a benefit for the Alpena Hospital association. "The Merchant of Venice" was the feature.

George Drinkwater and Ensign Olmstead have taken over the Venetian at Coldwater formerly operated by Dennis Vanes.

DRUM HOLDS GET-TOGETHER MEETINGS.

By Clarence L. Linz, Washington Correspondent of The Moving Picture World.

MANAGER Ben. C. Drum, of the World Film Corporation, has adopted a plan for holding weekly get-together meetings of the employees of the local office similar to those held by him while manager of an exchange in Denver, Colo. The World correspondent was a guest at the first of these which marked the opening of the new quarters on E Street and was greatly surprised at the manner in which the members of the force entered into the spirit of the meeting. Many good ideas were advanced for cutting down needless wasting of energy in the various parts of the work of the exchange and plans were made for the systematizing of all branches. Mr. Drum addressed the employees telling them of the benefits to be derived from getting together. A paper was read on the subject of "System" following which a general discussion of the subject was had, each of those present being called up to state his or her views. An elaborate repast followed the meeting, and it was at quite a late hour that a halt was called to a most pleasant evening.

BROKEN SEAT BRINGS SUIT.

Suit has been entered in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia against the Plaza Amusement and Tom Moore by Curtis Clagett, who seeks to recover damages in the sum of $10,000 for injuries alleged to have been suffered by him while a patron of the motion picture show operated by the defendants at 434 Ninth street, Northwest.

The plaintiff asserts that he entered this theater on April 12, 1915, and was in the act of seating himself when the seat broke with a sudden jar, gave way, and fell, causing him to fall suddenly and unexpectedly about 20 inches to the concrete floor of the theater, and against the irons that supported the bottom of the seat. He alleges that as a result of the accident one of his ribs was fractured and that he was otherwise bruised, lacerated, and injured in other parts of his body.

THE VICTORIA IN CHARLOTTEVILLE CHANGED.

Plans have been approved by the owners of the Victoria theater in Charlotteville, Va., by which it is intended to increase the seating capacity from 300 to 800. To accomplish this the rear wall of the theater is to be torn out and the side walls extended back a number of feet, there being a large vacant lot at the rear which the company possesses. This in itself will double the number of seats but a further addition of 200 is to be made by the building of a balcony to accommodate colored patrons. This work will require the remodeling of the interior and while the workmen are busy on this a modern ventilating system will be installed. Consideration is also being given to the installation of an electrical plant.

The screen, now at the rear of the house, is to be replaced by one at the front and the seats all turned around. It is believed that this will add to the security from fire accidents and will serve as an additional advertisement. With the orchestra at the front of the house, passersby cannot fail to hear the music and thus will be created a further desire to attend the show. In the winter season a three piece orchestra is employed. Two Powers 6A machines are used in projecting the pictures. This is a 10-cent house running Paramount, Box Office and other big features.

REVIVAL MEETINGS HURT PICTURE SHOWS.

The exhibitors in the smaller cities and towns of Virginia are reporting it to be extremely hard at present to do business because of the religious revivals which are attracting the people of those places. Box office receipts have dropped off greatly and even the large features fail to draw in some instances. This applies both to those houses catering to the white and to the colored population. The seriousness of these competitive gatherings can well be imagined when it is said that some of them will be in progress for up to two months.

WASHINGTON BRIEFS.

Sidney B. Lust, manager of the local branch of the United Film Service, accompanied the group of Washington merchants who made a trade boosting trip in Maryland and Virginia waters. There were more than one hundred representative men in the party, which went by special train to Baltimore where they embarked on the steamer "Three Rivers," for a trip into Chesapeake Bay waters. Stops were made at all of the important river landings where band concerts were given and advertising matter boosting Washington was distributed. Mr. Lust carried with him a number of motion picture films and an automatograph with the intention of giving the members a show all of their own.

John W. Hamilton, proprietor of the Mailton Hotel in Martinsville, Va., will open his new motion picture theater of the same name during the week.

C. F. Senning, traveling representative of the Fox Film Corporation, has returned to the headquarters here after an extended trip through Virginia and North Carolina.

N. J. Hoerrmann, who operates the Palace theater in Petersburg, Va., reports the taking over by his company of the Bijou and Lyric theaters in the same city.

A Carlos, representing the Fox Film Corporation, from New York, and George Denbow, from that concern's Philadelphia office, were seen in the Capital last week.

Ben. F. Pitts, now operating a motion picture show in the old opera house in Fredericksburg, Va., will shortly open a modern motion picture theater in that place.

Pearce & Scheck are reported to be doing an exceptionally fine business with big features at the Hippodrome in Baltimore, Md.

J. H. Kidd is reported to have opened the American theater in Bristol, Va.

The Jefferson theater in Charlotteville, Va., of which the Kendler, Zimmerman Company are the operators, plan to reopen that house. It has been remodeled following a fire recently. F. W. Twyman is manager of this theater.

It is reported that Harvey & Aikers now have control of the Colonial theater in West Radford, Va.

NOTES FROM HAWAII.

Special to Moving Picture World from Pacific News Service.

COUNTIES in Hawaii may have local option on the question of Sunday moving picture shows. The Senate at Honolulu passed on third reading Senate Bill No. 144, which provides:

"The boards of supervisors of the several counties and the city and county of Honolulu are hereby authorized and empowered to provide by ordinance for the exhibiting of moving pictures on Sundays after the hour of 6.30 p. m. under such restrictions as they may prescribe."

The Sunday show bill offered by Representative-Exhibitor Fernandez was killed after it had passed the house without protest. A determined fight on the Fernandez bill was made in the Senate by a delegation representing practically every religious organization in Honolulu. E. K. Fernandez and Joel C. Cohen and J. A. Magoon, of the Consolidated Amusement Company, spoke for the bill. The Senate military committee considered a territory-wide election on the issue of Sunday shows, but this was deemed too costly.

Joel C. Cohen, president of the Consolidated Amusement Company, at Honolulu, recently had the members of the legislature, territorial, county and city officials as his guests at a showing of "The County Chairman" at the Bijou.

Equipment of the Hawaii moving picture theater on Hotel street in Honolulu was sold to A. R. Oberle to satisfy a mortgage.

Information issued from the Volcano House that a camera man named Porter planned to be lowered into the crater of Halemaumau by a wire cable to get moving pictures of the lake of fire.

Films of the Harvard-Yale football game, shown in private to the Harvard Club of Hawaii, were later exhibited to the public at Bishop hall in Honolulu.

OREGON NEWS LETTER.

Special to Moving Picture World by Northwest News Service.

A BILL to prohibit Sunday commercialized amusements will be asked in Oregon. The Commission on Sunday Observance of the Federal churches of Christ proposes to inaugurate a movement for an initiative ballot at the next state election. It will be termed a Sunday rest law. An educational campaign probably will be started early.

Films of the Rose Festival at Portland are now being shown in the Oregon building at the San Francisco Fair.

The Oregon theater at Salem gave two nights' proceeds to the Commercial Club for the purchase of a huge electric sign.

DETROIT BRIEFS.

C. Howard Crane, Detroit architect, with offices in the Dime Bank building, is working on plans for a new theater costing $25,000 for the Schlossman Amusement company of Muskegon, Mich. It will be used for high-class motion pictures.

The Majestic, Detroit's largest photoplay house, has slightly altered its policy. World Film pictures are now being shown for three days of each week; the new Vitagraph - Essanay - Selig combination features for the ensuing three days, and specials on Sunday.

C. W. Graham, formerly manager of the Addison, has been appointed assistant manager of the new Majestic theater.

A. W. Blankmeyer, proprietor of the Grand Circus theater, and president of the Michigan Theaters Corporation, organized for the purpose of dealing direct with producers, was in New York on May 5, negotiating for film for the corporation.

Detroit's only bridge to Belle Isle, the most popular park in the city, visited by thousands of people winter and summer, was completely destroyed on Tuesday, April 27. Joe Klein, manager of the Detroit World Film office, heard of the fire a few minutes after it started and sent a man out to get pictures. The man was successful, securing about 400 feet. This film was shown at the Liberty the week of May 1st. In this connection it might be said that the Knickerbocker theater, recently opened, is located at the Belle Isle bridge approach and had figured largely on patronage from the throngs going back and forth from the park. Now that the bridge is useless, the crowds in that section of the city have diminished, and yet Manager Bertrand of this playhouse reports that business is as good as ever. In fact he has changed the policy of the theater, and instead of only giving one performance in the afternoon and two at night, he is running continuously from noon until eleven at night, and finds that it is more profitable.

The Michigan Association of the Deaf holds its annual convention at Flint, Mich., June 11 to 16, one of the entertainment features will be the exhibition of motion pictures of addresses in sign language by nationally prominent educators.

DIRECTORS OF MILES-DETROIT CO. ELECTED.

The Miles-Detroit Theater Company stockholders at their annual meeting, April 27, elected the following directors: E. W. Voigt, S. X. Goldberg, Dr. Paul C. Dulitz, S. W. Chase and John J. Cash, of Chicago. Mr. Voigt was re-elected president and Mr. Goldberg vice-president, while Dr. Dulitz was re-elected house manager. A good surplus was reported in the treasury after the payment of the quarterly dividend of three per cent. in April.

No Michigan Censorship

Legislature Adjourns for the Year—Bill Asking for Board of Censors Not Even Seriously Considered—Fire Inspections Bill the Only Picture Show Measure Passed—Grand Rapids Censoring Film—Detroit Exhibitors Discriminate.

By Jacob Smith, Detroit (503 Free Press Bldg.) Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE 1915 session of the Michigan legislature has adjourned and unless a special session is called the legislature will not convene again until January, 1917. This is really good news to the exhibitors, producers and exchanges who comprise the motion picture industry. Although a few months ago the industry was threatened with drastic legislation, such as a censorship bill, the only bill that passed both the senate and house affecting motion pictures was one which calls for the inspection of these theaters once every six months for which the exhibitor pays ten dollars for each inspection, and that not more than twenty dollars shall be spent in any one year by exhibitors. This policy has been pursued by the state fire marshal's office for the past two years, and while efforts were made by leading members of the Michigan Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors to have the number of inspections reduced, the legislature seem determined to approve the policy of the fire marshal, believing that every possible precaution should be taken to prevent any disasters due to fires. The motion picture industry can be thankful that no other drastic bills were passed. It certainly shows that the tendency of Michigan legislators has been to go slow and to "let well enough alone." For a while exhibitors were very much worried over the possibility of the censorship bill becoming a law, but when it came up for discussion it was given practically no consideration and was "dead" before anybody realized that such a bill had been presented.

Talking of censorship, it might be said further that there is only one place in the entire state of Michigan where censorship is at all favored and that is the city of Grand Rapids. A temporary censorship committee was appointed some months ago comprising five women who reported back to the mayor that pictures bordering on vice and sensationalism were being shown in large quantities. The council is now considering the proposition of passing an ordinance that will call for the appointment of a permanent committee to censor all pictures.

As for the city of Detroit, censorship is a thing of the past. Officer Potter did good work when he was censoring pictures for the police department, but today the exhibitors, with very few and rare exceptions, are themselves acting as censors and are passing up pictures which, in their opinion, might prove offensive. Just this week, one of the largest exhibitors on Woodward avenue refused to book a well-known feature because it felt that certain scenes might be found fault with. Detroit exhibitors are heartily in accord with the arguments expressed by the Moving Picture World on this question of censorship and believe that censorship more than anything else will rob the industry of the great progress it is sure to make if left alone.

GOT HIS CHANCE AND MADE GOOD.

There is an old adage that "opportunity knocks at the door of every person at least once during their lifetime." A thorough believer in this adage is Carl W. Aller, manager of the Liberty theater, who has been acting in that capacity for about six months. Carl is probably one of the best known drummers in the city, having for years played with all of the best orchestras. When the Columbia opened three years ago he was engaged to handle the drum and has been in that position until his recent promotion to the Liberty. The Columbia is a vaudeville and picture house and when M. W. Schoenherr, the manager, needed an assistant he decided, after talking things over with John H. Kunsky, owner of the house, to give Mr. Aller a trial. The long and short of the story is that Carl made good. When a few months later there was a vacancy at the Liberty, Mr. Kunsky gave him another chance. Mr. Aller is now the manager and doing very well. It only proves that many a man can make good if given the opportunity. The Liberty has just been redecorated, and improved by a new stage setting. It represents New York harbor, showing the Statue of Liberty. All of the beautiful night effects of the harbor are brought out very distinctly, and the setting never fails to bring applause at the opening of each performance.

MANAGER OF GARDEN THEATER ILL.

A. C. Hoganson, manager of the Garden theater, is seriously ill and indications are that he will be confined to his home for some time yet. About the middle of April he was taken sick and the symptoms indicated a slight touch of typhoid fever. He was soon on the road to recovery, but had a relapse on Sunday, May 2. Managers of the other Kunsky theaters made up a fund and sent Mr. Hoganson a beautiful floral tribute on May 6 with a card wishing him speedy recovery.

UNITED FILM SERVICE CO.

The United Film Service Co. of Michigan, with headquarters in Detroit, has been capitalized at $50,000 to control the output of the United Film Co. of New York in Michigan. Headquarters are at No. 7 Campau building, although it is understood the company is now looking for larger quarters. Officers of the Michigan company are: Mr. Louis T. Schurer, president and Nicholas Palley, secretary. During the past month the company has made two valuable acquisitions in its sales department, Herbert F. Fowser as road man and Rex Minkley for the city. Mr. Fowser was formerly an exhibitor in Lansing, and for the past year managed the Luna theater in Detroit. He was also president of the Detroit Motion Picture Exhibitors' League for six months, succeeding Peter Jeup, who resigned. Mr. Minkley for the past year has been manager of the Forest theater at Woodward and Forest avenues.

SPECIAL SHOW OF "ETERNAL CITY" AT THE WASHINGTON.

The Washington theater was the scene of quite a gathering of stage celebreties on Friday evening, April 30. During that week Thos. Holden was in the city, playing the leading role with the "Peg O' My Heart" company at the Garrick theater. Mr. Holden is the same person who played the role of David with Pauline Frederick in "The Eternal City." Mr. Holden had never seen this picture. Mr. Kunsky, who owns the Washington, learned of this, and immediately arranged to give a special exhibition of this picture, and invited Mr. Holden and all of the members of the Peg company. The Washington orchestra volunteered its services, and the performances started at 11.30 p. m. While the picture was being shown Mr. Holden explained various scenes in Italy, which made the film much more interesting. Mr. Holden, by the way, will make his second film appearance in a picture called "Sold," playing opposite Pauline Frederick.

Picture Bill Amended

Pennsylvania Legislature Drops from Censorship Bill the Objectionable Clause, "Or Prejudice the Public Mind"—Amendment Offered by Representative James H. Maurer—Would Have Given Despotic Powers to Censors of Pictures.

Special to Moving Picture World from Philadelphia News Service.

REPRESENTATIVE James H. Maurer, from Reading, Pa., recently furnished one of the legislative news items for the week shortly past by having the moving picture bill referring to censorship amended so as to strike out the words, "or prejudice the public mind."

Mr. Maurer declared that he was prompted in his action by several reasons. In the first place, he remarked, the phrase is ambiguous, undefinable and unstatutory. The power it conveys to the censors is wholly discretionary. It creates a board of despots instead of a board of censors. The board certainly has sufficient power upon being authorized to prevent the exposure of pictures that are sacrilegious, obscene, indecent, immoral or might endanger the public peace, but if the eliminated phrase had been left in the measure they would have enjoyed an unlimited authority and it is yet to be proven where any benefit has been derived in a case where any set of persons were clothed with absolute authority. By the power of that little phrase they need give no other reason for disqualifying a picture other than that it tends "to prejudice the public mind." Every picture is, in some sense, instructive as well as amusing, and every picture would thus be subject to the "prejudices" in the minds of the censors, and from them there could be no appeal. "Prejudice the public mind" is elastic enough in its connotation to be stretched to fit any condition, and until men have become angels and infallible I shall fight against giving to any one or three of them any such prerogative.

MUSICAL ACCOMPANIMENT AT THE STANLEY.

The Stanley theater, Philadelphia, is credited with being the first of the large and standard photo-play houses to recognize the importance of interpretative music in conjunction with the silent drama or comedy, and to intelligently and effectively combine the two.

To successfully accomplish this was no small task. As a first step Harry W. Meyer, one of the leading members of the Philadelphia Orchestra, was engaged, instructed to organize the Stanley Symphony Orchestra, and practically given carte blanche as regarded the selection of players and in the matter of expense.

His first moves were to engage Albert F. Wayne, of the Chicago Opera Company, as Assistant Director, and Richard F. Bach and Rollo Maitland as organists. His drafts upon the Philadelphia Orchestra included Alfred Lorenz, F. C. Cook and David Nowinski, first violins; John Fasshauer, bass; Hans Schlegel, flute; Fred Wagner, cornet; William Schlechtweg, trombone. The Chicago Opera Company, in addition to Mr. Wayne, clarinet; provided Benj. D'Amelio; Ignatious Kavamaugh, the famous pianist of the Church of the Epiphany, was secured, and from other outside sources there were engaged Walter Schmidt, cello; and Louis Eschert, timpany.

After organization, weeks were spent in experiment and practice, in the selection of music and in rehearsal in connection with the film plays to be produced. And so perfect in action and union has the orchestra become that it is able to interpret in music the thoughts and action incident to the photo-plays, standard comedies, scenics and current event pictures, and the melody strains are actually made to intelligently and understandingly take the place of the ordinarily spoken words, to such an extent that explanatory screen announcements are seldom if ever found necessary at the Stanley.

NEW SUMMER POLICY AT CHESTNUT STREET OPERA HOUSE

Cream of the Programs to Be Offered at Popular Prices.

Beginning Monday, May 10, the management of the Chestnut Street Opera House announces a new summer policy, which will consist of the presentation of a bountiful program of single and multiple reel comedies and dramas. The demand for a great variety of photoplays is ever increasing and this fact led to the adoption of the new policy, which, it is thought, will provide a summer entertainment even more desirable than the longer feature pictures which have been so successfully shown at the house, during the winter months.

Service has been secured from the Universal, General and Mutual Film Companies, and the cream of the releases from all three will be shown at the Opera House. It is predicted that a feature of the new policy will be the excellent musical accompaniments offered by the capable performer of the Unit Orchestra. This organist has been notably successful in furnishing appropriate and illuminating musical commentaries on the pictures.

This change in the policy of the theater is coincident with a change in the management. Mr. Wilson, formerly manager of the Park theater and special representative of the General Film Company, is now in charge and announces that the price of admission will be five and ten cents and that a continuous performance will be shown from 11 a. m. to 11 p. m.

CROSS KEYS THEATER SHOWS PICTURES.

Temporarily giving over its vaudeville policy, the Cross Keys theater, 59th and Market streets, recently began a season of motion pitcure presentations. As an initial offering the film version of Hall Caine's "The Eternal City" was shown. Extra equipment has been added to the theater within the past several weeks in order to insure the success of the showing of the motion pictures, a new 6A machine and several large brass frames having been purchased from the Calehuff Supply Company, 1301 Race street.

SAVOY AT ATLANTIC CITY TO BE PICTURE HOUSE.

The Savoy theater, Atlantic City, N. J., well known among theater goers at the seashore resort for many years as the home of good shows, will shortly be opened as a first class moving picture theater. The theater has been completely remodeled throughout and everything possible has been done in order to make the place attractive and cool during the summer months. Beautiful oil pictures have been purchased and hung on the walls and large lamps like those used in the decorating of the new Arcadia theater, Philadelphia, have been installed. It will be the policy of Mr. Herbert J. Elliot, under whose direction the new venture will be launched, to run nothing but feature films. Many of the interior decorations and also the moving picture machines for the new theater have been furnished by the Philadelphia Moving Picture Supply Company, 1233 Vine street.

PHILADELPHIA BRIEFS.

A new moving picture theater will be added to the list of attractions at Atlantic City, N. J., this summer. The new structure, which will be known as the Anita, is located at Florida avenue and the Boardwalk, and will be under the management of A. S. Siracusa. With a seating capacity of 780 persons and running nothing but the best pictures on the market the new theater should be a success.

Plans are being prepared by J. Earl Hickman, architect, for the erection of a moving picture theater, for Constantine X. Mautes, at 545 Penn street, Reading, Pa. The new structure will be one story in height and 40x150 feet.

The new Theatorium theater, at Shamokin, Pa., was recently opened to the public. This addition to the moving picture theaters of the State is under the management of Mr. Chamberlin and will display nothing but the best pictures obtainable.

Lewis M. Swaab, proprietor of the Swaab Film Supply Company, 1327 Vine street, announces that he has obtained the agency for the Harris Player Piano for the vicinity of Philadelphia.

M. L. Shannon, manager of the Plainfield Theater, Plainfield, N. J., recently wrote a letter to Mayor Calkins asking for permission to operate an open air moving picture theater on the vacant lot corner of East Front street and Watchung avenue.

Ashland, Pa., boasts of a new moving picture theater. The new structure, which is thoroughly modern and first class in every respect, is owned by Mr. Schreck who expects to win the good will and patronage of the people by the showing of first class pictures.

The motion picture theater, store and dwelling at 2907-13 North Fifth street, with the property in the rear facing on North Orkney street, was recently sold at auction for $29,000.

The motion picture theater at 733-37 Chelten avenue, near Chew street, was recently conveyed by the Walton Amusement Company to Mary A. Wright, subject to mortgages of $24,500. The property measures 54x154.9 feet, and is assessed at $30,000.

The Opera House, at West Chester, has recently been converted into a moving picture theater under the management of F. J. Meyer.

After having been thoroughly overhauled and remodeled, the moving picture theater at Fourth and Moore streets, will be reopened shortly, under the management of Mr. Saller. The practice of the new management will be to show nothing but first class feature films and it is expected that he will be successful in having capacity houses for some time to come. Mr. Saller is booking through the Philadelphia Exhibitors' League.

Great interest has been aroused in the city of Trenton by the showing of the picture entiled "Making a Convert," in connection with the Safety First campaign, which was recently launched at that place under A. J. Van Brunt, director of public safety for the Public Service Railroad Company.

Millard Brands and H. C. Dilliard, of East Bangor, recently leased the Stroud theater of East Stroudsburg for a period of one year. They will soon take posesssion of the theater, where they will conduct high-class moving picture shows. Mr. Brands formerly conducted the White City park, at Trenton, and also successfully operated a moving picture theater in Lambertville, N. J.

Announcement was recently made that Charles Marks, W. Ellwanger and C. Alma Boltz will make application on May 17 for the charter of an intended corporation to be called the Federal Film company, the character and object of which is the buying, selling, leasing, exhibiting and manufacturing of moving picture films.

C. N. Allen, Jr., and Michael J. Norton, of Plainfield, N. J., have dissolved partnership, after having been in the moving picture business for more than a year. Mr. Norton was forced to retire on account of a large increase in his electrical business which compelled him to devote all of his time in that direction. Mr. Allen recently sold his grocery and will devote himself entirely to the moving picture business.

Mark Haller has recently conveyed to Arthur I. Beilin the moving picture theater located on the corner of Seventh and McClellan streets, below Moore street, lot 50 feet by 100 feet, for a price which was not disclosed, subject to a mortgage of $14,000 and a second mortgage of $6,000, taken by the seller. The property is assessed at $30,000.

Close to one hundred motion picture actors and actresses of the Universal Film company recently visited Trenton for the purpose of getting realistic atmosphere for the production of "A Daughter of the Circus," and have been working in connection with the Frank A. Robbins show. Pictures were recently taken at the old Y. M. C. A. field. Miss Mary Fuller is starring in this new feature and is assisted by Matt Moore, Charles Ogle and Etinne Girardat. The principals have been stopping at the Hotel Windsor, accompanied by L. J. Henderson, who is directing the taking of the pictures.

The Central theater, Fourth and Market street, has recently been reopened under the management of Harry Silk. Mr. Silk expects to make the theater go and has completed a high-class booking for the next several weeks. This is the third time that the theater has been reopened, previous managements having failed to make a success of the place. Mr. Silk has the well wishes of his fellow contemporaries.

JACKSONVILLE STUDIO NOTES.

By Leon Louiso, Jacksonville Correspondent for the Moving Picture World.

MANAGING Director Arthur D. Hotaling of the Lubin studio will as usual take his company on May 16 to Atlantic City, where they will work during the summer. During his absence work will be commenced on the buildings and grounds and many changes will be made.

The roster of the Lubin Company is as follows: Billie Reeves; "Jolly" Mae Hotely, the Lubin international screen star; Patsy De Forest, who played the leads in the Patsy Bolivar series; Billy Potter and Effie Hartwell, of the vaudeville team Potter and Hartwell; Johnny Doyle, who has been one of the Fred Karno comedians for years; Ben Walker; Robin Williamson; Imy Webb; Imy Forrest; Katherine Hauser; Garry Hotaling and Leland Coutant are in charge of the camera work. Eddie Hoffner handles the property end of the studio and George Sherwood the carpenter work. Richard Bleynagel is the scenic artist and Carl Goodwin has charge of the automobiles.

Mrs. W. L. Lewis gave a farewell dinner to the ladies of the Lubin studio, Mae Hotely, being the guest of honor. The dinner party was held at the Theatrical Club rooms. The affair was occasioned by the debut of Baby Zoe Lewis, a talented tot, who has been on the legitimate stage and who appeared here recently for her first time in moving pictures in the comedy picture in which Billie Reeves and "Jolly" Mae Hotely are the co-stars, entitled "Just Like Kids." The affair was a very enjoyable one and those present enjoyed it immensely. Among others present were: Patsy De Forest, Imy Webb, Effie Hartwell, Imy Forest, Katherine Hauser, Leola Mae Hotaling and Mrs. Howard of the Aerial Howards act. The baby's work in the picture was very good and she has great promise for a big future.

The Kalem studio is a busy place with the three companies working. It is thought that there will be a busy summer's activities despite all so-called depression in the industry.

St. Louis Tent Show Bill

Bill Has Been Presented to City's Board of Aldermen That, If Passed, Will Prohibit Use of Tents for Moving Picture Shows—Outcome of Long Contest by City to Get Rid of Such.

By A. H. Giebler, St. Louis Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

A BILL prohibiting the use of tents for moving picture shows or theatrical performances was introduced in the Board of Aldermen on May 1 by Alderman Otto G. Koenig. The bill contains a provision making it effective on next Sept. 1 if it is enacted. This action was taken in response to a plea urged by Mayor Kiel in his annual message to the board a few weeks ago. The mayor declared that the use of tents for exhibition purposes should be legislated against, as they are hazardous to life in case of fire or a panic. This bill follows a long controversy with those tent shows that was noticed in this column a month ago.

FEATURE WEEK IN ST. LOUIS.

The week of May 2 was special feature week in St. Louis. "The Eternal City" was in its second week at the New Grand Central, Grand and Lucas avenues, showing to crowded houses at each performance. The film created much attention and comment.

The Columbia theater, Sixth and St. Charles streets, the leading vaudeville house of the city, closed its regular season on Sunday, May 2, and opened next day with "The Nigger," changing the admission from 15, 30, 50 and 75 cents, to 10 and 20 cents. The Columbia intends to run all summer with special moving picture features, changing the program only once a week.

The Hippodrome was in its second week as a moving picture feature house, with "The Heart of a Painted Woman." The Hippodrome is another large vaudeville house lately gone over to pictures, and intends to remain open all summer.

The Strand, next door to the Columbia, is showing Paramount features, changing program twice a week. The Broadway and the St. Charles, two theaters on opposite sides of St. Charles street, only a block away from the Strand, were advertising features for two days of the week.

The Penrose Garden advertised four features for the week, and many of the airdomes all over the city are showing large features instead of a mixed bill of vaudeville and pictures, as was the rule last summer. Nearly every airdome of importance shows at least one large feature a week, and the rule is that two or more are used, the five cent places raising the price to ten cents for those nights.

NEW EXCHANGE OPENED.

A new exchange has been opened at 205 North Tenth street by the Inter-State Feature Service, announcing that the arrangement for the distribution of films is complete in every particular. A feature is to be released weekly, among which is "Atlantis," in six reels, "Lay Down Your Arms," in four reels, and the German War pictures.

WITTMANN GOES TO KRITERION.

A. Wittmann, former manager of the Monroe theater, and later of the Paris Airdome, has given up the theatrical business and is now connected with the Kriterion Film Exchange of this city as traveling representative. Mr. Wittmann was a successful exhibitor, and understands thoroughly all phases of the moving picture business.

ST. LOUIS BRIEFS.

The Savoy airdome, Vandeventer and Morgan streets, opened on May 2 for the summer season with Marion Leonard in "Romany Rye." The airdome is next door to the Savoy theater, and under the same management, and has always maintained a mixed bill of moving pictures and vaudeville, but has now gone over to an all moving picture program.

The Paris airdome, on Morganford road and Juniata street, opened on May 12 with an all-picture program. The Paris is an independent outdoor theater, and is far away from any other moving picture house, so far that the people in the neighborhood can hardly wait for the opening in the spring, and are loath to see it close in the fall. The Paris was perhaps the last airdome to close for the season of 1914, showing to good audiences as late as the middle of October.

An airdome at 5814 Easton avenue has been purchased by William Forman and F. Linberg, and has been renamed the Kriterion, using Kriterion service. The place has been handsomely remodeled and decorated and will be one of the showplaces in that section of the city.

Woodland airdome, on Gravois and Morganford, opened for the summer on May 6 with a moving picture and dramatic stock program. The Woodland is in a good location, with practically no opposition nearer than Grand avenue, which is ten blocks or more away.

The Yale Poster Mounting Company was incorporated last week for $5,000. The company is under the active management of J. D. Bone, and is doing contract work for nearly every exchange in the city, as well as some out-of-town work.

The Lyric skydome, on Delmar and Taylor avenues, which opened on May 2, is the third amusement place operated by the Cornelius Amusement Company. The Lyric, on Sixth street, in the downtown district, and the West End Lyric, on Kings Highway, are well established houses. The new skydome was formerly known as the Bonita airdome, but the many changes made and the new decorations have made the place a "Garden Beautiful," as the advertisements read. The seating capacity is 3,000, and the program will consist of only high-class pictures, as is shown in the two other Lyrics. Mr. and Mrs. Cornelius give their entire time to looking after their string of three moving picture houses.

Moving pictures formed a part of an entertainment furnished to the students of the St. Louis College of Pharmacy, at the Army and Navy Club on April 30. Woods A. Caperton gave a lecture on "Modern Pharmaceutical Manufacturing," which was illustrated with 2,000 feet of moving pictures besides seventy-five stereoptican slides.

George Colovos, manager of the Fair theater, Grand and Cass avenues, has made extensive alterations in the entrance and lobby of his theater, thereby facilitating the handling of the crowd and adding to the comfort of the audience. Mr. Colovos has announced that he will build a new theater in the fall to take the place of the house now in use, and as soon as the airdome season is over he hopes to have the new building ready for business.

William Goldman prevented a panic in the St. Louis theater, Prairie and St. Louis avenues, on Sunday, May 2, when a messenger boy, age 15, cried "fire." Mr. Goldman, manager of the theater, had the young man arrested and assured his audience that it was all a practical joke, and as no sign of fire appeared, the show went on as if there had been no interruption. The St. Louis is a canvas topped theater.

The Bremen theater, 20th street and Bremen avenue, entertained its audience on April 28th and 29th with a very interesting act including a drill by the North St. Louis turn verein performers, in addition to the regular moving picture program, charging ten cents admission.

Sunday Shows in New York

As a Result of the Decision of the Court of Appeals Many Exhibitors in the State Will Open Their Theaters on Sabbath—Some Reformers Will Still Continue the Fight—Police vs. Decision in Albany.

By Billy Bison, Buffalo (229 Oxford Ave.) Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE number of Sunday shows in moving pictures throughout New York State will be greatly increased as a result of the recent decision of the Court of Appeals, which virtually rules that municipal authorities have no right to prevent shows on this day. In North Tonawanda, N. Y., however, Police Chief Ryan announced that he would still oppose Sunday shows. The authorities there hold that the decision of the Court of Appeals does not apply to that city inasmuch as the North Tonawanda charter gives the mayor the right to say under what conditions licenses for moving picture houses may be granted.

As a result of the Court of Appeals decision, Judge Benton in Supreme Court, Rochester, N. Y., has sustained a writ of habeas corpus invoked in behalf of Morris Lichterman, who operated a moving picture theater on Sunday to test the right of the Rochester authorities to stop him. The Ministerial Union of that city is taking concerted action against the opening of these amusement places on Sunday. According to the ministers, if the moving picture people want to give entertainments, they are free to do so, if no fee is charged. The ministers contend that the law, as it stands, forbids profit-making shows on Sunday. The moving picture men in Rochester, on the other hand, are jubilant over the Court of Appeals decision. John Kinney, who represents the theater proprietors in that city, said in part: "The people want Sunday shows. The picture houses do not have to compete with the churches. A person can attend religious services and also get some pleasure on his day of rest. Moving picture men will be glad to run a slide at the Saturday night shows urging attendance at church the following day."

Despite the Court of Appeals decision, Police Chief Hyatt of Albany has issued this statement: "If proprietors of moving picture houses have performances on Sundays, their licenses will be revoked." The Albany police contend that the moving picture men have no right to have their theaters open on Sunday. The city gives the licenses for these places, it is pointed out, and the city alone has the right to revoke these licenses.

The proprietors of moving picture shows in Watervliet, N. Y., are anxious for Sunday openings. The theaters there have been closed on Sundays for several months. As a result many of the residents attend the shows in Troy on Sunday night.

In order to fight Sunday shows the Clerical Association of Yonkers is in favor of a proposed change in the form of theatrical licenses in that city. It is suggested that licenses be issued for six days only. The general impression is, however, that the majority of the Yonkers Common Council would not be induced to vote for any new form of license in the face of the court's action.

The proprietors of moving picture theaters of Batavia, N. Y., have been sounding the feelings of their patrons in regard to Sunday shows. As no opposition has developed, Sunday performances may be permitted there.

CHANGES IN MANAGEMENT.

Changes in the management of some of Buffalo's theaters have just been announced. Elmer S. Davis has been appointed manager of the Elmwood, a palatial theater in Elmwood avenue. He has been in the show business for years, from performer to manager, and has a good line on the wishes of his patrons. "Give the public what they want," is Mr. Davis' motto. He will use the best features obtainable. He successfully managed Keith's moving picture theater, Buffalo, for two years.

M. H. Goodman is now manager of Keith's, where he is taking care of a good transient and regular patronage.

G. W. Erdmann, who was manager of the Elmwood from the opening to a recent date and who was responsible for an excellent attendance there has been appointed manager of the Columbia theater. The Elmwood is in a high-class residential district and Mr. Erdmann handled his patrons tactfully and courteously. His publicity was dignified and effective. He will follow at the Columbia the successful methods which he used at the Elmwood.

G. S. Schlesinger, former manager of the Regent moving picture theater, Buffalo, has become manager of the New Victoria theater, Mitchell H. Mark's beautiful West Side theater in that city. Mr. Schlesinger has been with the Mark-Brock Theatrical Enterprises in this country and Canada for years. One of his assets is novel advertising, which never fails to draw the crowds. He will continue at the New Victoria the policy of showing high-class productions, with extra musical programs by an orchestra of twelve pieces and a pipe organ. Mr. Schlesinger has succeeded Mrs. Lillian M. Hastings as manager of the New Victoria. Mrs. Hastings resigned to take a much needed rest. She was manager of the Old Victoria for five years. She entered the moving picture business eight years ago and has always maintained a high-class standard in her programs.

SENDS FOR NEW IDEAS.

In order to profit by the methods followed by the moving picture theaters of Buffalo, Manager Leon Schlesinger of the Strand theater, Toronto, Ont., sends each week one of his representatives to the American city. Everett Ramsey, treasurer of the Strand, visited Buffalo Sunday and collected valuable ideas for his theater.

BECKER FEATURE FILM CO.

The Becker Feature Film Co. has opened new offices at 29 Franklin Street, Buffalo. The members of the company are: Al Becker, Henry Carr and John E. Carr, prominent in vaudeville and moving pictures in that city for several years. Tney are New York State representatives of the United Booking Office Feature Picture Co. and the Exhibitors' All Feature Film Co., of Albany. The Becker Co. recently showed the features, "Reaping The Whirlwind," and "Springtime" at Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo.

MODEL ORDINANCE SENT TO MAYORS.

The authorities of several cities in New York State have received copies of what is purported to be a model ordinance drafted by an organization known as the Conference of Mayors and Other City Officials. The Conference is now affiliated with the National Board of Censorship of Motion Pictures. The ordinance drafted by the Conference would give the cities the authority to appoint unsalaried commissions to censor any picture that has not been passed on by the National Board of Censorship and to prevent the exhibition of the films if they are considered immoral.

NEW YORK BRIEF NOTES.

Mrs. Thomas Tyas of Rensselaer is opposing the opening of a moving picture theater in Third Street, Albany, N. Y.

The Penn Yan Film Corporation has built a studio in Penn Yan, N. Y. The first film made by the firm will be shown in the Sampson theater in that city May 31. E. R. Ramsey and Jack Ramsey are at the head of the enterprise.

Chief of Police Horsch of Batavia, N. Y. is strictly enforcing the law prohibiting children under 16 years from entering moving picture shows, unless accompanied by parents or guardians.

Edward Fitzgerald and John Kelly may open an outdoor moving picture theater in a vacant lot opposite Prospect Park in Troy, N. Y.

Benjamin Young has bought the building in which the Ilion opera house of Ilion, N. Y. is located. He will erect an up-to-date ground-floor theater.

Wilmer & Vincent will re-open the Shubert theater, Utica, N. Y., with moving pictures under the management of George W. Carr. The house has been dark for three months.

It is reported that Hiram Goldsmith may build a moving picture theater with a capacity of 2,500, at 27 Chanango Street, Binghamton, N. Y., and that $125,000 may be spent on the house.

John A. Morley has bought the Star moving picture theater at Athens, Pa., from Frank Groat.

E. R. Jones and C. C. Lewis have taken over the management of the New theater at 649 Main Street, Buffalo. The house has been remodeled and beautified.

The Gem moving picture theater, Utica, has been re-opened by Louis Tennis.

At a recent meeting of the Buffalo Schoolmasters' Association, Elmer J. Cobb, former president, asked the members to help enforce the law against children, unattended by parents or guardians, entering moving picture shows.

Harry T. Thompson, former manager of Rand's Opera House, Troy, N. Y., is dead. He was born in New Haven, Conn., and was in the show business practically all his life.

Linton & Clark have reopened the Hippodrome theater, Utica, N. Y. The house has been renovated and redecorated and a new indirect lighting system installed.

NEBRASKA NEWS LETTER.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

DR. G. E. CONDRA of the Nebraska State Conservation committee, whose films are being shown in many Nebraska houses, is planning a picture that will show the most notable parks and playgrounds in the state. It will also contrast tumble-down homes and those with good landscape work. Another film will show manual training shops in model Nebraska schools.

Prior to the departure of Frank Harris from Omaha for Kansas City to become traveling representative for the V. L. S. E. company his associates at the Empress presented him with a gold cigarette case filled with gold coins and the stage hands gave him a silk umbrella.

William Crosson has taken over the Empress at Hastings. Luther Fuller goes to Grand Island.

MEXICAN NEWS LETTER.

By Harry B. Ott, Chihuahua Correspondent of The Moving Picture World.

Chihuahua, Mexico, May 2, 1915.

IT is only natural that motion picture theaters in this country should feel the disastrous effects of the present revolution. Even though crowded houses are often the case, the road of the picture exhibitor in Mexico is anything but easy.

Naturally the European war has cut off the importation of films across the ocean, which, under normal conditions, is Mexico's chief source of supply. The lack of shipping facilities, and the present isolation of Mexico City, in normal times the film, as well as the political, capital of the "republic," further complicates matters. The only resource left the wide-awake exhibitor is to turn to the United States, and even though laboring under a great handicap, run American films, with titles, sub-titles, cut-ins and inserts in English, and unintelligible to a Mexican audience. And, further, the present rate of exchange makes the price of American films almost prohibitive. The value of a Mexican peso fluctuates around five cents gold, so that theaters charging fifty centavos admission, receive two and a half cents, United States currency.

But the situation has its bright side as well. Money, such as it is, is plentiful, and the army, which now includes a large proportion of the male population, here, as in all other countries, is a patron of everything in the amusement line. And when the day of peace and prosperity once dawns in this land, there will be few countries offering a richer field for the M. P. man, than Mexico.

MEXICAN CHARACTERS IN NORTHERN FILMS.

Exhibitors running American pictures complain of the great number of films attempting (but rarely succeeding) to portray Mexican characters, and nine times out of ten the Mexican is the villain. Naturally, it is impossible to run such pictures in this country. The management of the Alcazar in this city was recently called before the city government to answer for showing one of the series of "Lucille Love," in which it was claimed the Mexican flag was fired upon. Manager Williams convinced the council that such was not the case, and the complaint was dismissed.

MEXICAN BRIEFS.

Manager Kennedy of the Teatro Herrera of Torreón, Coahuila, reports fair business in that city. Most of the garrison has been withdrawn to strengthen the battle line south, and this has caused a decrease in business. The Herrera is using United Film service.

The Méndez-Caldrón house in Zacatecas has been running European films to good houses. As an added attraction this house has alternated vaudeville with pictures.

All houses in Aguascalientes have been doing excellent business during the past weeks, owing to the presence in that city of the entire Villa army, which has been mobilizing there to meet the advance of the Carranza army under General Obregon.

Manager Symons of the Cine Club and Salón Variedades of this city managed to get a shipment of feature pictures from Mexico City, when the road was open recently for a short period. "Othello," "Queen Margaret," "King Edward's Sons," "Marie Jean, a Woman of the People," "Anthony and Cleopatra" and various other French and Italian multiple reelers have since been on the program of these two houses.

Several motion pictures of official acts and personages have recently been taken for the government. These are to be kept in the governmental archives, as official "documents" of historical interest.

Torreón has the reputation as Mexico's city of tent picture shows. Four are now doing business in that city.

Cincinnati Skydomes Open

Many of City's Open-Air Theaters and Roof Gardens Are Starting—Grand Opera House's Hot Weather Program Provides Fox Offerings by Arrangement with Manager Weigle of the Alhambra, the Regular Fox Patron.

By Kenneth C. Crain, Cincinnati Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

IN spite of the fact that last week presented some weather for local consumption, which was far from summery, the enterprise of Cincinnati moving picture magnates led them to decide that the time has come for the opening of the airdome season; and the advance of the year toward summer is also indicated by the opening of the Lyric for its regular season of moving pictures. The Orpheum roof-garden, or "Sky Theater," which is one of the most delightful resorts in the city on a hot night, has announced its opening for Sunday. The roof has been gone over and completely remodeled, with fresh fitting and fresh paint much in evidence, and there is no question but what it will have its usual successful season. McMahan & Jackson, managers of the Plaza, of Norwood, have already opened their airdome, using it when the weather permitted, and showing at the Plaza on cool and rainy nights. Big features will predominate through the summer season, as at the Plaza during the regular season. As a special feature of opening week the management presented a regular musical comedy, which was given by a full company at every performance, and swelled the attendance to banner proportions. One of the most interesting announcements in connection with Cincinnati's big summer season of moving pictures, however, was that relating to the Grand opera house, which closes its regular season this week with Cyril Maude in his famous production of "Grumpy." By special arrangement with the Fox Film Co., through General Representative A. Carlos, of New York, and Manager A. M. Muller, of Cincinnati, concurred in by Manager Charles Weigel, of the Alhambra, which has been receiving the first-run Fox service, the Grand will run Fox features first for a period of fifteen weeks, covering the greater part of the summer season, after which the first-run will revert to the Alhambra, as heretofore. It is reported that the figure arranged for, covering this service, was unusually high, by reason of the unusual nature of the arrangement. "The Clemenceau Case," one of the best of the Fox productions, featuring Theda Bara, a Cincinnati girl, will be the first production at the Grand, starting off the season in a blaze of glory.

IMPROVE ORPHEUM.

The Orpheum theater, at Urbana, O., has been extensively improved, with complete new decorations and other changes calculated to add to its efficiency and attractiveness. The house was opened recently after a shut-down during the period of the new work, and its patrons were much pleased at the changes made.

The Hoover Suction Sweeper Co., of New Berlin, O., has joined the ranks of the progressives, and is advertising its product by means of a thousand feet of film under the title of "The Passing of the Broom." The film was produced in Toledo, following a scenario prepared by the company's advertising experts, and has been shown with much success in several houses in Ohio.

BLIND "SPECTATOR" DIES.

A figure which had become familiar in several suburban moving picture houses near Cincinnati, in the person of "Nick" McCarthy, passed away recently. The remarkable thing about Mr. McCarthy's fondness for moving pictures was that he was stone blind. In spite of this, he seemed to enjoy attending the exhibitions, and was always admitted free by the proprietors of the several shows in his neighborhood, sitting quietly for hours, and listening to the music and the comments of those about him on the pictures. When blind people can enjoy pictures, it seems that the one class to whom they were supposed to be barred is thus brought within their influence, the totally deaf having always been on an equality with the unafflicted in the enjoyment of the film drama.

WILL DIEDRICH SIGNS WITH HIGHLAND FILM.

The general trend of actors on the so-called "legitimate" stage toward the moving picture stage, indicated by the appearance of numberless scintillating stars in screen performances, received further confirmation in Cincinnati recently when Will Diedrich, a popular and accomplished comedian with the German stock company which has worked in this city for some months, accepted a contract with the Highland Film Corporation. He had the distinction of being one of the first of the actors signed up by the company at the Cincinnati office, although a number of actors were engaged in New York some time ago.

CENSORS APPOINTED FOR CAMPBELL COUNTY, KY.

They have no moving picture censors in Kentucky, at least none established by act of the Legislature, and exhibitors in the Bluegrass State have been congratulating themselves on their immunity from the plague of censorship which has so complicated matters in other States. However, as recently suggested in these columns, when, following the lead of the mayor of Cincinnati, the municipal authorities of one of the Kentucky cities across the river ordered the discontinuation of a picture, there is no apparent reason why every city and town could not establish its own censors, if it can be done in Cincinnati, which is under a state censorship. Apparently acting on this idea, Judge Boltz, of Campbell county, Ky., in which Newport is located, has appointed Probation Officer J. H. Meyers and County Patrolmen Manwaring and Hoskins as official moving picture censors for Campbell county. Just what authority is behind these censors, and what they will do to an exihbitor who exhibits pictures which do not meet with their approval, does not appear; but the appointment has been made, and the censors, presumably, are acting.

REMOVES STAGE AND INCREASES SEATING CAPACITY.

A step forward in the whole business of exhibiting moving pictures, as well as in the particular instance in question, is indicated by the improvements now in progress at the Alhambra, Charles Weigel's popular Fifth street house. By the elimination of the traditional, if somewhat useless, stage, the seating capacity of the house is to be increased from 299 to 450, which would be possible in no other way. The original idea in having a stage built in a moving picture theater, of course, was to enable the exhibition of vaudeville stunts, for the purpose of adding attractiveness to the program; but it has now been some little time, as time is reckoned in the amazing picture business, since first-class houses decided that so far from adding anything to their attractiveness, vaudeville tended to cheapen their performances. First-class houses, as a rule, therefore, show only pictures; and in view of the pressing need for more seating room at such houses, especially in the downtown section, like the Alhambra, the stage seems doomed to disappearance.

A Compromise Censor Bill

Massachusetts Senate May Consider a Substitute for Carstens-Lowell Bill—Provides for Unpaid Censor Board on Which Public, Picture People and the Unions Will Be Represented—Attorney Denied Time to Study New Measure.

By Edwin H. McCloskey, New England Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

IN all probability a new compromise censorship bill will be presented to the Massachusetts Senate Committee on Ways and Means to be substituted for the Carstens-Lowell bill. It is believed that this new bill will provide for the appointment by the governor of an unpaid commission of from eight to ten censors who will follow the standards set up by the National Board of Censorship. This commission will only have the power to act when there is complaint against a film by at least fifteen citizens.

This board is to have a representative of the labor unions, a representative of the motion picture interests and of public spirited citizens.

The Ways and Means committee called a hearing last week on the Carstens bill, which provides for a state-paid board of three censors, under the jurisdiction of the State Board of Labor and Industries. At the outset of this hearing, the proponents of the bill sprung a surprise when James A. Lowell for the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children submitted an entirely new draft of a bill to take the place of the Carstens bill.

The Lowell bill provides for the establishment of a department of film censorship in the district police force consisting of the chief and not more than five censors, one of whom shall be a woman.

Another section provides for the appointment by the governor of another board of seven to comply standards for the censorship. One of the board of rules shall be a wage earner, it is provided, and another shall be a representative of the moving picture interests. The censors shall examine every film and license it unless it finds such film immoral, indecent, obscene, inhuman, or of such a character that its exhibition would tend to impair the health or corrupt the morals of children or adults, promote lawlessness or incite crime. An apepal from the decision of the censors to the Superior Court is stipulated. The censors are to be selected under civil service rules.

Mr. Lowell stated that he had drafted his bill from the one now used in the state of Ohio. He declared that many of the films now passed by the National Board of Censorship are obscene.

Harry James, attorney for the moving picture interests, asked that the hearing be postponed to give his clients an opportunity to examine this bill carefully, but Chairman Bazeley ruled that the hearing should continue.

In outlining the bill, Mr. Lowell based his argument on the feature of the bill which provided a board of rule to formulate standards of censorship. When asked if the National Board did not have definite rules, he replied that they did, but that a committee of men and women in the state had examined films shown at various theaters and had reported 235 out of 1,261 films examined as objectionable, although they had been passed by the National Board.

He declared that the bill provided for the broadness of mind, not of the fellow looking at the film, but of the men who made the rules. It would be comparatively simple if the board of rules decided that gambling pictures were objectionable for a censor to look and see if there was a gambling scene in the film under examination.

He stated that the new bill would permit the stopping of objectionable shows in the state before they were shown, hitherto a difficult thing to accomplish.

Senator Bates, speaking in favor of the bill, attacked the methods of the moving picture interests in opposing the bill. He charged that they were against any form of censorship. That when national control was sought they declared that it was a matter for the states to decide, that when state control was sought they declared that it was a matter for local control; when local control was igitated, the interests, he claimed, said that it was too large a matter for local control and should be left to the national government. He also attacked the arguments presented on the petitions now being circulated by the anti-censorship committee.

He then said that National Board of Censorship, although it was composed of an advisory board of 101 members, it was in reality run by four paid secretaries. In regard to the ability of the board to pass on every film submitted he said that it would be possible in the case of such a film as "David Copperfield" to pass on it without seeing it. This caused an outburst of laughter. Senator Gordon of Springfield challenged this statement and said that the picture would not be taken at the time of David Copperfield and might be entirely different. To this Senator Bates replied that he would not accuse and did not think that the moving picture producers were guilty or would be guilty of such cupidity or deceit as to falsify the works of Dickens.

The opposition was opened by John J. Gartland, who corrected some erroneous statements made by previous speakers. He said that there was sufficient law against immoral, indecent, obscene and inhuman films. In reply to a question, he declared that he believed to be untrue a rumor which was circulated throughout the State House to the effect that the moving picture men had threatened to have the pictures of the Senators who may vote for a censor bill thrown upon the screen at picture shows, together with requests that the patrons of these places vote against these men at the fall election.

George F. Washburn, representing the Massachusetts Real Estate Exchange, stated that his organization favors the substitution for the bill of a measure providing for the appointment of an unpaid board of censors by the governor, such board to only pass upon films against which objections had been raised.

J. A. Eslow, New England manager of the Universal Film Exchange, opposed the new bill as unnecessary and a burden to the state. He declared that no committee could view all the films sent into this state. If the law should go into effect, he said, some of the picture theaters would have to close for six months before films would be available for them, so slow would the work of the censoring of film be.

Henry Sterling, Ignatius McNulty and William Francke, representing the labor interests, also opposed the bill and the hearing was continued for a week.

UNITED FILM TO HAVE PROJECTION ROOM.

Fred B. Murphy, proprietor of the New England franchise of the United Film Service, is planning for the installation of a Pompeiian projection room in his headquarters at No. 209 Pleasant street, Boston. He has contracted with the Simon Gerroir Construction Company to build this new room, which will seat 100 persons and will have a pitched floor. An 8 by 10 screen will be used and in the future all releases will be run off on Wednesday afternoon of each week.

Mr. Murphy has added two new roadmen to his working force. They are J. A. Binney, formerly with the Fox Film Corporation and "Billy" White, formerly of the Universal and more recently manager of the Academy at Lowell, Mass.

CHARLES WEBSTER TO MANAGE NEW ENGLAND V. S. L. E.

Charles Webster has been appointed New England manager of the V. S. L. E., Inc., with headquarters at No. 67 Church street, Boston. The building is now being renovated to conform with the building laws of Boston. General Manager Walter Irwin spent several days in Boston last week completing final arrangement for the location with Edward A. Hall, a local real estate dealer.

THE RACE PREJUDICE BILL.

The so-called "Birth of a Nation" bill, providing for a board of censors consisting of the Mayor of Boston, the Police Commissioner and the Chief Justice of the Municipal court to pass on theatrical exhibitions has been advanced to a third reading in the Massachusetts House of Representatives after a stormy debate by a vote of 94 to 31.

The opponents of the bill based their argument on the claim that this bill was founded entirely on the protest of the negroes against this certain film play. The members of the Committee on Judiciary, which reported the bill, declared that this was not the case.

Representative Kennard, chairman of the committee, explained that the committee found that the law is different in Boston from any other part of the state.

On other places, the local authorities may stop a film for any reason whatsoever, while in Boston, it may only be stopped when it is found to be obscene or immoral.

Representative Dowse declared that the picture is an insidious attack upon the North. He said, "If my nation was born when the Ku Klux Klan was organized, then I am willing to sell my birthright for a mess of pottage."

Representative Donovan of Boston opposed the bill and criticised the negroes for what he said was an attempt to start a riot in front of the theater the night many arrests were made. He said 80,000 persons have seen the picture and not one has been incited to crime. He said the Jew, the Irish, and the Italian have been ridiculed for years on the stage, but it is left for the negro to register the first complaint.

Representative Washburn of Worcester urged that the bill be not treated as one designed solely to remedy a possible wrong to the colored race, as it gives to properly and fairly constituted authorities power to prevent any production which ought to be prevented.

During the hearing the gallery was filled with colored people who caused the introduction of the bill.

Representative Washburn was loudly applauded when he declared "That the Republican party could not afford to turn its back on the colored people." He spoke for the silent minority he said.

This bill would give the power to the three officials to stop any production, but their vote as to whether a production should be stopped must be unanimous. Representative Rowley of Brookline, intends to submit an amendment which will allow the vote of two of the three members to stop the production.

Frank Brown, formerly of the Beacon theater, Boston, and the Mystic theater, Malden, has been appointed manager of the Allston theater, Allston, Mass.

NEW ENGLAND BRIEFS.

The Lynn theater, Lynn, Mass., has changed its policy from stock to pictures last week, under the management of Dumas and Meade. They will use first run pictures released through the United Film Service.

"Billy" De Wolfe, formerly of the Cambridge Olympia and of the Lynn theater, Lynn, has been severely ill at Lewiston, Maine.

"DAMON AND PYTHIAS" IN BANGOR.

From John P. Flanagan, Maine Correspondent of the Moving Picture World.

THE five part spectacle, "Damon and Pythias," at the Park theater, Bangor, during the past week, was given under the auspices of Condeskeag Lodge No. 53, Knights of Pythias, and drew thousands of people to the theater. The Knights of Pythias, of whom there are hundreds in Bangor, nearly all attended themselves, and got a great many of their friends to attend. They displayed on the side of the theater an immense Knights of Pythias banner, and the electric sign of the Park was fitted out with red, yellow and blue lights, the colors of the Knights of Pythias. The admission to "Damon and Pythias" was 25 cents, the highest price ever charged in a Bangor motion picture house, but nevertheless the crowds came and seemed to enjoy themselves.

The Knights of Pythias orchestra gave a musical program from 7:30 to 8:30, and 16 incidental orchestra numbers during the showing of the film. Betty Bogrett, soprano, wife of Manager Stephen Bogrett, sang very pleasingly indeed.

"Damon and Pythias" has been booked by Manager Charles M. Stern of the Bangor Universal Exchange for Fort Fairchild, Presque Isle, Caribou, Houlton and Old Town. In all these towns the Knights of Pythias lodges will co-operate with the picture men, guaranteeing a certain proportion of the receipts, in several instances buying 100 tickets at 25 cents each.

NATIONAL REFORM BUREAU INVESTIGATING.

Rev. Henry N. Pringle, of the National Reform Bureau, of Washington, was in Portland during the week to visit the moving picture houses and ascertain the quality of the pictures being shown in Portland.

It is the purpose of the National Reform Bureau to have established a Federal censorship on all moving pictures, with a view of improving them in quality. Mr. Pringle, who for many years was actively engaged in forcing the prohibitory law in the state of Maine, during which time he had several physical encounters with the saloon element, states that there are many who believe that the National Board of Censorship does not pass on all pictures, and that many pictures it does pass on should be eliminated.

MAINE BRIEF NOTES.

James W. Greely, manager of Greely's theater, at Portland, was a candidate for a position on the State Highway Board, which is to spend $2,000,000 in improving the roads of Maine. He received good support for this office, but lost out to a Houlton man. Mr. Greely was the only moving picture man who was a member of the last legislature.

Paul Peaks, manager of the Chic theater, at Milo, advises that business with him is picking up. Mr. Peaks uses three changes of regular program weekly, and one big feature show. The features are all of the Class A, issued by the World Film Corporation.

Frank A. Owen, of Dover, who for 30 years was manager of the Bangor Opera House, which was burned in January, 1914, and is now proprietor of Central Hall, Dover, was a visitor to Bangor during the week with Mrs. Owen. He is using Universal service, and reports an excellent business, partly due to the fact that the mills in Dover are rushed to the limit with orders.

Mr. Stithan, proprietor of the Bijou, at Pittsfield, was a visitor to Bangor this week, calling on the local exchange men.

The Dreamland, at Van Buren, has taken on Universal service, three nights a week.

Charles Rush, manager of the Millinocket moving picture house, has booked "The Black Box" and "The Master Key."

Co-Operation in South

In New Orleans a Definite Move May Be Made Towards a Joint Committee of the New Exchange Men's Association and the Exhibitors' Association—George Schaefer Talks of the Needs and Probabilities of It.

Special from Trades Press, New Orleans Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

CO-OPERATE—that is the most important thing, is what George Schaefer, sales manager for the World Film Corporation, said to the World correspondent when asked what was the most important thing to be done to improve conditions in the picture business, more particularly in the southern territory centering around Atlanta and New Orleans, what the exchange men and exhibitors should do to improve the general situation in this territory, he having just been through it.

The southern Atlantic and eastern Gulf states, he said, were not up to the level of the rest of the country in efficient conduct of the picture business and lack of co-operation between exchange men and exhibitors was the reason he assigned, wherefore he is preaching at every step the gospel: "Co-operate." A joint association of exhibitors and exchange men for the promotion of understanding of each other's needs by each is his ideal. Failing that, a joint committee from the exhibitors' association and the exchange men's association, he said, would prove an excellent arrangement.

This seed will, it is believed, bear fruit in the New Orleans territory; not only has it fallen at a most opportune time, the exhibitors having recently organized and the exchange men being now organizing, but the business in the New Orleans territory has reached a plane where such co-operation is practicable and where those concerned are prepared to take advantage of every means at their disposal to put their business on a sounder and more efficient basis. This improvement of spirit between the exchange men and exhibitors is easily discernible even over a period of three years.

Previously associations of exchange men were usually looked on by the exhibitors as plunderbunds, organizations with no reason for being except to squeeze the exhibitor; and the exchange men were not uninclined to consider banded exhibitors as having as a chief aim a desire to dictate arbitrarily to the exchanges. But that was in the old days, in the period just following that in which each exhibitor or exchange man was trying to get all he could out of the other fellow.

It is expected that some definite move toward the establishment of a joint committee of the exchange men's association and that of the exhibitors will be taken as soon as the former complete organization and get their routine adjusted. That, according to the present outlook, will be within a very few days. Mr. Schaefer will make New Orleans his headquarters for about two weeks more, covering the adjacent territory from this point, and may be able to interest himself in the working out of the plan.

DISCUSS CENSORSHIP.

A threat of a municipal board of censorship developed in New Orleans last week at the state convention of the Federation of Catholic Societies but seems to be quiescent for the time. The bill as called for by a resolution, which has not been pressed, purposes a board to censor not only film but stage plays and so is considered especially dangerous. It would pose as not being aimed at the pictures, against which it is believed all the objections lie, but at plays in general. That any attempt to censor a legitimate production would be made is not considered for a moment; on the other hand several recent film releases are known to have proven highly distasteful to the powers of the federation.

There has as yet been no newspaper comment on the proposition, aside from notice that such a censorship was being advocated, save an article in a morning paper by the World's correspondent, setting forth the views of picture row and calling attention to the fact that the Federation of Catholic Societies has in the past rendered good public service by directing the attention of the police to the more noticeable violations of good taste by certain of the burlesque houses. It was suggested that this kind of patriotic service was helpful and that the same kind of supervision of picture theaters would be in no way objectionable.

An editorial from the Evening Telegram of Philadelphia, one of the press clippings distributed by the World for such use, was quoted, it being opposed to censorship boards with arbitrary authority and advocating resort to the courts and the police power by those questioning the propriety of the exhibition of a picture in question. The Times-Picayune the same morning carried a strong general anti-censorship editorial, which carefully avoided mention of the resolutions offered by the federation, but left no doubt of the paper's unfriendliness to censorship as a general principle.

SPRING'S OUTDOORS VS. SHOWS.

That Spring feeling has hit New Orleans with the opening of the parks and there is a grand scramble for the fresh air, with a resultant falling off in receipts of the downtown houses. Spanish Fort, the resort on Lake Pontchartrain, for instance, admitted something over sixteen thousand people at its Sunday opening, which is some sixteen thousand nickels and dimes and "higher prices" that got away from the downtown theater owners; but they are cheerful, even despite the fact that the formal Spring opening of City Park is also near and it draws almost as many people as "the Fort."

W. H. Gueringer, manager for Fichtenberg, said that the park openings had materially effected receipts of the company's houses, but that it was only a temporary diversion and that after the novelty of the green grass and blue sky has worn off, which he says should not take more than three weeks, the honorable public will begin to consider with alarm the mercury column in the street thermometer as it climbs toward the 100 mark and flee from the glare and heat of the outside to the always cool interiors of the picture houses. The close of the legitimate theaters, too, he thinks, will bring the level of the downtown exhibition house back and above the level of the pre-spring season.

The suburban houses have suffered hardly at all from the park competition. The reason is thought to be that it is only when a party starts out to make an evening of it that they seek the downtown houses or the parks, which mostly means the parks right now. The suburban houses, however, are not all banking on the continued patronage of their regular clientele; a number of them are busy installing fans and other cooling apparatus. In fact the suburban bid for the hot weather trade is confined to a large extent to this kind of improvement, there being a comparatively small number of airdomes springing up.

Frank Marfese's "Victory" at Cleveland and S. Broad streets has been put in especially good shape for the summer trade. Opera chairs have been provided, an abundance of ceiling fans and some added openings. As it stands it is typical of the better class suburban house. It recently inaugurated a feature night at ten cents and has booked some big features to be run on these nights.

THE BUILDER OF BRIDGES

THIS Gustave Frohman photo production is a drama by Alfred Sutro, strong and compelling when first enacted, and now increased in interest through the possibilities of the camera. The first screen appearance of C. Aubrey Smith has in support a powerful cast of experienced actors selected for individual fitness and including G. W. Anson, Jack B. Sherrill, Ed. R. Mawson, Fred Eric, Sidney Mason, Marie Edith Wells, Helen Weer and Kate Meek.

Scenic locations ranging from massive interiors to the swaying cable hoist of a huge bridge, contribute to the action without dominating it. Skillful stage technique is splendidly exemplified in the direction of George Irving.

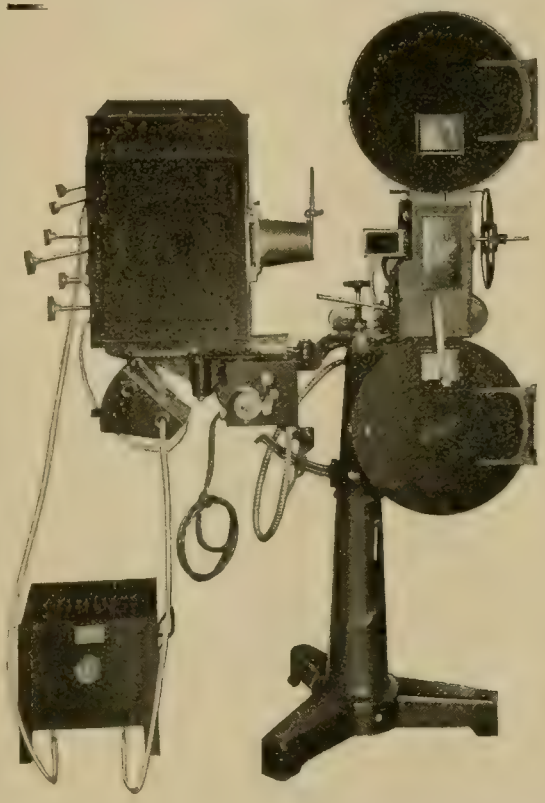
Simplex Machine Important Addition to High School Equipment

This is a cut of the Simplex Motion Picture Projector recently purchased by the public schools. It is one of the very best machines obtainable and represents the very latest type. The machine was purchased through the agency of Moore, Hubbell & Co., Chicago, the price being $300, with special discounts for schools and religious institutions as are customarily granted. The machine will be dedicated by entertainments for the school children, their parents and friends next Friday afternoon and evening.



The proceeds from these entertainments will be devoted to the installation and equipment of a fire-proof booth such as is required by State code. A moving picture projector of this type in a public meeting place such as a High School Auditorium may be made an agency for great good, in community welfare work. It is designed in no sense to compete with the regular motion picture entertainment, but to provide for a definite educational and civic uplift service which the latter is neither designed nor prepared to furnish.

SALLY CASTLETON, SOUTHERNER (Special—Three Parts—May 24).—Sally and Genie Castleton have just received a letter from their father, a Confederate general at the front, advising them to abandon the Castleton farm and come to Richmond, where it will be safer for them. Genie is very enthusiastic, as George, fifteen years old, delivers the letter, but Sally, the elder, is serious. As they are discussing the letter, Philip, Genie's sweetheart, rides up exhausted and hands Sally a letter addressed to General Lee. His horse expires from exhaustion and Philip, physically worn out, is assisted to the house. George is sent with the letter, which he delivers in good order. Hardly has Philip been assisted to the house, when a detachment of Union calvary, in command of General Haverhill, approaches the house. The girls hastily push Philip into the huge stove, and admit the men. After searching the house thoroughly, they are convinced that the girls and Claben, the man-servant, are the only occupants. From a window upstairs Sally sees Captain Radcliffe approach the house. She is impressed by his imposing physique, and Radcliffe is also struck by Sally's beauty as he catches a glimpse of her in the window. After an unceremonious entrance, Radcliffe, a Union spy, attired in civilian dress, tells General Haverhill that he must make a hole through the Confederate outposts so that he (Radcliffe) can get to Richmond and secure plans from a spy there. Full plans are discussed, as Philip, inside the stove, listens attentively. When the Union men leave, Philip tells the girls all and they start out at once, Sally and Genie for Richmond and Philip to impart what he has heard to the Confederate commander.

Outside of Richmond Radcliffe, posing as a cotton broker, is held up by the Confederates. He overhears a Morse code telegram to the effect that his captors have a man in custody resembling Radcliffe, the spy. He remains, however, determined to get through to Richmond. Sally's party arrives at the outposts, and when she identifies Radcliffe, she is ordered to accompany him to Richmond so that the spy in that place can be trapped. Reluctantly she acquiesces, and she and Genie, accompanied by Radcliffe, leave for the city. On the way Radcliffe confesses his love and Sally also admits her affection for him, but does not tell him she's a spy. They stop at a farmhouse over night, and by a clever ruse, Radcliffe gets out and goes to Richmond, arranges to have the plans turned over to him, and returns without Sally knowing it. In Richmond, Radcliffe is cornered after receiving the plans of which he has two copies. He is pursued to the house Sally is stopping at and secretes one copy in a bag of love letters Genie always carries around. As he is leaving he encounters Philip and there is a hand-to-hand struggle. Sally orders Radcliffe to give up the plans and he gives her the package and rides swiftly away. A couple of weeks later, after the girls have returned home, Radcliffe comes to the house, takes the plans from Genie's love letter bag, gives them to a Union officer, and his duty is done. He then assures Sally he is no longer a spy, and there is no barrier to prevent their marriage.

ALL COOKED UP (May 25).—Bill and Louie are pastry cooks. Their cooking does not appeal to the digestive organs of the patrons of that particular restaurant and after some little ceremony of placing them in the proper position, the manager literally kicks them out. They are considering hiring themselves out as cooks to one of the warring nations, to be stationed in the commissary at the prisoners' camp when a waiter in the restaurant, a member of the no-law and no-order league, invites them to join his society. Timidly Bill and Louie enter the cellar where the "bureau of combustibles" is considering placing a bomb under some rich man's front parlor. Bill and Louie are duly initiated, and draw lots with the rest to determine who will plant the bomb. Of course, they are the "lucky" ones, and are handed the bomb. Louie lights it immediately, so that Bill can get a light for his cigarette. The infernal machine is immersed in water and then the cooks start out to blow the house.

They board a Fifth avenue bus, and touch a match to it. The passengers scatter in double quick time, hopping off the bus while it is in motion. An old rheumatic gentleman is being assisted down the street by his daughter when the lighted bomb rolls against his bandaged foot. It's a sure cure. Up the street he flies, abandoning his crutches. The bomb next lands in a baby carriage. Baby fondles the bomb as if it were a doll. Louie runs up and takes the bomb away, giving baby a revolver to play with in its stead. The members of the "bureau" who have followed the cooks, are huddled up against the wall of a building as the bomb rolls up to them. A terrific explosion! The walls separate and the men are blown through. It is the police station. Bill and Louie rush up and in short order call the police captain to the breach in the wall. The men are dragged in and placed in a cell. Bill and Louie are arrested for carrying concealed weapons and later escape. The following day they are standing out in the snow muttering that if they ever get in a warm jail again, they will sign a lease.

THE MAN WHO COULD NOT SLEEP (May 26).—Judge Jeffer has sentenced a woman to thirty days, after she, in contempt of court, has answered the judge and expressed the hope that he never would be able to sleep again. The judge soon becomes obsessed by this curse, and is unable to get sleep. The first night is one of torment. The slightest sound makes his nerves tingle. In the morning he sees his physician, who prescribes, but that evening he is again unable to sleep. The bell in a neighboring tower awakens his jumping nerves to further action and the blind, slamming against the house, contributes to the judge's discomfort.

After he has spent three nights of horror, during which time he has been haunted by visions of the woman he sentenced, the judge appears in court, haggard and drawn for want of rest. He instructs the prosecutor to direct the probation officer to look into the case of the woman he sentenced three days before, as in his opinion, the sentence was unjust. A woman is brought before him with her a child, for sleeping on a bench in the park. The judge looks down upon her kindly and when court is over, goes with her to her squalid flat. He pays her rent, thereby preventing her eviction, and asks his beneficiary to pray that he might be able to sleep. An earnest prayer is said by the grateful woman and that night, Judge Jeffer, for the first time in four nights, is able to sleep. His valet enters as the tower clock tolls the hour of twelve, but the judge does not move.

ACCORDING TO THEIR LIGHTS (Special—Two Parts—May 28).—Amos Hartley, a Washington real estate broker, has just received a letter from Colonel Snowden, of Madison Hills, Tennessee, to the effect that he will not consider the sale of his coal lands. Bob Mason is delegated to go to Madison Hills and persuade the Colonel to sell the lands. Bob is given a code book, and directed to send all messages in that code. Arriving in Madison Hills, Bob meets the Colonel and also his daughter, Grace. She is immediately impressed by his fine appearance, with the result that Bob is persuaded to stay to supper. His presence in the little town is noticed particularly by Eric Allen, who, seeing him on occasions with Grace, becomes jealous. He follows Bob to the telegraph office where he learns that the stranger has been sending code messages.

Meg Tracey, daughter of Nate Tracey, a mountaineer, operating a "wildcat" still some distance from his cabin, meets Bob while on her way to school. He reads her primer with her, and is sorry within himself that she has had no education. Meg takes an immediate liking to him, and subsequently meets him often. Bob has become engaged to Grace, the teacher at the little school which Meg has started to attend. Colonel Snowden has consented to the deal, and Bob sends a code message to Washington to that effect. Allen overhears him at the telegraph office ask the operator where Sherad's Forks is. Allen puts two and two together and concludes that Bob is going to raid Tracey's still, which is close to Sherad's Forks. He warns Tracey, in the presence of Meg, who will not believe that Bob is a revenue officer.

Early in the morning in question Meg slips out and, getting Grace, repairs to Sherad's Forks, where Bob and Colonel Snowden have gone to look over some land. The Traceys are in waiting with guns as Bob approaches. Meg's signals for them to stay back are misconstrued by Bob and the Colonel, and Meg rushes forward in time to receive the bullet meant for Bob. Allen is shot dead by the Colonel. The Colonel explains Bob's mission to Tracey and the code messages.

THE DUMB WOOING (May 29).—Carter and Johnson are the two who would win their way into the heart of Phyllis Boggs. But whenever they come to pay their respects, it takes them so long to blurt out the formal salutation owing to an impediment in their speech that the patience of Phyllis is taxed to more than its carrying capacity. Consequently, it is not long before she tires of the contortions the pair go through on the occasion of each visit, and seeks a new beau.

William Graham, the favorite with Phyllis, is hardly the favorite with her father. The latter insists that Phyllis consent to marry either of the two originals. Carter and Johnson are told that they will be given five minutes each in Phyllis' company, during which time they will not be allowed to speak a word; just manifest their devotion and affection by action. Carter enters the room and proceeds to make his love plain, first on one knee and then on the other. Phyllis thinks he has been bereft of his speech and is more disgusted than ever. She hastily pushes him behind the screen as Johnson appears.

In identically the same manner Johnson evidences his love. His pantomimic manifestation does not make a hit with Phyllis, who rushes him behind the screen so that he will not be present when Graham calls. Presently the latter enters and soon Phyllis and he are absorbed in that favorite pastime of lovers—osculation. From behind the screen the two young men view the unpleasant sight, and they are unable to restrain themselves. Their protests are met by a command to leave the house and they leave the place not a little dejected as Phyllis remains in the embrace of the fortunate William.

THE JARR FAMILY SERIES, NO. 8, "Mr. Jarr Visits His Home Town" (May 24).—Because of Willie's health, the Jarrs decide to visit Mr. Jarr's home town of Bunkburg for a week. There Willie soon becomes hale and hearty, running around with the other country boys, and winning all their jack-knives by his superior city "wisdom." The others get sore and try to take their valued trinkets back by force, but Willie proves a good runner and escapes. Whispers reach Mr. Jarr's ears of a little masquerade ball to be held in the "hose-house" or village fire company's building. He promises to attend, and tells his wife he must bo back to the city for a day. From the village barber, who is incidentally the local costumer, Jarr obtains a fine bear costume. They have trouble making the head stay on, so the barber sews Mr. Jarr up in the costume. It happens that an old Italian comes to town with a real tame bear, it gets away and he excitedly informs the nearest farmer. All the men and boys organize a hunting party and, happening to spy Jarr in his disguise, they mistake him for the real bear. An exciting—and, for poor Jarr—agonizing chase follows. When he runs into the real bear, which proves to be only a little fellow, Jarr establishes a new record for tree climbing. The cub follows right behind, and finding it as tame as can be, Jarr lets it go to sleep in his arms all night. Next morning Willie and the other boys locate Jarr up in the tree and practice on him from a safe distance with their bean shooters. Matters get serious, however, when the farmers arrive and get ready to shoot in earnest. Jarr desperately drops to the ground, where his disguise falls off. All indulge in uproarious mirth at his expense, but he angrily threatens Willie with a walloping if he tells Mother.

THE ESTERBROOK CASE (Broadway Star Feature—Three Parts—Special—May 25).—Paul Sturgess is engaged to Grace Van Austin. At a week-end party in their Newport home, Grace amuses herself by flirting with Howard Esterbrook, a man of unusual charm, and a guest of the Van Austins. This arouses Paul's jealousy and precipitates a desperate fight between the two men. They are separated by the others, and that night Stephen, a servant, sees Paul try to enter Esterbrook's room, revolver in hand. Paul is interrupted by a maid on an errand, and hurries to his own room. Fearing for Esterbrook's safety, Stephen enters his room to warn him and sees a hand extend through the window curtain, stab Esterbrook, and mysteriously disappear. At the investigation, Paul is arrested on circumstantial evidence. Six months later, Ann, "The Woman of Mystery," is taken with a number of other prisoners in a raid, during which she is shot by Renway, a criminal, while trying to aid the police. Greatly stirred by hearing that Paul Sturgess's plea for pardon has been denied and that he must die in the electric chair at dawn, the woman tells Detective North, leading the raid, something that causes him to rush her to the District Attorney at once. There she tells her story again and the Warden at Sing-Sing is telephoned just in time to stop the electrocution. Then the District Attorney and Ann start for Sing Sing. In the Warden's office, in the presence of the District Attorney and the prisoner, Ann tells how she killed Howard Esterbrook, and the powerful reason why. In the course of her story it is revealed she is the mother of Paul Sturgess. At the completion of her narrative, Ann dies in her son's arms. Completely exonerated, Paul returns home, and is happily reunited with Grace, who had retained faith in his innocence throughout.

THE STORY OF A GLOVE (May 26).—When Huggins announces to his wife his intention of going to his annual college dinner she determines to prevent a repetition of what happened the year before. She puts one of her long gloves in his pocket, feeling sure he will find it during the evening and be reminded of his promise to return home early. Huggins takes an affectionate leave of her, and is soon having a roaring time quaffing the jovial glass with his old college "bums." At 11 o'clock his wife asks herself if Henry has found the glove yet. Evidently he has not, for he is at that moment busy trying to keep time with a rousing college song. At midnight his wife has a pleasant dream of her husband's discovery of the glove and thereafter, until three o'clock, Mrs. Huggins sleeps peacefully. At that time the party breaks up, and all the members pile into an owl lunch wagon. A wild ride, three college cheers and Huggins is deposited at his door. Mrs. Huggins is awakened by the noise and when she sees the time her face sets grimly. Her husband, after a trying time with the keyhole, drops his pumps in the goldfish tank. In getting them out a fish bites him. Then he finds the glove; and in his befuddled condition, can't imagine where it came from. Mrs. Huggins suddenly sits up and, misinterpreting her frown, he starts in to explain how he came into possession of the glove! It is a weird tale of how poor Charley Smith had died from drinking too much milk at their banquet and left him the glove as a keepsake. Mrs. Huggins, with a meaning smile, brings forth the other glove. He is flabbergasted but soberly informs her, "That's my story, and I'm going to stick to it."

HILDA OF THE SLUMS (May 27).—Living in a home destitute of love, in the poor quarters of the city, Hilda still retains the fineness of her nature. Naturally affectionate, she longs for love and a happy, quiet, domestic life, but feels there is little chance of her ever gaining her heart's desire, for the men she meets at Big Ben's cabaret, where she is employed as singer and dancer, are not her kind. Ben runs the cabaret as a blind, his real business being "gang leader" and "hold-up man." Hilda's father, a cripple, is a profesional beggar, and becomes a bitter enemy of Big Ben's, after the latter abuses him. Shortly after this the gang gets wind of a wealthy young cattle-rancher's presence in town, and plan to rob him. The cripple finds an incriminating note written by "Big Ben," and in revenge starts for the police station to "show it to the cops." Joe Manning, the young ranchman, strolls into Big Ben's place, then Ben goes to Hilda and coerces her into agreeing to help them get the ranchman's money. Hilda immediately attracts Joe's eye. After her "turn" on the stage, he invites her to his table. Realizing the girl's superiority, he gently tells her, "This is no place for you, little girl," and his sincerity makes a good impression. When the gang pounce on Joe, Hilda, seeing the stranger is getting the worst of it, cleverly trips one of the crooks, and the two make their escape through a hidden panel in the wall. Joe and Hilda are nearly cornered by the gang, but the police, brought by the cripple, arrive in time to prevent a tragedy. As Joe takes the brave girl in his arms, Hilda knows she has found Love at last.

THE STARRING OF FLORA FINCHURCH (May 28).—Upon receiving word from her friend, Annabelle Mason, president of the Mothers' Charitable Organization, that she has been selected to give her famous recital, "Curfew Shall Not Ring Tonight," Flora Finchurch immediately gets busy and with Hirum, her farmer sweetheart, for an audience, recites and recites, until the poor fellow falls fast asleep. She is shocked at the effect of her speech and angrily tells him to go home and sleep it out. A reporter is sent to write up the Charitable Organization's entertainment, and he gives Flora's recitation an awful roast, but the editor makes him change it to a highly commendatory writeup, in the name of sweet Charity. Shortly afterwards, Flora receives a handsome legacy and, remembering the splendid writeup in the local newspaper, at once advertises for a theatrical director to manage her planned theatrical venture. Senor Bird, a down-and-out "ham" actor, applies for and gets the position. Of course he tells her she has a splendid theatrical future before her, so they organize a company and start on tour. By distributing plenty of advertising, they secure some good advance press notices, while Hirum stays home and raves helplessly. At the very first town where they open, the show particularly Flora's "acting" is so poor the actors are hooted off the stage. Two weeks later, after another trying time at their next stand, in the language of the stage—the show "goes broke." Flora's five thousand has vanished, and in that town's local paper appears a notice containing the interesting sentence: "Another example of a talentless amateur trying to force herself on the public!" Hirum is the only one who feels at all sorry for her, and with her pride completely humbled, Flora sadly and wearily wends her way back to the home village and Hirum, on "Shank's Mare," by the arduous, but inexpensive route of the ties.

JANE WAS WORTH IT (Special—Two Parts—May 29).—Fresh from the country, Jane proves eminently satisfactory as a cook to Hughie, an eccentric bachelor, and his pet cat. When she becomes jealous of the cat, however, and complains to Hughie that it is a nuisance, he tells her quite plainly that the cat is more valuable to him than his cook, so he discharges Jane. Not realizing the difficulty of getting a good cook, he thinks he can easily secure another. Hughie tries a few, and the experiences he meets with are not at all conducive to peace and quiet. His last one, Mandy, a colored lady, proves a good cook, but extremely careless, especially when she substitutes Hughie's cat for a rabbit stew she is preparing. That settles it and Hughie fires her. Jane, meanwhile, has obtained a position with the Lanes, where, from seeing the young and attractive daughter, Elsie, attending to the preservation and embellishments of her personal charms, she gradually learns the art of tidiness and make-up. Visiting a moving picture show, Jane is struck with the beauty of one of the actresses, and steals her lithograph from the lobby to use for beauty hints in her art of making-up. Her change in appearance to a neat and really pretty girl causes great wonderment among the Lane family. She becomes too obstreperous, however, and they have to discharge her. Hughie is surprised to meet the girl wandering discouraged in front of a church, and after recovering from the shock of her transformed appearance, evidences his admiration for her. Pointing to the open church door, he suggests they enter and be made man and wife. In they go, and are married. After the honeymoon, Hughie, watching his charming and capable wife, smiles proudly and thinks Jane well worth all the other cooks in Christendom and some acquisition as a better-half.

KALEM.

THE LURE OF MAMMON (Special—Three Parts—May 17).—Fire destroys the vessel which is bringing Dorinda back to America. The girl is washed ashore. She is later rescued by Thorston, a millionaire. Thorston, who falls madly in love with the girl, restores her to her father. The millionaire invites the Ladues to visit them. While his guest, Dorinda meets Hastings, his secretary. The two fall in love with each other at first sight. Dorinda, however, consents to become Thorston's wife, out of a sense of duty to her father.

Just before the wedding, Ladue dies as the result of an accident. Bound by her promise, Dorinda marries Thorston. Events which transpire on the wedding day, lead the millionaire to believe his bride guilty of a clandestine love affair with Hastings. Insane with rage, Thorston deliberately humiliates his wife of an hour, before the guests. The limits of Dorinda's endurance are finally reached and she rushes out of the room. Celeste, her chum, endeavors to console her. Hastings, Celeste's escort for the evening, follows the girl.

While Hastings and Celeste wait for Dorinda, Thorston follows his wife to her room. A violent storm arises. Learning that his wife is determined to leave him, the millionaire endeavors to throttle her. A bolt of lightning crashes through the window, killing the scoundrel. The young widow retains Hastings to look after the estate left by her husband. Led to believe her secretary is in love with Celeste, Dorinda endeavors to further the match. Dorset, one of Thorston's friends, determines to win Dorinda. A fortune hunter, the man is prepared to marry her by fair means or foul.

Dorset soon learns the true state of affairs. He realizes that he must get Hastings out of the way before he can hope to marry Dorinda. The scoundrel's opportunity comes when he sees the secretary enter the vault in the Thorston library. Utterly unscrupulous, Dorset tells Hastings, and locks him in the vault. Dorinda enters the room an instant later. Her suspicions aroused by Hastings' disappearance, she has a search made. Hastings recovers consciousness. Realizing that he is in danger of suffocating, he frantically pounds on the door of the vault.

Dorset boldly asserts his belief that the secretary has absconded with Dorinda's money. Just at this moment, the girl hears the noise coming from the vault. Perceiving that his plot has gone for naught, Dorset is filled with a desire for vengeance. Leveling a pistol, he forbids Dorinda to attempt to rescue his victim. By a clever ruse, however, the girl disarms the would-be murderer. Hastings is released in the nick of time. It is then that Dorinda learns of her error—that it is she, and not Celeste, whom Hastings has loved all along. While Dorset is led away under arrest, Dorinda promises to become Hastings' wife.

THE LIBERTY PARTY (May 18).—Tired of living in jail, Ham and Bud take French leave. Seeking a place to hide, they enter a paperhanger's store. The telephone rings. Ham answers it and receives a request from Mrs. Smith that he come over and paper her dining room. Donning overhalls, Ham and Bud grab paper, ladders, paste buckets and brushes and obey the call to duty. Arriving at the Smith cottage, the adventurers get right down to business. Before long, the dining room is a first-class imitation of a Belgian battlefield. Ham and Bud get into a dispute over their respective paperhanging abilities. Angered, Bud determines to paper a room all by himself. In the meantime, Mrs. Smith, discovering the chaotic condition of her rooms, frantically phones her husband to come home.

The convicts' escape is discovered and guards take up the search for them. Smith gets home. The man is about knee-high to a grasshopper. Seizing him, Ham and Bud paint his clothes into a resemblance of prison garb and turn him loose. Poor Smith is captured by the guards, but is freed when he tells his story. Discovering the guards approaching, Ham and Bud flee from the house. By this time, they have grown lonesome for their prison home. Back to the paperhanging shop they go, where they don their striped suits. Cautiously returning to jail, they climp the wall and sit down in front of the building. There they are found by the weary guards who presently return. Springing forward, Ham and Bud welcome their jailors and ask to be locked up.

THE CLOSED DOOR (Special—Two Parts—May 19).—Mabel, a bride of a few weeks, learns that her husband, Dr. Keene, has married her for her money. The doctor forbids his wife to enter a certain room in the house. Mabel disobeys and is caught in the room. Infuriated, Keene makes his wife a prisoner, tying her in one of the chairs. In his effort to secure money from his wife, Keene resolves to hypnotize her. Mabel pretends to succumb and, at his order, makes out a check for $25,000. While Keene hastens to the bank with it, Mabel phones the cashier to refuse to honor the check. The bride then gets in touch with Police Headquarters. Bertha, a detective, is sent to investigate.

In the meantime, Keene returns home and learns how he has been fooled. The scoundrel decides to place his wife in an insane asylum. Bertha, learning what is taking place, endeavors to intervene. By a clever ruse, however, Keene steals her police badge and informs persons about to interfere that he is taking two crazy girls to an insane asylum. The badge deceives the people into believing the man. Bertha and Mabel are thrust into a cell in the sanitarium. Undaunted, Bertha later turns upon the guard who enters with food, and disarms him. Forcing the man to surrender the keys of the cell, Bertha locks him in and then, accompanied by Mabel, confronts Barry and Keene. While the girl detective covers the men with her pistol Mabel phones for the police.

JEAN OF THE JAIL (A Carlyle Blackwell-Alice Joyce Re-issue—May 21).—It is old Pedro's boast that in all his years as keeper of jail, he has never lost a prisoner. This, in a measure, is due to the aid rendered by Jean, his daughter. The girl is loved by Jose, but refuses to name the wedding day. Garcia, a notorious bandit, is captured. The outlaw is brought to the jail by Ordema, the alcalde. The same day, old Pedro is stricken ill. In her anxiety over her father's health, Jean fails to notice that Garcia, aided by his sweetheart, Luisa, is making an attempt to escape. Not until Garcia and Luisa are mounted on the latter's pony, does Jean discover what is taking place. She shoots after the two slaying the woman. Garcia gets away.

The knowledge that the alcalde is due to come for his prisoner, fills Jean with fear. In her extremity, she summons Jose. Jean promises to wed him upon the condition that he bring Garcia back. With this for an incentive, Jose pursues the fugitive and overtakes him. A wild struggle ensues, in which Jean's sweetheart proves victorious. Meanwhile, the alcalde arrives and demands his prisoner. Jean, fencing for time, calls his attention to her father's condition. Just as the alcalde grows impatient, Jose and his captive arrive. It is then Pedro learns that at last a prisoner had broken out of the jail. In his enfeebled condition the shock proves too great for him. His years of service are at an end.

THE BROKEN TRAIN (Episode, No. 28 of the "Hazards of Helen" Series—May 22).—Norris and Wheeler, entering the express car of No. 7, turn upon the express messenger, knock him unconscious, and rifle the safe of a package containing $10,000 in gems. The crooks leap from the car as it approaches Lone Point and hide under the station. The crime is discovered. Helen is ordered to telegraph a report of the theft into headquarters. Hearing the rapping of the transmitter, Norris and Wheeler, guessing the import of the message, sever the wires and then make a dash for a passing freight.

Helen sees the crooks climb aboard the train. Her suspicions aroused, the girl tries to intercept them but her efforts go for naught. A racing auto stands nearby. Springing into the machine, Helen goes in pursuit of the freight. In the meantime, the engineer of the freight finds his airbrake is out of commission. He decides to bring his train in by the handbrakes. Misfortune overtakes the freight a second time when a coupling gives way and the train breaks in two.

The road over which Helen travels, crosses the tracks near Lead Junction. The machine arrives at the crossing just as the first half of the broken train passes. In spite of the frightful danger, Helen keeps straight ahead and crosses barely in time to escape being run down by the second half of the broken train. A mile further, the road runs parallel with the tracks. Running her machine alongside the freight train, Helen leaps from her auto and lands on a flat car. Running forward, she informs the train crew of what has taken place. Norris and Wheeler are captured after a hard battle and the gems are recovered.

RIVALS (Special—Two Parts—May 24).—Dixon, owner of a Virginia lumber camp, and Lee Trevor, who owns a neighboring plantation, are both Northerners and warm friends. Lee loves Sally, Dixon's daughter. He finds a rival in Sutton, the brutal foreman of the lumber camp. With the declaration of war, Lee is given a commision in the Federal army. Sutton enlists in the Confederate army. A number of field pieces belonging to the Union forces are held in reserve in a train shed near Dixon's house.

Lee defeats a party of Confederates in a skirmish. Sutton, one of the enemy force, subsequently discovers that a daring raid would enable a small body of men to capture the Union cannon. The plan approved by his commanding officer, Sutton is given a force of men. His mission meets with success. In making his rounds, Lee discovers what has occurred. Realizing that the Federal forces, weakened by the loss of the artillery, would be unable to resist a sudden attack, he secures a body of men and hastens to Dixon's train shed for the reserve cannon. Sally sees her sweetheart loading the guns on flatcars. In her desire to be with him, she hides under one of the tarpaulins whirh cover the weapons.

The Confederates attack the Union breastworks and sweep over the weakened defenses. The Federals are about to surrender when the flat cars containing the reserve guns come up. Manned by Lee and his men, the cannon beat the Confederates back. Sally becomes separated from Lee. Sutton makes her a captive and drags her to a deserted shack. Lee follows with his men. Locking the door of the shack Sutton threatens to shoot Sally if his rival attempts to break in. Climbing to the roof, Lee shoots through a hole and gets his man. The door is forced and Sally is rescued.

HAM, THE DETECTIVE (May 25).—Guiseppe the Black, a desperado, makes up his mind to win the fair Citronella by fair means or foul. He sends a letter to her father, Signor Dedough, threatening him with death unless Citronella becomes Mrs. Guiseppe. Terrified, Dedough secures Ham and Bud to work on the case. The two Sherlocks accidentally pass the shack in which Guiseppe's gang hangs out. The desperado prepares a bomb. To test its strength, he lights the fuse and throws it out of the window. It explodes just as the sleuths are passing.

Bud is blown into the next county, while Ham is hurled into the desperado's den. He is promptly bound. The gang prepares to torture him. Guiseppe, with another bomb under his coat, departs to wreak vengeance upon Dedough. Bud sees the bandit. The two are of the same size and build. Disguising himself, as Guiseppe, Bud enters the den and saves Ham. The two hasten to the Dedough residence, Guiseppe is in the house and is terrifying Citronella's father. The bandit informs the latter that death will be his portion unless Citronella becomes Mrs. Guiseppe before 6 o'clock.

Ham and Bud enter the house. The two mistake each other for bandits. The result is a pistol duel. Guiseppe, alarmed, endeavors to escape, but is captured by a regular policeman. The latter takes his prisoner into the house. There, Guiseppe is triumphantly seized by Ham and Bud. Indignant because of this high-handed procedure, the officer grabs hold of the detectives and lugs them off to jail.

THE FIGURE IN BLACK (Special—Two Parts—May 26).—Despite the warning uttered by Blake, the house detective of the Alhambra, Mrs. Cluett refuses to deposit her gems in the hotel vault for safe keeping. A few nights later, a mysterious thief enters the woman's apartment, binds and gags her and then departs with the gems. When Mrs. Cluett's maid discovers her mistress's plight the following morning, Blake is summoned. The man finds a black robe, similar to that worn by the thief, in the maid's room. Mrs. Cluett, however, declines to have the girl arrested. The woman announces that the gems stolen by the intruder were paste imitations and reveals the fact that the real gems were in an old shoe.

Although Blake expresses the desire to handle the case by himself, Mrs. Cluett secures the aid of Bertha and Talcott. Bertha becomes Mrs. Cluett's maid, while Talcott poses as a wealthy guest. Confident that the crook will appear a second time, the detectives set a trap for him. Again the black-robed intruder appears. Bertha is ready for him. A howl of pain informs her that his hand is caught in the heavy spring trap concealed in a clothes closet. When Bertha endeavors to arrest him, however, the man dashes out of the room. He finds Talcott waiting. A sudden blow sends Bertha's assistant reeling. The thief dashes upstairs and escapes. Accompanied by the hotel manager, Bertha and Talcott visit Blake in his room on the top floor. The man's bandaged hand arouses the detectives' suspicion. They speedily unmask him as the real thief. The gems he had just stolen are recovered and the house detective is led away under arrest.

PREJUDICE (Special—Three Parts—May 28).—Scandalized by the behavior of their young minister, the officials of the village church, headed by Deacon Pettybone, register a strong protest. Lowell, however, informs them that it is his intention to make the church so interesting that the young people will prefer to spend their time inside its doors, rather than in saloons and dance halls. Byron, the village doctor, who is ruining his career by drink, is attracted to the church because of Lowell's policy. He falls in love with Malvine, Pettybone's daughter. The deacon, however, sternly forbids Malvine to accept Byron's attentions.

The church officials are horrified to see their sacred edifice "desecrated" by the presence of the village's riff-raff. Then comes Pettybone's discovery that dances are being held in the church under the minister's auspices. Furious, he informs his fellow officials. In spite of their attitude, Lowell asserts his intention to stand by his colors. Lowell induces the local saloon-keepers to promise to shut their places on Sunday. The day before the minister is to announce this from his pulpit, a riot is almost caused by the rumor that a leper has been discovered in a freight car.

Lowell, attracted to the scene, finds the man being stoned. The minister's rage cows the mob and he rescues the victim. Investigation proves the latter to be suffering from hunger. Pettybone and the church officials witness the incident. It opens their eyes to their pastor's character, and they realize just what his work has done for the village. Thenceforth, they are among his staunchest admirers.

A RAILROADER'S BRAVERY (Episode No. 29 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series—May 29).—In spite of Helen's advice, Henry, the relief operator, decides to give up his position and go to the city. There the boy falls in with a gang of wire tappers. Thomas, the chief of the gang, learns that the results of the following day's races are to be sent on wire 35. Three men, headed by Jim Noyes, proceed to Rexford to tap this wire. Their presence is discovered by a lineman. To keep their plot secret, the wire tappers make him a prisoner.

Helen learns of what has taken place. She severs the wire being tapped. The wire tappers discover her presence and give chase. Helen, however, secures the assistance of the crew of a freight train. Outnumbered, the criminals steal a gasoline speeder and flee. Uncoupling the engine from the freight train, Helen and the train crew pursue. Seeing the girl on the engine, Noyes levels his pistol to shoot, but Henry knocks the weapon up. Angered, the wire-tapper hurls the boy from the speeding car. Helen rescues him and then continues the chase. In danger of being run down by the locomotive, Noyes surrenders. The man is placed under arrest. Henry, realizing the error of his ways, promises to return to his former position.

LUBIN.

ROAD O'STRIFE SERIES NO. 8.—IN THE WOLF'S DEN (May 24).—Robert Dane has not met with success in the city, failing to secure employment and receiving an offer of but a thousand dollars for a chemical formula which he knows to be worth a fortune. Moreover, he is rendered miserable by what he persists in regarding as his futile love for Alene. He becomes obsessed with the idea that the girl is again in danger, and obeys an impulse to return to the village. He has, in fact, heard, with the strange power of one soul attuned with another, the wistful whisper of the girl, alone in the world—"I am so weary and afraid. Can't you hear me, Robert Dane?" When he reaches the village he learns that Alene has disappeared, leaving no trace. Crushed with fear and grief, he searches in vain for some clue.

Meanwhile, Alene has been carried to the city by a kindly farmer bound for the market. She is seen by Gilbert Jerome, who forgets the danger to his fortune in the revival of his passionate hopes and his delight in finding that Alene still lives. Gilbert's plans are temporarily balked, however, by the interference of Daisy, a show girl, who knows through sad experience the fate that threatens Alene, and who takes her under her protection. In order that she may keep watch over her protege, Daisy secures for Alene a place in the chorus of the show with which she is engaged, devoting her spare time to a search for Dane. Gilbert succeeds in having Daisy discharged and so separating her from Alene, it being necessary, inasmuch as Daisy is entirely without funds, that Alene retain her position.

Realizing that the only practical hope of locating Dane is to trace him from a logical starting point, Daisy goes to Elmhurst. Gilbert has by this time completed his plans, and lures Alene to his house. Totally unconscious of the trap into which she has been led, Alene joyously awaits the promised coming of Dane and readily agrees to have supper while so waiting. She observes on the sideboard the silver cup taken by Gilbert from the mineral spring, and, taking it up, reproaches him for having removed it from the place where it had so long remained undisturbed. Taking the cup from her, Gilbert fills it with wine, and with the statement that always he takes whatever he may want, drinks. An instant later he reels and falls, and the butler, rushing to his assistance, draws back in dazed fright, whispering, "He is dead!"

MATILDA'S LEGACY (May 25).—Fatty and Stubbs are rivals for the hand of Kitty, the village belle. Fatty comes upon Stubbs making ardent love to Kitty. A fight ensues in which a board, thrown at Fatty, misses him, and hits Si Dewberry, the Justice of the Peace. Si becomes enraged and gives pursuit. He spies a head protruding from behind a tree. Thinking it is Fatty's, he smashes it with the board. By mistake he has hit Matilda Honeysuckle, the unpopular old maid of the village. Old Seth Perkins happens along in time to render aid to Matilda and to care for her wounds.

Seth's niece discovers a letter belonging to Matilda, in which she is informed that Matilda has fallen heir to a fortune. She spreads this news to the widowers and bachelors of the village. The entire male population of the village begin a conquest for the old maid's heart, and rush to her home with presents. About this time, Seth happens along, looks in the window, sizes up the situation, and decides to defeat the others. He hurries off to the telegraph station and persuades the operator to write him a fake telegram, stating that it was all a mistake about Matilda's inheritance. This he takes back to the house and gives to Matilda. Upon reading it she faints and her "gallant lovers" decide it is no place for them and beat a hasty retreat, leaving Seth and Matilda alone. Seth loses no time in reviving Matilda, and in explaining that he faked up the telegram to test the loyalty of her suitors. Seth proposes and is willingly accepted.

HER OTHER SELF (Special—Two Parts—May 26).—Anna Anson is a girl of dual personality. As Anna, she is sweet and lovable, but as Ruby Queen, her other self, she is the incarnation of wickedness. Years before her father, Bill Anson, wielded a strange influence on her timid, shrinking mother, Doris, and compelled her, against her will, to assist him in crooked gambling play. Doris died in terror of her husband when Anna was born, so the child came into the world with a prenatal influence of evil over her. Anna lives with Martha, the old family servant. She is loved by young Dr. Alan Reed, but refuses to marry him because of the spell hanging over her. The father works in a large gambling establishment in the city not far away, and when Anna becomes Ruby Queen, uses her as an attraction.

At the beginning of the story Gonzales, the gambling house proprietor, tells Anson to send for Ruby, and Anson goes to Martha's house, and uses his influence to make Anna become her evil personality. The change comes gradually over Anna. She discards her simple dress and draws forth a flashy costume. A few hours later she triumphantly enters the gambling salon, and acts as the moving spirit of the occasion. Back home, Martha discovers that Anna has disappeared, and tells the doctor the whole story. He resolves to follow Anna the next time she goes. Though Anson can bring Anna under his influence, he cannot keep her very long, and shortly afterward the good personality comes over her again. Anson permits her to depart, but tells her the next time he wants her, he will not have to come for her. Anna goes back home, and the doctor continues to visit her.

Business at the gambling establishment becomes dull, and Anson is told to get Ruby back. This time he merely exerts his will power, and Anna feels the change coming over her. The doctor is present at the time. She tells him to go, and he watches from outside. When she departs he follows her. At the gambling salon, Ruby is given another royal welcome. The doctor faces her, but sees that she does not recognize him. Puzzled, he secures a room in a nearby hotel, and manages to install a dictograph in the office of the gambling house. The next night he listens to the conversation of Gonzales and Anson, and learns of the influence Anson has over Anna.

Then the gambling house is raided. Anson, attempting to escape with Ruby is shot. The doctor hears the report and Ruby's scream over the dictograph, and excitedly rushes to the place. He explains to the sergeant, and attends to Ruby, who has fainted. She comes to as Anna, and the doctor explains everything to her. He tells her she can be cured only by successfully resisting her father's will. The next day the struggle for mastery takes place at the hospital, where Anson has been brought. He tries to wield his influence over Anna, but she has been strengthened, and as Anson grows weaker, she emerges triumphant. Anson falls back, and they discover that he is dead. The evil self is gone from Anna forever, and she finds happiness with the young doctor.

ON BITTER CREEK (Special—Three Parts—May 27).—For generations ill feeling has existed between the Cavalier Yancy family living on one side of Bitter Creek, and the Puritan Kirbys on the other. Over the creek is a covered bridge built by Yancy long ago. The Yancy family consists of Clay Yancy and his widowed sister, who has a little daughter. In the Kirby house there is Horace Kirby, his son, Robert, aged three years, and Carolina, Horace's sister. Despite the ill feeling existing between the factions, Clay Yancy is courting Carolina Kirby. One day Horace happens to come upon the sweethearts just as Yancy has merrily demanded a kiss as toll for crossing the bridge. Carolina, fearing a quarrel between Clay and Horace, pretends to refuse, on which Clay swears that never again shall a Kirby cross the bridge until some woman of their house shall buy the freedom with a kiss. A toll gate is erected and all but Kirbys are permitted to pass free. A bitter and bloody feud ensues. Yancy's sister dies and he rears the child as his own, never marrying. Neither does Carolina wed.

Twenty years pass. The toll gate has been maintained. Robert Kirby and Virginia (Yancy's niece), have grown to maturity and are at the same college. They fall in love and get married, hoping that it may bring peace to Bitter Creek. Virginia hears that her Uncle Clay has been wounded and feels that she must go to him. Robert also goes home, but for a time they keep their marriage secret. Jed Tolliver, a Yancy clansman, has loved Virginia and renews his attentions. The Kirbys, defeated in the long war, have resorted to the courts and the Supreme Court declares the toll gate is illegal and must be removed. Clay Yancy is furious and determines to blow up the bridge. Jed Tolliver accordingly lays the mines. Virginia tells Robert that she is afraid of Tolliver. He must take her away, and the announcement of their marriage be no longer delayed.

Robert and his wife cross to the Yancy side, are recognized, and their retreat cut off. They flee back across the bridge. Tolliver fires the mine and is himself killed, but Robert and Virginia reach the other side and go to the Kirby home where they are warmly received by Horace Kirby, who had loved Virginia's mother. From the wreck of the old bridge a small metal box is discovered and is taken to Clay Yancy. The box had been used by the lovers to leave letters, but into which Clay had never looked since the quarrel. In the box is a letter placed there by Carolina on the day of the quarrel, telling Clay that if he will send her a red rose she will go to him and pay the toll demanded. A new iron bridge is built over the creek, and one day Carolina receives a red rose. She realizes that Clay has learned the truth and goes joyously to pay the toll.

NOBODY WOULD BELIEVE (May 28).—To disprove the contention made by the social reformer, Roger Latham, that hundreds of girls are lost in the cities every year, the editor of the Star, which has ridiculed Latham, sends Violet Dare, a reporter, to make an investigation. Violet comes into the city disguised as a country girl, and shortly afterward meets Latham, who is conducting his work under an assumed name. She distrusts him because of his polished manners among the rougher element, and disregards his attempts to warn her of danger. On the other hand, she is attracted in a strange way to Bill Hanlon, notorious in the underworld, who, on his part, feels for the girl, the first decent emotion which has ever entered his heart. He determines that she shall come to no harm.

Violet is captured by a gang of crooks and is confined in a tenement attic. Both Hanlon and Latham learn of this and start to rescue her. They meet on the roof, and in their common interest, lay aside their own bitter enmity. They soon find that they can reach the girl only by way of the window, and as a last desperate measure, Latham is swung head-down from the roof by Hanlon, who manages to draw Violet to safety. The escape is discovered, however, and the captors cut off access to the stairway from the roof. The ammunition in the revolvers of Latham and Hanlon is soon exhausted, and as the gangsters rush up the stairs, the three make a desperate attempt to reach another roof, crossing on the telegraph wires. Some of the crooks follow, but when the other roof is reached in safety, Latham cuts the wires and the pursuers plunge to death below.

Latham and Hanlon manage to reach the river with Violet, but on the wharf, Hanlon sinks down, disclosing for the first time that he is wounded. It is impossible for Latham to save both Hanlon and Violet. The thugs reach the wharf and are getting into a boat when Hanlon, with his remaining strength, holds them at bay with a piece of timber until he is shot down. The arrival of the police results in the capture of the gangsters. Violet succeeds in reaching her home, under Latham's protection, and, though nearly exhausted, spends the remainder of the night in writing her wonderful story for the paper. When she hands in her "copy" the next day, she is met with a curt statement from the editor that he wanted a true story and not a faked one. When Violet protests that it is all true, he says that no one would believe it if it were published. Violet remains home in tears over her disappointment, but when Latham comes to her, disclosing his true identity, she finds happiness in the awakening love between them.

OUT FOR A STROLL (May 29.—"Happy Bill" starts out for a stroll, and, although he makes efforts to flirt with many of the fair sex, his advances are met with disappointment on all sides. He spies a beautifully dressed girl ahead of him and upon following and accosting her he nearly faints when he sees her face. But not discouraged with all this, he resumes his conquest. While leisurely strolling through the park, he flirts with the sweetheart of "Terrible Mike," the champion wrestler of the world, who is appearing at the Dixie Hall. Bill's luck does not last long, for Mike soon regains the company of the girl, and Bill is "cut out." In a spirit of revenge, Bill decides to go to the hall where Mike is performing. All of the contestants against the champion being thrown, a call is made for any member of the audience to meet the champion, with an offer of $500 to anyone who can stay five minutes. This is Bill's chance to seek revenge and he quickly accepts the challenge. Terrible Mike receives the surprise of his life when Bill begins to handle him with perfect ease, and when in a few minutes Bill pins him to the mat.

ESSANAY.

HIS REGENERATION (May 7).—The outlaw and his pals plot to rob the general store. He goes into the store with the intention of attracting the attention of the storekeeper while the rest of the gang enter from the rear. But the girl is the one who meets him and the outlaw feels a vague desire to reform at sight of her. He calls off the gang and orders them to let the store alone. But they are determined. While he is out of the camp gathering wood for the fire, they plot to overpower him. When he comes back they overpower him and leave him tied while they set out to rob. He frees himself by rolling into the fire and burning his bonds. He sets off in pursuit. He comes upon them in the act of robbing the store, forces them away at the point of his gun and accepts the thanks of the girl. Then he sorrowfully rides away.

THE OTHER GIRL (May 14).—The artist sits in his studio painting a picture. The girl comes in and greets him affectionately. Then she leaves and joins some friends who are selling tags for a charity organization. They all go to a cabaret with a man friend. The artist, accompanied by a chum, goes into the place and sees the girl. He reproaches her and she returns his ring. He goes into the country to paint. While there he meets the other girl, a sweet, unspoiled child of nature. He paints her picture and she falls in love with him. A tree which she and her father are cutting falls on the artist. They bring him to their cabin and the doctor says there is little hope for his recovery. The artist raves about the girl and the other girl determines to bring her to save his life. She performs this service and the artist and the girl are reunited.

THE FABLE OF THE TWO SENSATIONAL FAILURES (May 19).—Mr. and Mrs. Rutherford Wilton told their son, Oliver Cromwell, that he was going to be a great diplomat. As soon as Oliver was planted in college, the parents turned their attention to Eloise, who had not worked out according to the blue prints. In other words, Eloise was a bloomer and a natural drooper. She needed about two more dippings in thick starch. There wasn't enough whalebone in the department stores to give any gimp to Eloise. While they worried they got word that they might expect Oliver home any time now. He had refused to meet the professors except socially, so they gave him the tinware. The two apples of Paradise had turned out to be a lemon and a stringbean. Now get this. Oliver was some dancer. After the music

SAN MATEO CALIFORNIA
CHAS E HART MANAGER

SAN MATEO, CAL.

April 22nd, 1915.

Mr. Samuel Bowman,
Automatic Ticket Selling & Cash Register Co., St. Louis, Mo.

Dear Sir:

The AUTOMATIC Ticket selling machine arrived here a week ago. The installation was done according to directions, and was very simple. The Machine was in working order the same night on day of arrival.

It gives me pleasure to state that I am more than satisfied with the Machine and its result. I only regret that I did not know the benefit of all its advantages long ago. It means quick service, while the Cashier gives the change, the machine does the work.

The Checking system is a great piece of mechanism, and so far the Cashier's statement has corresponded with mine to a nickel at every performance.

Wishing you the best of success,
I remain,
Very truly yours,
CHAS. E. HART.

This letter shows how simple it is to install the automatic and how quickly it was done, besides the great advantages to this particular theatre. Why not just as advantageous to your theatre? Write for booklet, "Selling Tickets by Electricity."

started he was the big chief. Eloise went to see the great he dressmaker. The world was going crazy about the dances from Argentine and the Barbary coast. No wonder the queens of the smart set sent for Oliver to teach them the latest steps. Eloise put on one of the new gowns accompanied by the Slouchers Slink and knocked the town an awful twister. She married a millionaire. Old Rutherford was just going into bankruptcy when Oliver showed with the week's dancing receipts.

THE SECRET'S PRICE (May 24).—Billy, the beloved son of Mrs. Atherton, is ill and the doctor tells his mother that the only thing that will save him from death is a sojourn in the mountains. Mrs. Atherton is without money, but she refuses the help of Col. Stanhope because her dead husband had warned her against him. Heinrich Meyer, a foreign agent, learns that Mrs. Atherton has the plans of a great invention of her husband which will revolutionize modern warfare. He buys them from her. Stanhope learns of this and goes to Meyer. He tells him that he is the inventor and has kept silent because of his love for Mrs. Atherton. He pays Meyer back the money and keeps the plans. Mrs. Atherton goes to Meyer to make a bargain for the papers. Meyer tells her all and when Stanhope comes to her with the papers, she asks his forgiveness. He declares his love and the three go to the mountains.

ABOVE THE ABYSS (Special—Two Parts—May 25).—Leah, the wife of Jermyn Garston, a struggling author, is swallowed by the social whirlpool and becomes dissatisfied with life. Matthew Hendricks steps in at the psychological moment and makes love to her. Jermyn, sensing a tragedy, goes to the country to rest. While he is gone, Leah elopes with Hendricks. Later, Hendricks tires of her and casts her off. Meanwhile, Jermyn goes to the home of his foster mother in the country and finds Everild, her niece, living with her. Everild is a sweet, unspoiled child of the open spaces. Jermyn falls in love with her, but refrains from declaring himself because of his marriage vows. Hendricks, on a trip through the country, finds Everild and makes love to her. He makes arrangements for another elopement. Leah learns of it in time and warns Everild. Then she takes her place at the rendezvous, Hendricks' yacht. There she kills him and ends her own life. Jermyn then tells Everlid of his love.

THE FABLE OF THE INTERMITTENT FUSSER (May 26).—When Walter was a high school rabbit he snooped after one old enough to be his mother. Next he fell on an Amazon who wore a blazer and walked like a policeman. The she acrobat couldn't see him. As a sophomore he was strong for the actorines. When he was a senior the footlight favorites were no longer worthy of him. He was all snarled up over the sister of a prof. At commencement they were almost engaged. His father put him to work and two weeks later he had forgotten the lady highbrow. He began to act more like a human being and less like a college graduate. He was full of business and had very little time for the fluffy gender. At forty, he was known as a good business man with an adamant heart. All the fair sex passed him up. Then he met Violet. She was a half-portion, age 18. She did not know who was president, but she was a cutey to look at. A week later he began sending flowers and sitting up and barking when she snapped her fingers. She got him with a pruning hook and now he is a proud father.

VENGEANCE (Special—Three Parts—May 29).—Allen Haddock is summoned home from college by the suicide of his father. He finds a note in which his father tells him that Martin Scardon, a corrupt political boss, had threatened him with exposure because of a ruling years ago in which he had made a serious blunder, unless he decided a case about to come up in court in Scardon's favor. Rather than turn crooked or face exposure, the judge ends his life. His son determines to be avenged. He gets employment as Scardon's secretary and gathers evidence against his employer. The young man is in love with Lois Ware, daughter of Senator Ware, who is trying to put through an honest bill in the legislature. He is opposed by Scardon, who represents the moneyed interests.

Lois turns against Haddock, because he seems to be allied with Scardon. He explains to her he is playing a desperate game and asks her to trust him until the time comes to show his hand. In order to discredit Senator Ware, Scardon hires an adventuress to disgrace his daughter. Under a ruse she gets Lois and Haddock to come to her apartments. She locks them into a room together. Scardon then telephones Ware, telling him of his daughter's whereabouts, and takes several repotrers to the place. Scardon then offers to kill the story in the paper which he controls if Ware will drop his fight for his bill.

Haddock by this time has the evidence necessary to convict Scardon. He sees the ruse was a scheme hatched by Scardon, and produces his evidence. The adventuress confesses her part in the plot. Scardon, cornered, ends his life. Haddock has had his revenge and rid the state of a corrupt power. The sweethearts are then reunited.

A BUNCH OF MATCHES (May 27).—Old daddy drives into town with his bevy of four beautiful daughters. The town boys gather around and daddy perforce must use his driving whip to drive the girls' sweethearts away from them. They go into the village store and while daddy is buying vinegar, the four girls and their sweethearts spoon behind flour barrels and in nooks about the store. The merry widow comes to town and daddy falls in love with her while he drives her home. The girls and boys make the most of their opportunities and run away to get married. Arrived at the office of the justice of the peace, they fulfill their intentions and daddy wanders in to buy a marriage license. But the fickle widow denies him and takes the justice of the peace himself. The justice faints, however, and the Merry Widow remains a widow.

THE HAND OF MAHAWEE (May 1).—Mahawee, the bandit chief, loses his only son and tells Ezra Willard, a trader, that he caused the death of the boy and that Mahawee's hand henceforth, is forever against a white man. Mahawee with three bandits kidnap Raymond Cherry. Willard and others start a search for him. The search is fruitless and it is believed that the boy has been the prey of wild beasts.

Twenty years later, Raymond, who has not been killed, is known as Bazo. Staunton, the new commander at the post and Alva, daughter of Willard go for a walk. Staunton returns to his duties and Alva is tempted into the jungle where she meets Bazo, who is kind to her and shows her the way home. Weeks later Staunton's mind becomes unsettled and he has Alva watched. At the edge of the jungle Alva and Bazo again meet. Staunton and Willard pursue Bazo, who is known as a bandit. The natives take Staunton and Willard prisoners. Old Mahawee recognizes Willard and resolves to kill him. Alva pleads for her father's life and Bazo tells of his love for Alva. Mahawee then tells the secret of Bazo's life.

TIGER VAIT (May 15).—Frank Mason, with his wife and little son, Billie, live near the edge of the jungle. Bob Grant, a friend of Mason, also resides with them. Frank and Bob, accompanied by natives, go into the jungle to set a tiger trap. In the meantime, little Billie has been given a pet dog. The dog strays away, and the child, in pursuit, penetrates the jungle and becomes lost.

Mrs. Mason discovers her little son's absence and becomes frantic. The tiger trap has been baited with fresh beef. The dog goes straight toward the trap, as does an immense Bengal tiger. Little Billie innocently follows along in the wake of his pet dog. The dog enters the trap and little Billie, unconscious of danger, also crawls into the death trap. His parents and Bob Grant discover Billie unharmed and happy again in the possession of his dog.

THE JEST OF JEALOUSY (May 17).—Sheriff Hines lives at his western ranch, some miles from the frontier railroad town. Cyrus Green, chief deputy sheriff, and Edith Hines, the sheriff's daughter, who is attending college in the east, are practically engaged to marry. Hines has been unfortunate during his term of office, for several murderers have escaped capture, including Mexican Pete.

Pete shoots a mail carrier and the sheriff and posse start a search for the outlaw. The search is fruitless and Hines receives a letter from the Citizens' Committee threatening to get a new sheriff unless Hines makes good. Edith and an eastern friend, Bradner Phillips, arrive at the frontier town. Green reads a letter from Edith, who says that she is bringing with her "a young man whom she wishes to marry and settle in the west." Green believes that Edith has thrown him over. Hines understands and sympathizes with Green. Green sees Edith and Phillips riding from the town, and he fires at Phillips.

Phillips, returning to consciousness, tells that Mexican Pete was the man who shot him. Sheriff Hines finds the outlaw. Phillips recovers, and Edith changes Green's sorrow to joy by explaining that she wants Phillips to marry her girl chum at college.

ACROSS THE DESERT (May 18).—Bess receives a message from across the desert from her sister Madge, asking her to bring a wagon and horses and rescue her sister and baby and the gold. Marsh, the mountaineer, accompanies her, and Hooper, another suitor is angered.

In the meantime, Bess's sister dies and Marsh entering, takes the bags of gold. With the baby, Marsh and Bess drive away. Later, the horses run away and Bess and Marsh are left on the desert. Hooper finds the horses. He goes to the rescue and finds Bess. She tells him of the baby. Marsh, meantime, conscience-stricken, has recovered the child, but dies from exhaustion. Hooper finds the dead body and the baby. He returns the child to Bess, and she, later, shows her gratitude.

LOVE FINDS THE WAY (May 19).—Prudence Gordon evades her Aunt Phoebe's watchfulness and says she is going for a walk. In the interior of the woods she meets Ned Warner of the Continental Army and they embrace. He tells Prudence that his army may be ordered to join General Washington. Captain Gordon of the English Army arrives and asks for Prudence. Finding her gone, he becomes suspicious.

The captain discovers Ned and Prudence and tells Ned that no soldier of George Washington shall marry his daughter. As a punishment, Prudence is put in the attic of her home, and there she finds her mother's diary. Later, love finds the way, and Ned and Prudence are reunited.

THE TWO NATURES WITHIN HIM (Special—Three Parts—May 20).—The Rev. William Morris is the director of a small church near a state penitentiary. He is convinced that a criminal is only a good man gone wrong. Dr. Bishop, a friend of the minister, has made a life-long study of this very subject. The doctor has a daughter whom the minister loves and to whom he is engaged. These three people are all possessed of one idea—saving criminals. Prisoners leaving the penitentiary often repair to the little rectory where a light burns all night as a sort of beacon to them. The minister reasons with them, the girl pleads and the surgeon performs operations at times to relieve brain pressure which often causes a malversion of character.

One night a thief creeps toward the rectory. The Rev. Morris is startled by a noise. He turns the light low, hides and awaits developments. Muggsy, a thief, sneaks into the house. The minister confronts the thief, who strikes him over the head with a club. The victim falls to the floor and Muggsy escapes. When the Rev. Mooris finally comes to, the blow which has fallen upon his head has transformed him into another being. He prowls through his own home, for the thief's blow has transformed him into a criminal. He goes to the freight yards, climbs aboard a freight train and follows Muggsy, the thief, into the city. Muggsy flees in terror, believing the minister has pursued him. In the city, the minister becomes a low criminal. At the same time Muggsy, whom the minister has followed, is haunted by him until it is almost an obsession with him. He endures the company of the minister as long as possible, and then he begins to wonder. He tries him out by having him perform several criminal "jobs." The more they are together, the more Muggsy is terrified. He resolves that he will return to the rectory, to see if this man is really the minister whom he assaulted.

Muggsy and the minister, trailed by two detectives, go back to the little town. Muggsy hides in the same place by the shrubbery. There the minister comes up with him. Muggsy is terrified by his appearance, but the minister assures him that it is all right and that they will do the job together. The minister says he will go inside while Muggsy watches without, and the two detectives watch them both. On this night, the surgeon, who has taken possession of the minister's house, is sitting in the library with his daughter, when the two hear a noise. Again the thief, this time the minister himself, comes furtively in. The lights are turned on and the minister is caught. The doctor stumbles back paralyzed as he recognizes his old friend, and Mary shrieks, but the minister denies knowing either of them. Muggsy, meantime, has been caught by the two detectives and brought into the house. Later, the minister and Muggsy are led away by the police.

Mary is heartbroken and her father is puzzled. At Mary's urging, they go to the cell where the minister is confined. Again they plead with him, but it is of no avail for he does not know them. Finally Muggsy is brought in. The idea that he has been followed by the minister and betrayed has become a sort of mania with him and now, worked up, he tells all that happened. The minister, in a fury of wrath, pounces upon Muggsy, but the men are separated. The doctor suddenly sees the truth. He questions Muggsy, who tells the surgeon how he struck the minister with a black-jack. The surgeon feels the minister's head and realizes what has happened. He obtains permission and performs an operation upon the minister. After the operation, the crook again becomes the Rev. William Morris, and he is reunited with his sweetheart.

BIOGRAPH.

THE AVENGING SEA (May 24).—To the little fishing village came an artist on vacation, as once, many years before, another of his craft had come, innocently and with no thought of what the future might hold for him. The sea was his object. For a while he lived by the sea, striving to catch and convey to canvas some of its caprices; then the fisherman's granddaughter crossed his path, and he began to forget his mission. He was painting her portrait when her grandfather, discovering what had happened, came on the scene and, after hearing the artist's name, dashed the framed canvas upon the easel in sudden wrath. "Come away!" cried the terrible old man to the girl. To the girl her grandfather explained nothing, but to his old neighbor he told the tragic story of his daughter, who had loved that other artist and given her life for his child, Elsie. "And that man is his son!" he cried. "He will come tonight for my answer, and I shall kill him!" But the artist did not come. Instead, a boatman brought a note, telling Elsie's grandfather that she had eloped with her lover. They were beyond the old man's reach, but the sea must be reckoned with. At dawn, two bodies were cast up on the shore.

CAPTAIN FRACASSE (Special—Two Parts—May 25).—A troupe of strolling players, journeying through the country, sustain a breakdown of their wagon near the chateau of the impoverished young Baron de Sigognac, and are hospitably entertained by him. Among the members are two women to whom the young baron is particularly drawn—Madame Leonarde, the beloved duenna of the troupe, and Isabelle, a beautiful girl. Isabelle persuades the baron to join the troupe, and he is nothing loath to seize an opportunity of basking in her smiles.

On the road the baron is rehearsed in his first part, from which he assumes the name of Captain Fracasse. The wagon is ambushed by bandits under the leadship of Agostino; but Captain Fracasse leads the actors in a charge and drives off the bandits, after capturing a young girl, who, in response to questions, replies that she is a waif, named Chiquita, and adopted into the band by Agostino. Captain Fracasse gives Chiquita her freedom. That night, at an inn where they stop for safety, the players fall in with the profligate Duke de Vallombreuse and his friends. The duke makes advances to Isabelle and, being rebuffed, makes a wager with his friends that he will kiss the girl. The troupe repairs to the theater where a performance is to be given, and Captain Fracasse asks Isabelle to be his wife. She confesses her love, but says: "I am only a strolling player, while you are noble; and I love you too well to mar your future by marrying you." The duke, scheming to win his wager, is embarrassed by the sudden arrival of his father, who enters the box where Vallombreuse and his friends are seated. After the performance the duke makes his way behind the scenes and is about to kiss Isabelle, whom he has seized in his arms, when Captain Fracasse hurls him away. Swords are drawn, but the duke's friends implore him not to soil his weapon on a vagabond actor. The duke's father recognizes in Madame Leonarde an old acquaintance, and, strangely overcome with emotion, she leads him to a box where they may talk unheard. "That poor dying actress left your child in my care," she tells the sorrowful man before her, who conjures up visions of his wild youth, and of the girl he betrayed. "Isabelle is that child—your daughter," Madame Leonarde goes on, and the man starts up, eager to see his child. But when they reach the greenroom Isabelle is gone, abducted by Agostino and the other bandits at the behest of Vallombreuse. Despite the efforts of Captain Fracasse and his aids, they have taken her to the castle. Word of their destination is brought by little Chiquita, and she leads Captain Fracasse to the window through which he plunges in time to save Isabelle from self-destruction with the dagger which has menaced Vallombreuse in vain. The duke's father, following with his adherents, breaks into the room and stops the duel. To his abashed son he explains the hideous nature of his schemes in the words: "She is your sister!" Thus, also, he gives Isabelle her birthright and raises her from vagabondage to the level of the noblesse.

GRATITUDE (May 27).—Laughing Jim, a "square" gambler, arrives in camp, wearing a pair of toothpick shoes. Of all the characters who gather round his layout, the hardest loser is one Phil Mahoney. Jim ridicules Mahoney's play, and the bad man, in revenge, arouses public opinion against the gambler by accusing him of crooked dealing. Shakespeare George and his two partners, leaders of public opinion, urge Jim to cut out gambling, as it is his only chance to escape lynching, and he promises that he will play no more in that camp. During the night a thief makes off with the sacks of gold dust which Shakespeare George and his two partners have brought from their mine. Near the cabin are tracks of toothpick shoes and the friends believe Jim a black-hearted ingrate. Going in search of him, Shakespeare George reaches an Indian encampment, where he finds Laughing Jim lying, fatally wounded, in a tepee, and beside him the dead body of Phil Mahoney. Before he expires, Jim tells how he missed his toothpick shoes, followed the thief, and saw Mahoney sneaking away from the mine shack. He followed and saved the gold after a running fight with Mahoney. "You saved me—that squares our account—good-bye!" And Shakespeare George was left pondering on the true meaning of gratitude.

THE CANIDATES' PAST (May 28).—The opposition has chosen as its candidate for mayor a man who is not only honest and capable, but well known for his spotless political record. The ring realizes that a fight to the death is inevitable, and seeks to unearth in the candidate's private life something which may be used as a weapon against him. All efforts prove fruitless, however, and at last, in desperation, the ring boss demands that his sister, a beautiful and accomplished girl, take a position in the candidate's office and watch her opportunity to search his private papers. The girl demurs, but eventually consents to take advantage of the candidate's advertisement for a private secretary, and obtains the position. She soon has an opportunity to investigate his papers, and discovers a letter, written by a woman which apparently indicates a liaison. She abstracts this letter and carries it to her brother, who immediately summons his lieutenants and prepares his campaign. But they reckon without the girl. At the moment when they are plotting the candidate's ruin, she, in his office, is listening to the story of a woman who, accompanied by a child, has called to see her benefactor. "He saved us from being dispossessed when my husband was sick, sent us to the country and put us on our feet again"—so the woman's story runs. Swiftly the girl realizes the harm which she has done to her employer; she hurries home, abstracts the letter from its hiding place, and returns it to the candidate's files. When her brother goes to get it, so that it may be reproduced in the press, he finds only a blank sheet of paper. The candidate is elected mayor by a sweeping majority, and the warm interest he has taken in his secretary ripens into love. They are married, and on the evening of his election she is the first to hail him as mayor, while the crowds cheer outside the window.

TRUTH STRANGER THAN FICTION (May 29).—Hard pressed for money, the broker has appropriated funds of the firm, and dreads his partner's discovery of the deed. He tries in vain to borrow money, and determines to end his life after writing a confession. In the act of placing a pistol to his head, he is interrupted by a message informing him that oil has been discovered in the vicinity of his land, and the loan he requested will now be made. His one thought is to destroy the letter he left on his partner's desk. Entering the office by night, he is attacked by two robbers, who snatch the letter and leave him wounded. Fleeing from the police, the crooks enter the home of a novelist, who has procured a burglar's kit as a preliminary step to his investigation of the underworld. The kit establishes him as one of their order, and they invite him to their lair. At the home of the broker, whose daughter he loves, he overhears the two crooks and their female accomplice blackmailing his friend on the strength of the incriminating letter. He rushes to their den, secures the letter and, after a battle with the crooks, who are captured by the police, delivers the missive to his future father-in-law.

LAEMMLE.

THE GOLDEN WEDDING (May 30).—Jane Darling is an invalid, whose husband, Charles, was formerly a famous actor, but in his old age, has come down to be doorkeeper at a theater. For his wife's happiness, Charles still lets her think he is a famous star. He is helped, unconsciously, in the deception by a famous star of the present day, who has taken for a stage name the fallen star's surname and is playing at the same theater where Charles is doorkeeper, in a revival of the same play that Charles made his reputation in. One day as Charles is holding his little court about the door, composed of several children who hang about him, the star comes in and hears the old man reciting lines of the part he is playing in. He is surprised and, on talking with "Daddy," learns that the old man at one time read the same lines to his audience. That night the impression is deep on two minds. The star, eating his lonely dinner, wonders if he will come to what "Daddy" is now, while Jane, at home, reads of the success of the play and the encomiums heaped upon the star.

The next day is the wedding anniversary of the old couple and Jane intends to surprise her "star" husband by going to the theater unknown to him and watching him in his big success. At the last moment she tells her plan to her neighbor, who is horror struck at the idea,

MUTUAL MASTER PICTURES

In this adaptation of the famous and widely read novel, "At the Mercy of Tiberius," by Augusta Evans Wilson, a worthy criterion of film achievement has been attained.

The Thanhouser resources have been extended to accomplish the best effects in settings and dramatic values. The result compels conservative pride to give way to elation, for "GOD'S WITNESS" has surpassed all aims and expectations.

It is a distinct and refreshing departure from the prevalent conception of multi-reel requirements. Its tone is high, its appeal convincing, its types true and it moves naturally, smoothly and unerringly on to a terrifically tense emotional climax.

Wherever human hearts throb with the tempest and sunshine of existence there will "GOD'S WITNESS" find enthusiastic approval.

knowing that "Daddy" is only a doorkeeper at the theater and fearing that the shock of the surprise will kill her. The old lady is too determined to be turned aside and they leave for the theater.

At the theater things are not going well, the star is late and they are anxiously waiting his arrival. When he does arrive, in his hurry to get out of his car, he slips and wrenches his ankle so badly that he is unable to go on with the play. He persuades the manager to put "Daddy" on in his place, knowing his familiarity with the play, and, after many arguments, "Daddy" is finally given the part.

His rendition of the part is more than perfect. Jane has taken a front seat and is unable to contain herself. "Daddy" sees her, and for an instant, falters in his lines, but his old training comes into play and he goes on coolly with the part. He motions her to come back of the stage and after the performance, there is a very happy reunion. The star secretly makes the manager let "Daddy" take the part as long as the play runs so his wife will never know of the deception and as the story ends, "Daddy" comes again into the triumphs of his youth.

THE GIRL WHO HAD A SOUL (Three Parts—May 10).—Old Mother Hubbard is the chief of a band of crooks. Mary is one of them, and is given some of the more difficult tasks, as she has proven that she is best able to evade the hands of the law. For this she is given the soubriquet of "The Dodger." She is almost apprehended by Wilkes, a detective, one day while picking pockets, but manages to give him the slip. Mary is peering into a florist's window when she is seen and admired by Dr. Carl Roberts, who happens to be passing with his fiancee, Agnes Merrick. The doctor remarks to Agnes that the soul of that girl is apparent in her eyes. The next day, Dutchy, a fellow thief, is to rob a jeweler named Isaacson, and tells Mary to help him. The detective bureau are apprised of the contemplated robbery, and Wilkes is assigned to watch the crooks. Dutchy is in the act of passing the jewels to Mary who puts them in her muff when they are observed by the detective. He follows Mary and she succeeds in losing him by darting around a corner. She is knocked down by Dr. Roberts' automobile, and he takes her to a hospital. When she has regained her strength, she is given a position as housekeeper in Dr. Roberts home to fill the place of the woman who left.

Agnes is really in love with Dr. Fox, the assistant to Dr. Roberts, but is marrying the latter purely for his money. Dr Roberts is unaware of the unfaithfulness of his fiancee and his assistant. Mary visits the den of thieves, surrenders the plunder of jewels, and voices her resolution of having nothing further to do with them. Dutchy, believing that Mary is trying to pull something over them, has his mother—Old Mother Hubbard—delegate another member to follow Mary and learn her new address. Mary hears of Agnes' engagement to Dr. Roberts, and becomes jealous, for she has fallen in love with him herself. Having secured Mary's address, Dutchy, under the pretext of being ill, visits Roberts' office, and is successful in giving Mary a note warning her not to do the gang any harm.

After a dinner given by Dr. Roberts in honor of his engagement, Dr. Fox and Agnes slip into the office of Dr. Roberts where Mary is trying to seek solace in seclusion. She surprises them by turning on the lights, and finds them in each other's embrace. Dr. Fox threatens her to silence by telling her that he will apprise Dr. Roberts of Dutchy's visit to the house when the doctor was absent, and of Dutchy's threat to put her into prison if she does not steal on the night of the dinner the expensive string of pearls which Roberts had bought for his fiancee, and to which demand she acceded. Afraid that Dr. Fox would strike her in his rage, she raises her arm to protect herself in such a way that it is interpreted by Dutchy, who is hovering outside, as the sign to enter.

Dr. Roberts, looking for Agnes to give her the present, is told by the butler, who had seen Dr. Fox and Agnes, go into the office where they are. Roberts becomes suspicious, and Mary tries to stop him from going into the office. In pushing her aside, he drops the pearls. She picks them up, and peers into the room where the two men and Agnes are. Fox wounds Roberts, who, in self-defense, seizes a scalpel, and, with the little strength that he has left, stabs his opponent in the back. Fox dies. Dutchy enters, Agnes exits, and the crook takes the pearls from Mary. He is caught, however, by the waiting detectives. Dr. Roberts lapses into unconsciousness, and Mary, to prevent the stigma of a murderer from the doctor's name, professes to have killed Fox. She is arrested and Agnes remains silent. During the trial, Agnes, who has now developed a strong hatred for the man who killed her lover, declares that Mary is lying, and explains everything. Through a newspaper, Roberts learns of the situation, and supported by a doctor he appears in the court room and tells his story. He is pardoned, and tells Mary that notwithstanding her past, he wants her to be his wife. Dutchy is sentenced to a long term in prison.

A WITCH OF SALEM TOWN (Two Parts—May 24).—Desire, Goody Martin's ward, is a waif from one of the French colonies. She is distrusted by the stern Puritans of old Salem. Goody Martin dies leaving her herb lore secrets to the girl who practices them. The old governor meets her and, being struck by her beauty, tries to kiss her. She slaps him and he never forgets. Later the fear of witchery spreads through the colonies. Desire's hut is burned and she is pursued and stoned until saved by Margaret Malden, for whom she becomes a maid. Here Margaret's fiancee, John, meets and falls in love with the little maid whom he calls a very witch in all truth.

Later he sees her dancing wildly and freely in the wood and his love cannot be repressed. He catches her in his arms and kisses her. She admits her love for him, too, but then remembers Margaret. Fearing to spoil the love of one who has been so good to her, she goes back to the woods. It is forbidden for any woman to practise what is called black magic in Salem. Desire, on a visit to the town, sees a woman burned and is horrified. Margaret falls ill. The doctor cannot help her. Desire comes back to see her. She knows the herb that will make her well, and, despite all protest, goes ahead.

Margaret recovers, but Desire is arrested as a witch. In her cell she is sentenced to death as a witch. John and Margaret visit her and say good-bye. Later the old governor comes in. He says good-bye and taunts her. Finally he offers her freedom if she will yield to his love. She laughs in his face. Later she is led out to execution. John comforts Margaret, but he thinks of the other girl, who goes to her martyrdom in that hour. And, as the flames creep about her, Desire bows her head in prayer.

THE NIGHTMARE OF A MOVIE FAN (May 28).—Beatrice and Joe, a happy young married couple, disagree on but one thing. Beatrice is a picture fan and cherishes the photographs of all the picture stars. Her own particular favorite, however, is Charles Le Monde, and she insists on seeing him in pictures whenever possible. Joe is ordered west on a business trip, and his wife accompanies him. Arriving in California, Beatrice is invited by some lady friends to go to the studios and see how pictures are made. There she spies the idol of her dreams. However, it suddenly begins to dawn upon her, that he is not quite as popular at the studio as he is on the screen.

The director bawls at him, the assistant director raves at him, and he is held in haughty contempt by the cameraman. Suddenly, in a heated row with the director, he flatly resigns and goes to his dressing room. The heartbroken Beatrice follows. Presently he emerges from the dressingroom with dusty, unkept clothes and a slouchy hat. However, the culmination of her disappointment arrives when, at the gate, the romantic Charles is met by a most unromantic female person, who has in tow several illy-dressed children.

The unhappy Beatrice goes home and contrasts the photograph of Charles with that of her husband. They mutually plead their cases, and at the finish, the picture of Charles, torn in little squares, reposes in the bottom of the waste-basket.

BIG "U."

THE MASTER ROGUES OF EUROPE (Three Parts—May 9).—Olga, an auventuress, receives a doped cigarette from her accomplice, Peter, to be given to the Count Von Rade, a wealthy nobleman whom they are trying to entrap. Olga has previously written a letter to the Count naming a rendezvous where she has agreed to meet him. A few moments later the Count arrives and picks up Olga in his automobile. Olga gives the Count a cigarette, the only one left in her case, and soon the latter falls unconscious. Olga takes the wheel from him and brings the auto back to where Peter is waiting. Unknown to either of the two conspirators, James Langtry, an English chemist, is watching them as they remove the Count from the car and rob him of all he has upon him, including a large sum of money and a pearl necklace. In her hurry Olga drops her fur cap. Langtry picks the cap up, hastens to the Count's assistance and takes the stupefied nobleman to a hospital. There he tells his story and the police are notified.

The latter inspect the neighborhood of the Alexis bridge where the robbery occurred. The fur cap serves as a clue to the owner and from the maker of the cap the police soon learn that only three of the caps have been sold. The owners of all three fur caps are watched and suspicion finally falls on Olga. The police throw a cordon around her home and Peter and Olga, looking from a window, see the officers waiting to seize them when they leave. The police finally enter the house, prepared for a fight, and seize Olga. Peter climbs out of a window and clings to a window shutter while the officers are searching the apartment. After a search the police find the jewels in a cabinet and an incriminating letter causes them to take Olga with them to prison. Peter, after their departure, swings back into the deserted room.

The police continue to watch the house and Peter intercepts an old woman on the stairs, induces her to change clothes with him for a purse of gold, and then hurries from the house unrecognized. Notices have been posted offering 500 roubles reward for Peter's apprehension. The criminal goes to a restaurant connected with a dive where he meets another friend from the underworld. The two read in a newspaper of Olga Sopolska's arrest and of her sentence to penal servitude for life in Siberia. Peter's friend agrees to dress as a peasant and to assist Peter in rescuing Olga.

Olga is taken along a country road together with other political offenders guarded by a platoon of soldiers. Peter writes a note reading as follows: "Pretend that you cannot walk and I will do the rest." The note is rolled into a cigarette. Soon after Peter hires an automobile and drives it himself to a point in the road where the soldiers and their prisoners must pass. He pretends to have a blowout and when the soldiers pass along, Peter engages an officer accompanying Olga in conversation. He offers the soldier a cigarette and accidentally drops it. When the soldier stoops to pick it up Peter slips the note he has written to Olga. Olga soon after pretends that she is too weary to walk and the officer asks Peter to give her a lift in his car.

Noon approaches and the soldiers stop to rest. Peter buys all the soldiers wine and food while his accomplice, disguised as a peasant, removes the bullets from their guns. While they are eating and the officer is inside a nearby roadhouse, the peasant quietly gets in the car with Olga and Peter and all three drive off. The soldiers attempt to fire upon them but find that the bullets have been removed from their guns. After their escape Olga and Peter repair to an English watering resort where Olga tries to entrap Count Feauchon, a French nobleman, into marrying her. Dr. Langtry, the nephew of Count Feauchon, notifies the police and the latter return to Count Feauchon's home and catch Olga and Peter as they are about to rifle the Count's cabinet containing his jewels and valuables. Langtry remembers the pair is the ones who robbed Count Von Rade and obtains their conviction.

A BURIED CITY (May 13).—Starting on a trip with the professor to see how archaelogical explorations are made, Homer Croy sees the remains of the "kings' feet," done in stone many thousands of years ago. The professor shows Mr. Croy where the digging goes. They walk through the streets of Cairo showing where mummies have been found. Then they come to a former tomb.

Later, a miniature railway is shown which is used in making the excavations, and the workmen discover a mummy 4,000 years old. The dust has to be carefully blown aside in order not to disturb the crumbling bones which are shown in a close-up of the picture. The professor shows a bust of a former king of Egypt. The relic is 3,000 years old. A scene follows showing the finds sent to America and our flag floating a few feet from the Great Pyramid over the professor's house.

THE MEMORY TREE (May 27).—The play begins with preparations for the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the closing of the Civil War, in a Southern town. The committee chooses the veterans of the highest rank to lead the parade. The honors fall to Colonel Fitzhugh, who fought with the blue. As Fitzhugh leaves his house he meets old McCormick, a Confederate veteran, and Fitzhugh shows the bitter hatred he cherishes for the kind old fellow. That night Fitzhugh's memory goes back to the past. Just before the war, both Fitzhugh and McCormick were rivals for the hand of Mollie Crane, a village belle, and in the bark of the tree beneath which Fitzhugh had wooed Mollie, he has carved her initials and his own. Mollie, however, has secretly given her heart to McCormick. When the war begins and the men are called to the colors, Fitzhugh remains loyal to the Union, but McCormick joins the rebels.

When McCormick calls to bid good-bye to Mollie, he surprises Fitzhugh and Mollie in the garden. Fitzhugh is proposing to Mollie, who promises to give her answer after the war. Their backs are turned toward him and their attitude leads him to believe that Fitzhugh is the favored suitor. During the war, Captain Fitzhugh is captured and led before Captain McCormick a prisoner. McCormick assists him to escape for Mollie's sake. The war is over. Fitzhugh finds that in the design he has carved in the tree McCormick's initials have been substituted for his own. When McCormick arrives, Mollie leads him to the tree. He discovers his error and they are married in the village chapel.

But the same night his hatred changes to remorse. He breaks down and tells his daughter the whole story, that McCormick is the worthier man, and that the honors of the coming celebration should go to him. She consoles him, and suggests that he and his comrades call on McCormick and confer the honor upon him. This Fitzhugh brings about. The veterans call at the old shack in which McCormick lives and find him seated at a table, dead. The picture diaphragms out with McCormick being buried with military honors.

A MODERN ENOCH ARDEN (Three parts—May 30).—Janet Fotheringay, to save her father from financial ruin, marries a millionaire suitor, John Arnold, a power in the street. Janet is in love with Dicky Bannister, but sacrifices all for her father's honor. Arnold, of course, turns out a brute and Janet, for this reason, keeps up her friendship with Bannister, the rising young playwright. One evening Mr. Courtney Fortheringay calls and attempts to interfere in Arnold's brutal treatment of Janet, for which he receives a blow at the hands of Arnold, which causes him to fall to the floor, striking his head and killing him. Arnold becomes a fugitive and makes his way out West. Before departing he cleverly simulates suicide and Janet, believing she is now free, marries Dicky Bannister, whom she has always loved.

Bannister becomes a great success in his line and he and his wife are very happy with the child who has blessed their home. In the West, Arnold, who is going under an assumed name, becomes an outlaw for the second time. He sees a notice of Bannister's success in a newspaper and also notes that Bannister and Janet are man and wife. He plans to return and torment Janet. Bannister is busy with the rehearsals of his latest play on the night that Arnold returns to Janet. Janet protects herself with her husband's revolver and Bannister returns home just as his wife has been placed under arrest for the murder of Arnold. Weeks of anxiety follow, but in the end the jury returns a verdict of justifiable homicide, which brings happiness to all concerned.

NESTOR.

SEEING INDIA WITH HOMER CROY (On same reel with "He Fell in the Park," a story of which was published on page 970 of the May 8 issue. The reel was released on May 11).—A Hindoo woman carrying mortar is followed by a Hindoo policeman. A scene shows that barbers in India sit down to their work. Another big scene shows dozens of sacred cows on the street. These cows belong to no one and must be fed. It is considered a sin to pass by an animal in the street without offering some food. Homer Croy then visits a Hindoo temple. He is compelled to take his shoes off before entering. The next scene shows holy men in a bed of spikes. This is a form of self-punishment.

WHEN HER IDOL FELL (May 25).—Slingarlic, the famous violinist, is a "lion." Women hasten to have their parlors graced by his presence. One morning Mr. Newlywed, who has noticed his wife's interest in the violinist, sees her cut out a picture from the paper and kiss it. As soon as she leaves, he picks up the paper and notices, beneath the article cut out, "The famous violinist, Slingarlic." He is jealous of his wife's love for the foreigner, and resolves to take action. Mrs. Newlywed gives a big reception for the violinist. When hubby gets wind of his rival's presence in the house, he and several other husbands who are disgusted with their wives carrying on over the celebrity, get together and work out a scheme. Newlywed brings in a box of axle grease and, catching the butler as he passes through the hall with the precious violin, they take it from him and grease both strings and bow with the axle grease.

Meanwhile Slingarlic arrives and is enthusiastically received. The women all vie with each other in complimenting him and trying to win his favor. Mrs. Newlywed, through the strength of being hostess, finally entices him away from the crowd and they take refuge in the conservatory. She makes violent love to him and even gets upon her knees. All this, of course, is very embarrassing to the little violinist, and his agitation is increased when he hears the snickers of the other women who have followed them. He rushes blindly into the drawing room and is met by Newlywed and his friends. They welcome him and urge him to play for them. Slingarlic gracefully starts to play. But the axle grease gets in its slick work and the bow merely slides backward and forward without a sound.

Slingarlic is humiliated. Hubby and friends are jubliant. They laugh and roar. The women all stand astounded, and, instead of joining in, they all show apathy for the poor man. This is a hard blow for the men. They succeed in getting him out of the house. Next day one of the neighbors comes in and shows Mrs. Newlywed an article where the famous violinist Slingarlic's wife and seventeen children have just arrived from the old country. This is a blow to her and the neighbor leaves her crushed. When hubby comes home she goes to him, reviles the violinist and says she has seen the last of him. She tells him she never cared for him and was merely having a good time and as the picture fades, we see her steathily sneak the paper off the table and hide it behind her.

WITH FATHER'S HELP (May 28).—Father has chosen as a future husband for his daughter Percival, a wealthy young man. Daughter loves Jack, who is honest but poor. Mother has still another matrimonial possibility in view, with a young aristocrat with no money. Mother has things her own way and father, to avoid a family row, apparently agrees with mother's choice, but gets the daughter aside and tells her he will give her $500 to elope with Percival. Arrangements for the event go forward. Mother is in her glory, Father is also in a high state of good humor. Daughter, however, slips the word to Jack to be at the house early and she will go away with him. The event is scheduled for 3 o'clock. Mother's choice, thinking he has plenty of time, is languidly dressing. Percival sets out in his automobile and on the road is met by Jack, who ties him up and leaves him beside the road in the bushes. They all hear an automobile horn at the gate. Mother is suspicious, knowing it is not time for the wedding. Father has to use all his powers to quiet her suspicions. The daughter slips in and tells father that she is ready to elope and he sneaks her the five hundred dollars and holds mother's attention while she slips out.

Then mother's choice shows up and there is more excitement. She realizes her daughter has eloped and telephones to the police to catch the eloping couple on the south road. Hastily calling their car she and hubby pile in and start after the fugitives. Jack and his fiancee see them coming and, running the car to one side, duck into the tonneau. Mother comes up to them and asks the chauffeur if he saw an eloping couple. He points ahead and they rush on. They run into the cops who are watching for the elopers and are arrested by mistake. Father insults the cops in the hopes that they will take them to the station and thereby be sure that the elopers escape. Finally they are turned loose and outside meet poor Percival, who tells them his tale of woe. At last father asknowledges that he has been outwitted by the wily couple and gives them his blessing.

POWERS.

LADY RAFFLES AND DETECTIVE DUCK IN "THE GREAT EGG ROBBERY" May 27).—The city is being terrorized by a mysterious female Raffles. At last, in desperation, the chief of police sends for his friend, the famous sleuth, Detective Duck. While these two are sitting in conference, Raffles, in her search for loot, enters the home of Mrs. Gotta Millun. Raffles' eyes sparkle as she takes in with delight the rich Oriental knick-knacks and furnishings. Mrs. Millun is a connoisseur. Raffles hides under a table when Mrs. Millun comes in.

Mrs. Millun has just received a gift from her brother in far-off India. It is a jewel case containing eight beautiful and rare pearls as large as hen eggs. In a note accompanying them her brother explains that the jewels were part of the loot of the Britishers when they raided Oski Wow Wow, and that they were taken from a famous Indian Princess who had sworn eternal vengeance on all who thereafter possessed them. This fact did not worry Mrs. Millun. Raffles secures a glimpse of the pearls. She manages to read the note accompanying them. Such magnificent pearls must not be allowed to go unstolen! A great scheme enters her mind.

Raffles later appears before Mrs. Millun. She has disguised herself and is impersonating the Indian princess mentioned in the note. She tells Mrs. Millun that she has come for the pearls, which are rightfully her own. Mrs. Millun ejects the intruder. Then a note appears on Mrs. Millun's front door. It is from this supposed East Indian Princess. Its contents fill the good woman with dread apprehension. She phones the chief of police, who sends the famous Detective Duck, who, upon learning Mrs. Millun's story, hides the pearls in a tooth cavity, replacing them in the jewel case with hen eggs.

That night, Raffles, still impersonating the East Indian Princess, appears again. She spots the famous detective and drugs his wine with a sleeping powder. He discovers her, however, and, after a terrific tussle, manages to lock her in the vault. Feeling mighty good at his exploit he drinks his wine, after which he phones for the chief of police to come and see his prize. Then the sleeping powder takes effect. He is in the middle of a horrible nightmare wherein the supposed Indian Princess is treating him to an awful dose of scares when the chief arrives and awakens him after strenuous effort. Then the two dumbfounded men discover the vault wide open. The bird has flown. In the empty jewel case is a note containing these words: "Da safe opens from de inside, yer loon. Say, cutey, where did you hide those pearls? Never mind, I'll get 'em yet. Thanks for de breakfast food.—Da Mysterious Female Raffles."

THE AMBER VASE (May 29).—Robert Wagner, a distinguished artist, is commissioned to paint a large vase, but he lacks inspiration in the model he has chosen. Red and Mack Clarke are two crooks, whom the police are watching. They read in the newspapers of this exceedingly valuable vase, and force their sister to attempt to steal it.

That night the artist remains seated in his studio after the butler has closed the house, planning a design for the vase. Mag enters the room with a burglar's spotlight, clad in boy's attire, while the brother keeps watch outside. Wagner turns on the lights and the girl is his prisoner. The brothers are captured by the police. On the entrance of the police with the two crooks they discover the girl posing for the famous artist, who tells them that she is his model. Mag thanks the artist for having saved her from the police, and gives up her life of crime.

RADIUM GOLD FIBRE SCREEN

As each summer comes the thousands of people who delight to find a big share of their entertainment at outdoor motion picture shows are expecting more for their money.

They may be satisfied to sit on rough wooden benches—but they certainly will not be satisfied with poor projection. They have been taught the difference between pictures shown on a white-washed or painted wall and those marked out clearly and distinctly on a projection surface especially prepared.

Not only will the

make the most of the picture service you use but it will also serve as a permanent advertisement for your place of business.

Tell the people you are using a RADIUM GOLD FIBRE SCREEN and they will keep your box office busy

You Can Open One Hour Earlier Each Evening

—and the extra hour of show you get will more than pay the difference in cost between a painted wall and "the best projection surface in the world."

interfered and the dog bit him on the calf. Harry escaped, but the cop had him spotted for future reference. Meantime, Hank was having disagreements with his girl's father and his rival. Both were quarrelsome and it was not until Hank got a couple of kicks in the face that he realized it was useless to try and make up with them.

He met the girl in the park after father had thrown him out the window. Another annoyance arose here when a gink tried to horn in and flirt with his girl. Hank got this intruder safely disposed of when Harry and his dog appeared. The cop who was trailing them also appeared. Hank hit Harry. Harry hit a bystander and the dog bit the cop again. All of them went into the lake except the girl and she went off with another fellow.

HIRAM'S INHERITANCE (May 24).—Hiram and Zeke love Arabella. The matter reaches the stage of acute contention. Finally Arabella settles things by accepting Zeke. Hiram is bitterly sore. Zeke and Arabella start to hitch up to drive to the parson's. At this point, Arabella is handed a letter by the postmaster to deliver to Hi. Overcome by curiosity, Arabella manages to read it. It reveals to her the fact that Hi has inherited a large sum of money, which will be forwarded in a few days. She tears the letter up and returns to Hi, showering him with affections. Poor Zeke is left in the cold. Arabella rushes Hi to the parson's, where they are married.

Now Arabella has a maid-of-all-work named Tillie. Tillie has long and secretly loved Zeke. She is delighted with the present turn of affairs, but Zeke, broken-hearted, still refuses to pay her attention. During the wedding dinner, Arabella hears Zeke's familiar whistle. It haunts her. She goes to him and endeavors to soothe him. Hi witnesses the act. He misunderstands, and, enraged, he sends Zeke about his business, starting an argument with his bride. She turns on him furiously. Her remarks cut him deep, and he determines to drown himself. Hi goes down to the river. To scare Arabella, he leaves his hat and coat on the bank and hides in the barn loft.

Arabella is terribly upset when she receives word of the supposed death of her groom. Zeke, on the contrary, is overjoyed. He finds Arabella grieving in the barn. He endeavors to renew his suit for her hand. Hi is a very interested listener in the loft above. Hi's inheritance comes. It is brought to Arabella in the barn. Hi is flabbergasted when he overhears the conversation. And when he hears Zeke trying to persuade Arabella to forget the "poor dub," take his money and marry him (Zeke) it is more than Hi can stand. He alights into the situation like a thunderbolt and certainly routs Zeke. Arabella is hysterical with joy. Zeke now decides that Tillie is the girl for him, anyhow, and the four of them leave for the parson's.

TRICKERY (Two Parts—May 26).—Edward Garfield, after several years of study abroad, returns to his aged father, a retired capitalist. It has long been the old man's outspoken wish that his son and Doris Wentworth, his ward, should marry, and the old man had made his will leaving everything to his son, with this union in view. Doctor Granice, the family physician, is in the old man's confidence and knows of his hopes. The doctor secretly loves Doris, but is held back on account of his relations with an adventuress, Mildred Clement. There is a fond greeting between the father and son, and the son looks around inquiringly for Doris. The old man tells him the girl is in the garden, where he finds her. A happy meeting between them takes place. Edward, after his long years of study, seeks recreation and soon drifts into a fast set.

Doris notices the change in him and is very much worried. One night while he and a party of young men are having a gay time at the cafe, the family doctor and his woman companion come into the place and the woman sees Edward. She is attracted to him and asks the doctor about him. When she finds out that he is the son of a rich old man she expresses a wish to meet him and the doctor, seeing a way to get rid of the woman, does all in his power to help the thing along. The infatuation of Edward for the woman grows and he loses all respect for himself. Finally she gets him to propose and accepts him. He persuades her to accompany him to his father to announce the good news. The doctor feels that he is free of the woman and offers his love to Doris, who rejects him, telling him that he knows of her guardian's wish. At this moment Edward and his fiancee arrive. He announces his engagement. His old father, in a furious rage, tells him he can choose between his inheritance and the woman. On choosing the latter, the old man tears up the will, and orders them out of the house.

Doris is overcome with grief. The doctor, seeing that that it is partly due to his work, resolves to help her win Edward back. He tells her his plan, and she agrees. He gives the old man a sleeping powder and telephones the son that his father is dying. The boy resolves to return home, but the woman insists on coming with him, taking along a rough will which she has drawn up and expects to get him to make his father sign before he dies. The doctor battles all night, apparently, to bring the father to consciousness, and in the morning tells them he is successful. The son falls on his knees and asks for his father's forgiveness, which is granted. The adventuress tries to force her way in with the will, but is blocked by the doctor, who shows her the way out. As the picture fades, Edward and Doris are seen in the garden, renewing their broken vows, while the old father and the doctor watch them from the window.

SHATTERED MEMORIES (Three Parts—May 25).—Jasper Wells and Jane Marsh are sweethearts in the village of Pleasanton, Mass., at the time of the Civil War. Jane, with tears in her eyes, tells Jasper that if he returns alive, he will find her waiting for him under the old oak tree. Jasper leaves for the front. Just before an important battle, Jasper's general receives a humorous note from a Confederate general who has surrounded him saying he expects to capture the camp the following day, when he will use the Federal general's standard for a table cloth. The Federal general chats with Jasper Wells, who is the standard bearer of his company, and tells him to keep an eye on his flag. Jasper promises to guard the flag with his life. His companions plot to hide the flag to give him a scare. Jasper determines to hide the flag in the hollow of an old tree and in doing so comes face to face with a Confederate spy. There is a terrific struggle. The spy manages to hit Jasper over the head with a revolver. Jasper falls unconscious. The spy strips him of his uniform, as he needs it to cross the enemy s line, leaving his own in its place.

Jasper recovers to find that he has lost his memory. He dresses in the Confederate uniform and is found later by a searching party from his company. Evidence is found in the pocket of the uniform and all believe him a traitor, as he cannot explain what he has done with the flag. He is condemned to death, but before he is executed, the battle starts. The barn in which he is confined is blown up. The enemy, seeing him in a Confederate uniform, care for him and take him with them. At the close of the war, Jasper, still unaware of his identity, wanders on to the estate of Col. Mobray.

He is looking for work. The Colonel, who turns out to be the spy who was responsible for Jasper's injury, gives Jasper work and cares for him. Later, they leave for the North together. They arrive in the village of Pleasanton on Memorial Day. Jasper, in company with the Colonel, sees the marching soldiers. The flag impresses him deeply. He follows the parade until it reaches the house where Jane, now grown old, resides, spending her time knitting under the old oak tree where she promised to meet her lover upon his return. Jason carries a flag in the parade. As he reaches the street in which is Jane's home, he sees her sitting under the tree, as ever, knitting. Recognizing her, his memory returns and he approaches her, being received with open arms. Jane assures him that she knew he would return and had resolved to wait until death. She had never believed he had been a traitor, as reported, and, as the story closes, the two lovers of long ago are fast in each other's embrace.

UNCLE'S NEW BLAZER (May 10).—Violet is in love with Billie, who is a good-for-nothing rich fellow, and his aunt and uncle decide to give him an opportunity to study law in his uncle's office. Aunt buys uncle a striped coat, a tennis blazer. He is quite horrified with it, but she insists that he wear it to the office. He hangs it on the hat rack near the door at the office. Billy gets awfully lazy and sneaks out. He accidentally puts on his uncle's blazer and meets his sweetheart. An old gossip-monger sees the supposed uncle embracing and kissing the girl and rushes home to tell his wife.

Aunt is very angry and sends for her nephew, telling him that if he will find a sweetheart he will get $500 as a reward, but the girl must also possess a fortune. She suggests the girl who was with her husband and then Billy sees the mistake. He determines to use the information in procuring the prize and tells his sweetheart the scheme. It all ends happily after many complications, and Billy and Violet marry with the $500 as a wedding gift.

DESTINY'S TRUMP CARD (May 17).—Through the waving curtains of the darkened library, outlined by the moonlight coming through the windows, the figure of a crouching man is seen. He steals to the safe, which he opens and then vanishes. Bill Avery, a crook, is back at his old trade. Five years in prison has not made him fear the hands of the law. He dodges along the shadows in the street of the underworld until he reaches the hovel where his wife is living. There he sighs with relief. He is safe, for the present, at least. His haunted look tells his wife that her Bill, for whom she has waited and slaved for years, is thieving again. Her look makes even this hardened criminal cringe. He tries to placate her off by offering her the loot, but she shrinks from it. Angered by this, he leaves her.

He finds denizens of the underworld willing to drink with him and forget what they are. Bill's wife, Violet, toils in a laundry, subjected to the advances of a man who attempts to induce her to abandon Bill. After each day Violet hurries home only to find that Bill has not returned. Destiny takes a hand. Bill is robbed and has no place to go except home. He plans another job and all Violet's pleadings do not deter him. When she tries to restrain him from keeping his appointment with his pals, he falls and his limp arm convinces him that he is disabled, the job is put off. Bill's pals wait in vain, then undertake the job alone. They break into a mansion up the river, steal the family silver, but in doing so, drop some of it. The noise attracts the butler, who surprises the thieves. A fight follows. The butler is overpowered and the thieves make a getaway. The police get busy, but fail to place the crime upon anyone. Bill's pals leave their loot with him but do not tell him that in the fight with the butler one of the thieves received an injury on the arm. When Bill appears on the street with his injured arm he is arrested.

When Violet, at work in the laundry, is again approached by the manager, Violet leaves, deciding to go with Bill into the country. The thieves, afraid that Bill will double-cross them, steal to his room and find Bill gone. Then take the loot with them. As Violet is packing up the police enter to search her house, and are convinced she is making a getaway. She is arrested, but protests and when the policeman takes her luggage to the station she remonstrates, protesting "he has no right to touch that." At the station, the captain searches Bill's belongings and, realizing the word of a crook will not be accepted, sees the prison gates yawn. The captain opens Violet's bag and finds a complete set of baby's clothes for Violet's unborn child. Bill is released and this time determines to go straight for Violet and his child's sake.

FIFTY-FIFTY (Second Episode of "The Life of David Briggs" Series—May 24).—David Briggs transferred from the dry goods counter to the management of the soda department, is peeved because he is compelled to wear a white coat, and is chagrined by the guying he receives from Jenny, for whom he has succeeded in obtaining a position as one of his assistants. Miss Astorocks, a wealthy society girl, has been robbed while drinking a glass of soda. Briggs succeeds in recovering the lost articles, and goes to Miss Astorocks' house to restore them. She has left orders with her butler that if a certain would-be suitor called, to throw him out. The butler mistakes Briggs for him, throws him into the street. Briggs, who has spent his last cent to taxi there, is compelled to walk home—a horrible distance—but as he passes the store in which he works he decides to sleep there for the night. He speaks to the night watchman about it and is permitted to lie down under one of the counters. This being too hard for comfort, he looks about for a better place, and discovers that one of the show windows has been dressed to represent a bed room. He pulls down the street curtain, takes off his shoes, collar and coat, falls in bed and is soon asleep. Next morning the window dresser, without seeing Briggs, pulls up the curtain and leaves. Miss Astorocks determines to visit the department store to inquire about her jewelry. She is astonished to see an enormous crowd, hooting and laughing in front of one of the large show windows and on closer inspection, discovers Briggs sound asleep and snoring, with a sign on the bed: "Take me home for $4.50."

After a hearty laugh, she seeks the manager and tells him she would like to take that which is in the window home with her. He does not understand what she means until he goes out and sees for himself. The sight that greets him nearly causes apoplexy and, rushing back into the store, pulls down the curtain, throws Briggs bodily from the window, and discharges him. Miss Astorocks pleads for him. The manager subdues his anger and forgives Briggs on condition of his never getting into another scrape. Briggs returns the stolen articles, and Jenny pleads with him to forgive her for guying, which he finally does.

THE PURSUIT ETERNAL (Two Parts—May 29).—Grace Byron, wearied of being sought for her fortune, determines to hook a diamond of her choice in her own way. In her musings she sees a dashing cavalier of the "Three Musketeers" period and her innate sense of romance thrills at his ardent wooing. Coming to New York she sees a face which interests her and through an investigation agency learns about him. Stanton Leeds is also bored by the conventions of life. In his fireside reveries he sees himself as a cavalier, rescuing a strange damsel in distress. Several nights after Grace has spotted her man, Leeds sees two men jump from an auto, pull a heavily veiled girl from another car and dash away with her. He tries to enter the house in which she has been taken. Two masked men run out and overpower him, carrying him within. Bound and gagged, he encounters the mysterious veiled girl, who tells him of a strange conspiracy to compel her to marry, thus forfeiting her inheritance under the terms of a will which forbids her marrying before her twenty-first birthday.

The mysterious maiden is interrupted by the entrance of masked men who carry her out. Leeds liberates himself from his bonds. Through a keyhole he sees a number of masked men, among whom he recognizes the bridegroom-to-be. When the latter is left alone Leeds tackles him and dons his mask and gown. Back troop the band. It is time for the wedding. Leeds is in doubt whether to go through the ceremony or announce his identity. A feeling for the mysterious maiden stronger than pity guides him. The ceremony is performed. The dim lights leap into brilliance. Leed's mask and the mask of the other man is pulled off. They burst into laughter. Leeds is dumbfounded when the girl who unveiled proves to be Grace, hands him back the ring and confesses that it was all framed up. The romance of it all appeals to Leeds. He replaces the ring and says, "But, dear, we will lose all the wedding presents by being married this way."

THE BLACK BOX (Installment No. 11, "A Desert Vengeance"—Two Parts—May 16).—The next morning, Quest's party wakes to find itself lost in the desert. The canteens are empty. Suddenly there appears just ahead of them the streets of Port Said. All except the professor start forward with a cry of gladness, but the scientist realizes that it is only a mirage. In the oasis, Craig is being treated with the greatest courtesy by the Mongar Chief. When Craig protests against the attention shown him by Freeda, whose life he saved as a little child, the old chief replies: "Freeda has been taught gratitude according to the Mongar laws. Her life and that of the tribe are at your command." While they are talking, a Mongar scout rides in on horseback and reports that a rich Arab caravan has halted nearby. The chief determines to raid the caravan, and invites Craig to accompany him.

Meanwhile, Quest has sighted the Arab caravan, and signals them. The Arab leader sends three of his men to see what Quest's signaling is about. While the three messengers are gone, the Mongars attack the caravan. Seeing that their comrades are doomed to death, the three Arabs, who have come up to Quest's party, decide to ride for help from the English troops. The Mongars see the three Arabs, and several men ride out to capture them. Two of the Arabs are slain, but the third one escapes. The Mongars find Quest's party and one of the young leaders takes a great fancy to Lenora. He is showing his affection for her when Quest knocks him down. Immediately there is an uproar and the whole party of whites are in danger of being exterminated, when Craig suddenly recognizes them and shouts, "Stop, these people are my friends." The Mongar chief orders his men to leave the whites in peace. They are taken back to the oasis where they are fed and given water.

Freeda, the chief's daughter, adoring Craig as a God, is suspicious of the motives which have brought Quest and his party into the desert. Meanwhile, the Arab who escapes from the Mongars, has reported the loss of the caravan to the English officers, and a company of horsemen prepare to leave to avenge the raid. The Mongar scouts report the approach of the soldiers and the chief decides that it is necessary for the tribe to leave at once and lose themselves in the wilds of the jungle where pursuit will be impossible. Quest's party is forced to accompany the Mongars, as the chief fears that they might give information to the soldiers which would lead to the capture of the Mongars. Two days later, having evaded the troops, the Mongars make camp in the jungle. Freeda has determined that she will protect Craig and thwart Quest's plan to take him back to civilization. She overhears Quest talking to his assistants, and learns their plan to force Craig to escape with them that night. She tells Craig of what she has heard, but he simply smiles at her.

Quest and his party gather food and water, take two guns and saddle five horses, and lead them some distance into the jungle. Quest enters his tent to select such papers as he will need, and finds in his bag a small black box containing these words: "Fools—fools all. Plot and plan as you may, the cunning of the ages defeats your every move. The Hands." At that moment there is a commotion in the camp, for a hungry lion has entered Craig's tent, and now, frightened by the shouts of the Mongars, but determined to keep his prey, he breaks from the tent with a mangled mass of flesh which the Mongars think is Craig. The animal disappears into the jungle, while the natives, armed with torches and guns, follow Freeda, who has run screaming into the jungle. They come up with the lion, fire their guns, and the animal dashes out. Freeda runs to the body and falls weeping across it, but soon she realizes that the mangled flesh is not that of her beloved master; indeed, he himself, comes through the jungle at this moment. They stand talking as Quest appears looking for Craig. The criminologist places his revolver at Craig's head and says: "You know the road to Port Said, and you are going back with us at once."

Quest tells Craig that he must take his sash and tie Freeda to the tree so that she cannot give the alarm. The man does so. Quest lowers the revolver for a second. Craig stoops as if to tie his sash, knocks the revolver from Quest's hands, and places a knife against his stomach, saying that he will never go back to America alive. Lenora comes in with a revolver in her hand, steps up to Craig and commands him to drop the knife. Quest then ties Freeda to the tree, and he and Lenora leave with Craig.

The Mongars have missed Freeda, and start to look for her. They find the girl tied against a tree and release her. She tells them what has happened and they seek Quest's party. The Mongars are determined that Quest and his party shall die. The whites have a slight lead, but they soon realize they will have to make a stand. They dismount and lower their guns, and turn to fight for their lives. The Mongars approach, but Freeda rides out in front of them and says to her father, the chief: "Remember the master, he must be saved." But the Mongars have been aroused to too great a hatred for all Christians to spare even the man whom they owe the debt of gratitude. Freeda jumps from her horse and throws herself in front of Craig in time to save him from a Mongar bullet. The party is being surrounded and Quest has been slightly wounded. Suddenly there is a cry of fear from the native tribes, and the English soldiers appear. In a moment the tables are turned, and the Mongars flee for their lives.

GASOLINE GUS (May 30).—Mr. Fizz runs a soda counter. His fascinating daughter, Fay, is engaged to Gus, one of the soda stand clerks. Will Steel, the other clerk, is terribly jealous of Gus, and succeeds in laying upon his rival the blame of thefts from the cash register. Mr. Fizz breaks off the engagement and fires Gus. The disconsolate young man sees a jitney bus unloading a crowd of passengers. He is filled with secret longing for a bus of his own with which to earn his daily bread. Just then, along comes a certain crook who has stolen Mr. Fizz's car. Anxious to get it off his hands, he lets Gus have it at a low figure. The former clerk starts immediately in the jitney business. Steel and Fay, on their afternoon off, decide to take a bus ride. They board Gus's machine. Their driver, in his goggles, and coated to his ears, is not recognized by them. But Gus sees his beloved Fay in Steel's company and determines to drive the car into eternity. The mad ride starts and the jitney lands in a canal. Fay's escort betrays his cowardice by leaving her to drown. Gus rescues Fay. Steel is pinched for stealing Mr. Fizz's automobile.

MAJESTIC.

LITTLE DICK'S FIRST CASE (May 28).—Little Dick is ambitious to be a detective like his father. He reads many detective tales and acts out the stories with his playmates. His father sees him at his games, gives him a badge and promises to make a real sleuth of him. The next day Dick hears his father called on a big Italian murder mystery case. While playing with the boys, he sees a dark-browed foreigner rush out of a house and race down the street. This looks suspicious to Dick. He gives pursuit. The Italian dashes out of a drug store with a bottle labelled "poison." Dick sees him hand it into a room and then wait anxiously about outside with several villainous-looking companions. Leaving two of his little pals to stand guard, Dick rushes to the police station and returns with an automobile full of police. They seize the Italians, and then it is discovered that they are only celebrating the arrival of a baby in the Parisi family.

OUT OF BONDAGE (Two Parts—May 30).—Jim McRae and his pal, Clancy, two crooks, perform many robberies and divide the loot equally. Clancy wants to marry McRae's daughter, Mary. She does not want to marry him, but is forced to do so by her father. After the marriage, Clancy and McRae have a quarrel over the division of some loot. Clancy refuses to give McRae his share. The latter gets sore and squeals on Clancy to the police. Clancy is arrested and sent to the state penitentiary. In the meantime McRae and his daughter have been watching the arrest from a nearby corner, and when they see Clancy taken away, they decide to leave the country. They go to the orange country and live in a little shack near the orange groves. McRae makes his living by stealing oranges, etc. He is caught by one of the owners and ordered off the place. The owner of the grove returns to his house and tells his son about the affair. In the meantime Mary McRae and the son have met and the latter is very much in love with Mary, though she feels that she cannot return his love on account of the marriage with Clancy.

A few nights later, McRae drives up to the grove with a wagon and starts stealing oranges when he is caught by the hired man. The latter takes a shot at McRae. McRae returns the shot and wounds the hired man. The owner and his son, on the porch, hearing the shots, rush to the scene, the son following McRae. During this time, Clancy has made his getaway from prison and comes to the orange country also, and finally comes to the shack where McRae and his daughter are living. He sees Mary and makes her get her hat and coat and go with him. The father comes on the scene, the two men pull guns on each other, and Mary rushes to the lamp to put out the light. Clancy shoots at the light and hits Mary. McRae raises his gun to shoot, and Clancy and he shoot simultaneously and both drop to the floor. The son of the orange grower, hearing the shots, comes to the house and finds all three lying on the floor and thinks them dead. He picks up Mary and a wallet drops from her waist. The bullet has pierced the wallet but has not gone through. She explains all details, and the son asks her to marry him as the picture ends.

RELIANCE.

WHEN CAMERON PASSED BY (May 17).—Cameron, a wealthy young man, ordered out in the open by his doctor, sees, while riding past a house in the country, a girl climbing along the roof-gutter, closely followed by a rascally-looking man. He decides to learn more of this, sneaks up on the porch, and hides near a window. Here he hears Kalt, the guardian of the girl, telling her that she must marry his associate in crime, Marsh, who, with other confederates, is present in the room. Margaret, the girl, objects to this, but to no avail. Kalt calls up the parson and tells him to come at once and perform the ceremony.

Cameron lies in wait on the road for the parson and after holding him up, changes clothes with him and binds and gags him. He then goes to the house and represents himself as the parson's assistant. The ceremony is begun, much to Margaret's despair. At the end Cameron reveals his true identity by drawing a revolver, holding up the crowd and escaping with the girl. They are closely pursued by Kalt and his gang and take refuge in a small deserted house where they are beseiged by the pursuers. In the fight Kalt is killed. Marsh contrives to set fire to the house, and things look bad for a while to Cameron and Margaret, who continue to fire at the gang until all their ammunition is exhausted.

In the meantime a party of the sheriff's riding along discover the imprisoned parson and release him. He tells his story and they start out to look for the desperado. They arrive at the little house and save Cameron and Margaret from falling into the hands of Marsh. The parson accuses Cameron of highway robbery but when explanations are made, he forgives the trick. Back at the house they round up the last of the gang and seize a lot of counterfeit money. Margaret is now left alone in the world, but all indications point to the fact that Cameron will not allow this state of affairs to last for long.

THE DEADLY FOCUS (May 26).—Sid Burns, a blacksmith and a gunsmith, uses his business as a cover for counterfeiting and is discovered in his criminal pursuits by Joe Blake, his assistant in the shop. Burns, as time goes on, fear's Blake's knowledge more and more. Diana Warburton, a Southern girl, visiting in the neighborhood, brings to Burns for repair a couple of old duelling pistols, heirlooms to her from her grandfather. Blake discovers in the barrel a diamond, wrapped in a note, explaining that the gem was placed there during the Civil War. Burns, realizing that no one will ever be the wiser, proposes that they sell the diamond and divide the proceeds. But Blake indignantly refuses. Though Burns assaults him, hitting him over the head with the butt of the pistol, Blake succeeds in getting away with the diamond which he returns to Diana. She becomes greatly interested in the young gunsmith. The counterfeiter tries to plan some way of getting rid of his assistant who knows too much. He hits upon a scheme to focus the sun's rays upon the powder in the pan of the pistol at a certain minute, causing an explosion which will destroy Joe's vise and cost the young apprentice his life. Meanwhile, Blake, who has been suffering with his head ever since Burns struck him with the gun, faints and falls in a direct line with the weapon. Diana finds him, and appeals to Burns, who enters in a partly intoxicated condition, to come to his assistance. Burns only laughs and tells her that Joe is dead. Diana helps Joe up and draws him aside, just as the pistol explodes. Burns drops lifeless. The two young people at first are horror-stricken. Then, discovering the cause of Burn's death, they marvel at their own narrow escape.

which resents their teachings. Some simple "miracles," however, overawe the Indians, and the missionary and his disciple are allowed to continue their work. Among those whom they win over to Christianity is Monoka, a beautiful Indian girl, whose sentiment becomes divided between the new religion and love for Abasan. Monoka's mother is a witch. She invokes a hideous spirit which visits the girl and puts her under a spell. Monoka is stricken blind. The medicine man is called in, but he can do nothing. The priest and Abassan drive away the evil spirit and restore the girl's sight. Soon after this she is dragged off into the mountains by spies of the witch who fasten her to a rock to perish, if she will not renounce the Christian faith. Several days later the Jesuit and Abasan find Monoka in the wilderness. They arrive just in time to save her from death. Monoka and Abasan are married by the priest.

FALSTAFF.

THE HOUSE THAT JACK MOVED (May 21).—The political boss of the little city was greatly worried. He had a municipal campaign on his hands, and what he called "the breaks" were going against him. There was a reform ticket in the field as usual, and the nominee for mayor was an active young man who was making surprising headway with the voters. It was a problem, but then the chief duty of a boss is to solve problems, and this man was competent to do it. The reform candidate lived on the edge of the town in a little detached house, and the boss, through the city surveyor, arranged that the city line should be changed just enough to place the candidate's domain just outside the city, thereby automatically removing him from the race.

Perhaps the scheme would have been a success, had not fortune favored the young man. One of his former schoolmates was the daughter of the editor of the local paper, a ring organ. The two were great chums, and the girl was frankly desirous that the reform ticket should succeed. She lived near the candidate, saw the boss and one of the henchmen lurking about, watched them and learned of their plot. Then she promptly informed the candidate. He rose to the emergency, as she hoped, asked her to help delay any publication for three hours, summoned house movers and had his house moved inside the line in short time. The girl was able to help, for she was running the newspaper in the absence of her father, "who," as she put it, "was out motoring." The real fact was that he and his daughter went out in an auto he had taken in trade. It was said to be a 40 horse power, but on the road thirty-nine of the "horses died," while the other had a bad case of asthma. Daughter got home all right, because the candidate came along in his own car, but the luckless editor toiled on an on, using all the tools in the car's kit, and never knew that a job was being put on the candidate, or that the candidate had beaten the conspirator's, compelled him to admit their defeat, proposed to the editor's daughter and had been accepted. The editor simply toiled on and on, and finally came back to earth with a start when the young couple drove up, and offered to tow him home if he would give them his blessing. The editor philosophically blessed them, and was prosaically towed home. And as the car rolled along, he decided that an auto was a good investment, for had it not been for his "40 horse power" his daughter might not have won the most desirable young man in town.

BEAUTY.

THE STAY-AT-HOMES (May 25).—Arthur Baldwin, a book worm, upsets his family by refusing to enter into the social gayety of their lives. He also annoys them by his inveterate habit of smoking and is daily turned out of every room, until he longs for some place where he can breathe and smoke in peace. Their nearest neighbors are the Howards. Helen, the daughter, is also a stay at home and a book worm. Arthur's family try to persuade him to go to the matinee, but he refuses and after they leave the cook and maid go out for the afternoon. Arthur, tired of reading, thinks he will take a stroll and while exploring the garage, finds an empty room which he decides will make an excellent den. He determines to act upon the idea at once, and goes back to the house to gather together some furnishings. Helen Howard has also been left home, and is quietly reading upon her balcony. Arthur, on reaching the house, finds he is locked out and finding the sitting room window open, enters that way. Helen sees what she thinks to be a burglar entering her neighbor's house. She gets a revolver and follows him. She sees the supposed burglar making a bundle of the contents of one of the rooms and she holds him up and asks him what he is doing there. Arthur demands to know what she is doing in his house. She explains that she lives next door and has taken him for a burglar. They soon find they have a mutual love of books, but when Helen explains that she objects to smoking Arthur promptly promises to give it up, the gardener benefiting. Helen asks Arthur to call on her and a few days later their respective families are astonished to find them each dressing up, a very unusual proceeding. Later the explanation is found when they see Arthur and Helen spooning in the moonlight garden.

THANHOUSER.

THREE ROSES (May 16).—The Colonel, for many years, has lived in the past, reverencing the lost cause of the Confederacy and hating all Northerners. When his daughter, Rose, named for her mother, falls in love with a New England youth, he haughtily refuses his consent. Rose and John Hewins run away and are married. The years pass, and the Colonel steadfastly declines to become reconciled to his daughter. Eventually the old Southerner loses his property. Then his wife dies. But, with her last breath, the first Rose wins her husband's promise that he will seek out their daughter and make peace with her. The old man goes North, but is unable to find Rose. His money soon is spent. At last, wandering, cold, hungry and penniless in the snow, he is befriended by a little girl who takes him home to her mother. It is the third Rose who has found her grandfather. The Colonel's declining days are happy. On the table in his room he keeps a vase containing three roses—one in full bloom, another half open and the third still a bud—to remind him of the three lives most dear to him.

THE HEART OF THE PRINCESS MARSARI (Two Parts—May 18).—An Indian Prince marries an American girl. On his wife's death he sends their little daughter, the Princess Marsari, to America to be educated. Some years later, the Prince joins her there, and tries to make his child's choice of country his own. Marsari falls in love with a young American portrait artist. When Paul Leighton is accused of the murder of his wealthy uncle—whose will is found to leave his estate to the nephew—the young Princess is the only person who believes in his innocence. One point, especially weighs with her. The victim's body, on its discovery, was stone cold. Yet the man had not lain long dead. The Princess sets her wits to work and gradually traces the crime to a half-crazed painter, who has used liquid air to kill Leighton's uncle. The fearless girl entraps him, forces from him a confession, and is about to give him up to justice when he meets with a still stranger death than did his victim. The Indian Prince recognizes in all these happenings "kismet"—and the Princess Marsari and Paul Leighton are married.

IN THE PURPLE HILLS (Two Parts—May 24).—John Ogle and his young daughter, Katy, have discovered that their little mine has turned to be a bonanza and with this realization they leave for a neighboring town for machinery. For some months the community has been menaced by the daring actions of the outlaw, "Red Alec" Cantwell, who the sheriff and his deputies have been trying to capture, but without success. While Katy and her father are riding to town, a stray bullet fired by Cantwell mortally wounds the miner, and Katy drives to a small hut for help, where it so happens that Cantwell and his ally, fearing capture, have taken refuge. After a fearful struggle with Cantwell and a Mexican, Katy is forced to leave her father and climb through a window that she might bring medical aid. Katy returns to find that her father has died and that she is alone in the world. The sheriff, in the meantime, has traced Cantwell to the little hut and captured him. The sheriff, seeing that Katy will need the protection of a home, takes the girl to his mother, who receives her with open arms and gives her a mother's affection.

As time passes, the sheriff and Katy are married and live upon the site of her girlhood home working the mine left Katy by her father. The outlaw Cantwell has escaped from jail after serving four years of a life sentence, and with malicious intent returns to the community to get even with the sheriff for enforcing the requirements of the law. Very cleverly he plans his vengeance and comes upon the cabin when Katy is alone. To make his vindication complete, he ties Katy to a bench, places a gun at her head and in turn connects the trigger of the gun with the handle of the door, so that, upon opening the door, the gun will be discharged. The sheriff transacts his business in town and starts homeward, meeting Cantwell on his way. He immediately rearrests Cantwell, who, with all the malice of his type, boasts of the fearful vengeance he has wrecked upon the unsuspecting sheriff. Goaded to desperation, the sheriff binds Cantwell to a tree and rides home. Much time elapses during this ride and the sheriff comes in sight to see his little child disappearing through the doorway. They all rush into the house to find Katy apparently lifeless with a bullet in her shoulder. Mad with grief and terror, the sheriff returns to the tied and groveling Cantwell and there a fight ensues which terminates in the outlaw rolling over the cliff. The sheriff rides home to find that many hands and prompt attention has revived Katy.

THE REPRISAL (May 26).—Certain political ambitions lead Judge Green to endeavor to influence the policy of the city's leading newspaper, but John Giles, the editor, although engaged to the judge's daughter, Edna, refuses his support to anything but "clean politics," and the judge is backed by a corrupt political machine which is receiving the attention of the grand jury. The judge, knowing the political opinion of his prospective son-in-law, informs his daughter that he will never consent to their marriage unless the young man changes his views.

At the suggestion of Dan Parks, a boss, a personal appeal is made to Editor Giles, after he has turned a deaf ear to all telephone entreaties. Even his sweetheart's appeal, which follows her father's telephone talk, is of no avail. The visit of the judge and his party nearly results in blows, but Paul gradually calms down and the party leaves in disgust. Soon after Edna calls and demands that Paul either prove her father guilty or declare him innocent or she will not allow him to see or speak to her again. Paul, however, is determined to carry out his principle and that night the politicians plot to place the editor in a compromising position with the judge's maid servant. However, Edna overhears the conspirators and forces the servant into a closet while she presents herself heavily veiled in the servant's place.

In the meantime, the judge has telephoned the rival paper to send their best reporter and the plotters proceed to Paul's house. Sending the girl ahead with a story that she has been taken suddenly ill, the judge's party wait until Paul has invited her inside the house to rest until a taxi can be called and then storm the front door for admittance. Edna begs to be hidden in a closet and as she is unknown to Paul he complies. On entering the room the politicians demand where he has put his fair companion and taunt Paul with the prospective headlines in the morning papers. The unsuspecting man realizes that he is an awkward position and is about to accept their terms when everyone is startled by the appearance of the girl, who throws back her veil and informs her hearers that she has been secretly married to Paul for several months. Her father is dumbfounded but is convinced by the wedding ring on her finger and uncomfortably leaves the room, but not until his daughter has given him the key to the servant's closet where she locked her in.

girl, Honey. They look into the back of the wagon anxiously at the pale, emaciated face of the husband and father. Carefully they lift him to the ground, where he rapidly sinks, and in a few moments passes quietly out of this life. The mother falls to her knees in prayer, then taking a shovel from the wagon essays to dig a grave. She is unable to make an impression on the hard soil and taking Honey with her, goes to the top of the hill and looks about for assistance.

"Bad Buck" dashes around a turn in the trail and comes upon the widow and her little daughter. They implore his assistance, but he refuses brutally. At length Honey prevails upon him to return with them to the camp where Buck digs the grave for the widow. He then leaves them, as he is in a hurry to get away, having just escaped from the sheriff in the village. Before he leaves, Honey puts up her face to be kissed, and after some hesitation Buck kisses her. Buck reaches the top of the hill and looks down upon the widow and her child. A feeling of pity comes over him and returning to their camp, he mounts the wagon seat, hitching his horse on behind, and takes them to his shack in the hills, where he tells them they are welcome to remain as long as they wish, but that he has to get out.

Honey takes a water pail and goes to the creek. She is bitten by a rattle snake. Her mother hears her screams and comes to her and takes her back to the shack. Buck comes down to the stream. He sees the snake and shoots it. He then discovers Honey's sunbonnet on the grass and hurries to the shack where he finds Honey suffering from the bite. He takes the rawhide from his hat and binds it above the wound. He then goes to the village for the doctor, whom he forces to accompany him back to the shack. They are pursued by a posse and Buck is mortally wounded. They reach the shack in time to save Honey, but Buck, his face pressed against that of the little child on the pillow, and with her calling to him and kissing him, passes out.

SHORTY'S TROUBLE SLEEP (Two Parts—May 26).—Sancho, the bandit chieftain, and his followers, hold up the stage and Bill Wright, the driver, is much worried, as he has a large shipment of gold to go out the next day and thinks its a cinch there'll be another hold-up. His daughter, Betty, suggests that he let her take the gold in the prairie schooner, and that the bandits will think she is going for supplies. After some hesitation, Bill consents.

The following morning, Shorty starts to town for more grub, and ties his schooner in front of the saloon. Bettie comes along and ties her schooner alongside Shorty's. Shorty starts some commotion in the pool room with a pool shark and is thrown out. He climbs into Betty's schooner and falls asleep. Bill's stage is held up and not finding the gold, Sancho has a hunch that Betty has it. He wheels his men around and starts after her. Betty sees him coming and heads back for town.

In the meantime, Shorty is awakened by the jolting of the schooner. Betty is much startled when he appears, but he tells her not to be afraid, he will protect her from the bandits. As the wagon makes a curve in the road, Shorty is thrown to the ground, where he sits and fires upon the approaching bandits. He takes shelter behind some rocks and puts up a fight. In the meantime Betty arrives at the village and the camp boss rounds up the cowboys and they go to Shorty's rescue. They capture the bandits, and Betty proclaims Shorty a hero.

DOMINO.

HER ALIBI (Two Parts—May 20).—Joe Bailey and his sister Marion work for the same firm. Joe has a chum, Jim Channing, who gets Joe in debt and persuades him to embezzle some funds of the firm in order to meet a pressing debt. Joe is caught and arrested and sent to prison. Marion is discharged by the firm. She gets a position with another firm and marries Latimer, the general manager.

Latimer is of a jealous disposition. Channing has lost his job and is hard up and in need of money. One day he meets Marion on the street and suspecting that her husband has not been told of Joe, he resolves to blackmail her. She gives him money to keep the secret. Later, wanted by the police, Channing writes a letter to Marion and tells her to meet him at a notorious road house to pay him some more money so that he can get out of town. Latimer's suspicions are aroused as he catches Marion reading the letter. Under the plea of business at the office, he leaves his home and summons a taxi. He sees Marion leave in a taxi and follows. Meantime Joe Bailey has made a get-away and makes his way back toward the city to get help from his sister. The guards pursue him in the vicinity of the roadhouse where Channing is waiting to meet Marion. She goes to the roadhouse and meets Channing in a private room. Latimer follows and demands admittance. Believing Latimer is an officer, Channing opens fire on him and escapes through the window. Channing is wearing a light-colored suit, and is seen by the guards as he is running from the roadhouse. He is mistaken for Joe and ordered to halt. He keeps on running and the guards fire and fatally wound him. Joe has taken refuge in Latimer's taxi. Latimer and his wife, scared at the shooting affray, and she having satisfactorily explained her presence there, they beat it to the taxi and there come upon Joe. Marion introduces Joe to her husband, and Joe explains his escape as they journey back to the city in the taxi. Channing dies of his wounds.

MUTUAL MASTERPICTURES.

GOD'S WITNESS (Thanhouser—Four Parts).—Because of his daughter's elopement and her mother's death from shock, General Darrington disinherits her and fastens his affection, after the years pass, on Lennox Dunbar, a young lawyer. When her husband dies, Ella is stricken and must undergo an expensive operation. As her father returns her letters unopened, she sends her grown daughter, Beryl, to intercede and ask for money. Beryl and the old gentleman have a painful scene, but the general finally consents to help, not for his daughter's sake, but because a Southern gentleman always helps a woman in distress. The two part amicably, but Beryl misses her train back home, goes for a long walk and finally rushes to the station to escape a thunderstorm. She is arrested, just as the train pulls in, and accused of the general's murder.

The general has been killed by a blow from an andiron. A necklace and gold that were missing were found on Beryl. Also the will, making Lennox Dunbar heir, was gone. She testified she slept through the storm and wakened to hear voices, a negro's and the voice of "one I love." To Lennox Dunbar, who believes in her innocence, it appeared that she was shielding some worthless man. The necklace and gold, she swore, had been given her by the general, but she refused to elaborate her defense, declaring the outcome rested with God.

The trial was going against her, when her brother appeared. He testified that he, too, had called on the general. There were angry words and the old man seized an andiron with which to strike him. Suddenly there was a flash of lightning and heart failure toppled the old man dead to the floor. His head struck the andiron and the will fluttered into the fire from his nerveless hand. This proof was clinched by a strange happening. Servants cleaning the Darrington home, rushed out, screaming the "General's come to life." The flash of lighting photographed that last scene on the glass door of the study. There being no will, the money goes to Beryl. She refuses, saying the general wished Dunbar to have it. This is happily compromised when the two young people find they love each other.

THE LURE OF THE MASK (American—Four Parts).—Jack Hilliard hears a woman's voice singing an Italian aria and leans far out of the window, but he cannot make her out in the fog. The following day he tries to reach her through an advertisement. Finally they exchange notes, and he is invited to dine with her. He must go and come blindfolded. This he does, only to discover that she is masked. The following day she sails for Italy with the American Opera company, and from Naples mails Hilliard the mask.

His old Italian servant Giovanni, whose daughter, betrayed by a prince, has died, wishes to return to Italy for revenge. Hilliard decides to accompany him. On the canal he meets the opera singer and she shows him her face only to beg him to cease his attentions. He discovers her next day trying to better the fortunes of her stranded opera company at Monte Carlo, and there he saves her from the forced advances of the Prince Monte Bianca.

Later he goes to her villa and is pleasantly received by her. They are disturbed by the Prince whom Hilliard disarms only to learn he is the husband of the woman he loves. As the Prince rides from the gates he is set upon by Giovanni and killed. Thus the signorina, who never lived with her husband, and Hilliard, are free to love and marry.

THE DIAMOND FROM THE SKY (Episode No. 2—"The Heritage of Hate"—Two Parts—May 10).—Blair Stanley's eyes shone with a murderous gleam as he stood, peering through the curtained window at Dr. Lee, whose whole attention was centered on the diamond from the sky, sparkling on the table before him. Silently, the youth stole away, vowing that the precious gem would be his before another sunrise. And that night, as the massive clock in the hall struck the midnight hour, Blair crept from his room, stole softly down the stairs, closed the hall door behind him and hurried off into the darkness, careful to screen himself by keeping from the road. Quickly, the desperate youth pried open the window and stepped into the darkened room. All was quiet. Above, Dr. Lee, roused from his sleep by the overturning of a chair, hurriedly donned his slippers and started down the stairs. Blair, trapped, waited until the old man crossed the threshold of the library. A moment later his strong young fingers were clutching the doctor's throat. And the old man fell slowly back across the table. He was dead. Horrified, the slayer snatched the coveted jewel from the dead man's grasp and ran to the door. There he abruptly halted, for he heard the faint sounds of a guitar. It was his cousin, Arthur Stanley, serenading the beautiful maiden, who stood, silhouetted in the flicker of the light in the room above, unmindful of the tragedy.

Blair, screening his features with a mask made from his handkerchief, and tightly clutching his revolver, stepped into the darkened hallway. Reaching the front door, he swung it back and started across the threshold. Before him stood his cousin Arthur. Without stopping to aim, Blair fired, the bullet grazing the head of the youth before him, momentarily stunning him and knocking off his hat. In a second, Arthur was on his feet and after his unknown assailant. Realizing that capture was certain, the fleeing youth, his features still masked, came to a halt close by a freshly opened grave. Arthur was alongside him almost immediately, but halted when he felt the muzzle of his assailant's revolver pressed tightly against his abdomen. Undaunted by the danger menacing him, he reached forth and pulled the handkerchief from the face of the man before him. Arthur was astounded to recognize Blair, who bid him to remain silent, if he wanted to keep the stigma from the girl he was serenading. Almost instantly Arthur's fist shot out. Blair staggered and fell, but gained his feet a few seconds later. The youths agreed to fight to a finish with revolvers. The surviving one to bury the other in a nearby grave hole.

Without further comment they took positions at the head of the grave, their revolvers aimed at each other's heart waiting the drawing tight of the handkerchief they held between them, the signal which meant eternity for one and, perhaps, both. At the signal they fired simultaneously. With a groan, Blair, clutching desperately at his breast where a crimson stain was showing, reeled toward the hollow opening, halted for a brief interval at the edge and then, with a curse, plunged downward. Realizing the seriousness of his act, Arthur rushed to the side of the grave, leaped into the opening and, kneeling at his cousin's side, tore open his shirt in a mad endeavor to learn if he still lived. Of a sudden, his staring eyes centered on an immense diamond, flashing a million colored hues, suspended from the youth's neck by a heavy golden chain. It was the diamond from the sky.

A LITTLE BAND OF GOLD (Ideal—Two Parts—May 17).—Patrick Casey is convicted of burglarizing the safe of the office which he watches nights, and is sentenced to twenty years in prison at the testimony of Bemis, the junior member of the robbed firm, who is the real thief. Bonnie, his wife, promises that she will remain unchanged until he is released. Ten years pass. Alice is about to be graduated from college, Michael is about to enter the bar, and Joe and Josephine, the younger children, are in school. Astor, the son of Bemis, has also grown up. He meets Alice in school, and falls in love with her. On commencement day, Astor and his mother go with Alice and Michael to call on Bonnie. The old-fashioned ways of Patrick's wife and the unpretentiousness of the little home do not appeal to the proud mother of Astor, and Alice, made unhappy by her attitude, gives Astor up. When the elder Bemis confesses on his death bed, however, the guilt which he has had on his conscience these many years, Alice and Astor are reconciled, and Patrick is freed to come home to Bonnie and his grownup bairns.

DAVY CROCKETT UP-TO-DATE (Superba—May 18).—Davy Crockett is madly in love with a blonde young lady who also looks good to several members of a ferocious band of Indians that inhabit the backwoods. After a meeting with Davy one day, she is surprised and kissed by one of her red-skinned lovers, which makes her so indignant that she stops to thrash him and is captured by the band and scalped. Losing her fore lock does not seriously injure her health. She escapes to her Davy, and is taken to the hut of his parents and introduced as his future wife. A battle with the Indians follows, in which an intelligent redskin or two secures entrance into the cabin. The lives of all concerned are saved by a bunch of hardtack biscuits aimed at the Indians heads. Wedding bells ring merrily for Davy and the blonde heroine when the scene becomes calm enough to admit a minister.

CLARENCE SCHOTTENFELS

of his congregation, Amos Dunn, on the temperance question. Dunn blames the curse of drink to the saloon and the minister maintains that it is just as wrong to have strong drinks in one's house. Their differences are brought forcibly and unexpectedly home to them when they both discover their sons, Hal Colton and Rex Dunn, in a drunken condition and learn that the two lads have received their first impetus to drink from the open wine cellar in the rich man's house. At this time the wife of Bill dies. Rev. Colton and his wife express their sympathy by calling on the salesman and his lovely daughter, Lottie, and the kindness of the clergyman and his wife brings the two families close together. Hal, the minister's son, falls in love with Lottie, and her sweetness and nobleness urges him on to finer things. Rex Dunn, however, who has been cast aside by his father, goes from worse to worse, until one night he and his co-partners in crime waylay Hal, knock him senseless, drag him to the home of Rex's father and leave him still senseless—incriminating evidence that he was one of the robbers who sacked the Dunn's wine cellar, but the plot is all revealed the next day in court, and Amos Dunn, a saddened and much wiser man, takes his son back to his home and acknowledges to the minister that he has been wrong.

THE GHOST FAKIRS (Starlight—May 20).—Louie and Heinie find jobs with a village grocer who agrees to pay them $5 a month for the two, the principal inducement, however, being the grocer's attractive daughter, with whom both fall in love. Their rivalry leads to a fight in which the grocery is wrecked, and Louie and Heinie are fired. In the meantime the daughter in reply to their proposals of love tells them that she will marry none but a brave man and as a test of love demands that they spend a night in a haunted house near by, she agreeing to marry the one proving himself the bravest. Louie and Heinie accept the conditions and repair to the haunted house. Her sweetheart learning of this, with two pals, dress in skeleton suits and sneak into the haunted house. Louie and Heinie are awakened by their antics and flee in terror from the house. Outdistancing the pursuers they sit down to rest on a keg of powder. The keg is open. Heinie would smoke a cigarette. They vanish in the explosion.

THE POOR FIXER (Luna—May 20).—Jimmie Adams, finding his sister Rosalie in tears after a quarrel with her sweetheart, Guy, who has refused to take her to the ball because he does not approve of the low cut of her gown, goes out to find the lover and patch matters up. Being of a pugnacious nature, however, Jimmie smooths things over by kicking up a rumpus with Guy himself, which ends in a fight and bleeding nose for the erstwhile lover. Guy, taking his clothes to the cleaner the next day, is suspected of a murder because his clothes are blood-stained, and he is hauled away to court and locked up in jail, amid the wails of Rosalie and Jimmie, who have hastened to court on hearing of Guy's predicament. On their way home, the brother and sister are attacked by the real murderer. Jimmie holds the villain until he is relieved by the police. All ends happily, and Jimmie gives his blessing to the happy reunited pair.

THE CURSE (Two Parts—Premier—May 21).—Due to her secret marriage with Fred, a young scientist who has been compelled to join an expedition to South America after a sojourn of several months in the mountains gathering natural specimens. Molly is forced from her father's cabin into the wilderness and told never to return, even if she be starving. She comes upon the little home of Bill and Mary, recently married, where she stays until her child is several weeks old, then leaves for the city with the scanty earnings which Bill and Mary force upon her. But in the city, the poor little mountain girl cannot find employment. She grows paler and weaker day by day. One day Fred, who returned to the mountains after his expedition and told by Molly's demented father that she is dead, goes with his friend, Dr. Grayson, on a hurry call to a cheap tenement house. There they find the emaciated body of a little girl—Molly, who has at last succumbed to the hardness of her fate and to her father's curse.

ALIAS HOLLAND JINNY (Two Parts—Lariat—May 22).—Jennie Holland, the daughter of Rev. Thomas Holland, yields to the temptation of her false lover, Will Roland, and is scorned by him after he becomes more infatuated with a former sweetheart, Belle Mathews, whom he meets at the country club one day. Jennie, driven to desperation, disappears, and is thought to have committed suicide, having last been seen wandering near a lake in a deserted park. Seven years later, she is seen again as "Holland Jinny," the proprietress of a gambling place in the west. A miner, the exact image of her betrayer, comes down from the hills to gamble, and "Holland Jinny," thinking it is Will, gives the order to have him fleeced. Later, Will's father, a railroad president, is called to the mining town, bringing his son with him. At the same time, the fleeced miner comes back for another try at the gaming table. Jinny sees the two together, and realizing that the miner has been cheated, she gives him back his money and tells him the story of her life. The miner starts a fight with the railroad president's son, which soon gains proportions that it gets beyond Jinny's control. Will is forced from the place, but meets his death out of doors by an exploding mine. The miner is captivated by the charms of Holland Jinny's little girl, and in love with the little girl's mother, takes them back with him to the hills.

CAN A JEALOUS WIFE BE CURED? (Two Parts—Cameo—May 23).—Uncle Dudley, flirting with a widow at a tango party, incurs the jealousy of his wife and is so depressed by her continued hardness of heart that he resolves on suicide. Sending her a note of farewell, he takes himself to the river bank intent on "ending it all." But the season is winter, the water too cold to be inviting. To give himself needed courage for the desperate deed, Uncle Dudley betakes himself to a cafe. Meantime, Mrs. Dudley has received his farewell message, and starts immediately, accompanied by Dudley's entire office force and several policemen, to save him fram a watery grave. But Dudley is not in the grave. He is in the cafe, getting happily "warmed up." By the time he decides to leave he has forgotten his intention. He directs the taxi driver to take him home. Mrs. Dudley, in despair, has in the meanwhile given up the search. She, too, with her cohort, returns home. They enter the parlor when in the confusion someone knocks over the screen, and behold, the supposedly dead Dudley, asleep. Mrs. Dudley throws herself on his breast. All ends happily.

THE LADDER OF LOVE (Balboa—Two parts—Released week of May 10).—The man was weak and the wine was strong and the combination of the two did not make for efficiency. The Man in fact became the Slave of the Wine and was called by his fellows, a Drunkard. And the Father seeing the worthlessness of the Son cast him out of his house. Aimlessly then the Son trod the streets. Here entered the Girl, a cabaret singer, refined but poor. Then came the Thief who waylaid the Girl. Her screams for help sobered the Man and he rescued her. Thus began a friendship which ripened into Love. Inspired by his Love, the Man started anew and prospered.

The Father, a mine owner, knowing the same to be of no value, circulated false reports and caused the stock to rise. And the Son invested heavily and was ruined when the stock fell. He learned of the Father's fraud and denounced him bitterly. And when night fell, the Son entered the Father's house by stealth to take that which was his. But the Sister seeing him robbing the safe, dissuaded him and prevailed on him to return to his home. There Happiness awaited him, for the Father learning of the Son's endeavor and of a little Child, had called to make restitution. And so was Sorrow turned to Gladness.

FROM OXFORD TO WINDSOR (England)—Released week of May 10).—A most delightful and picturesque trip, which unfolds in a panorama of garden-like vistas, is a sail down the river Thames from Oxford to Windsor. Cozy cottages and bungalows, nestling midst the shrubbery and verdant foliage, are fronted with velvety lawns and prim hedgerows which stretch to the banks of the river. The passage through the many locks, and the old familiar sight of the slow-moving horse-drawn canal boats, adds to the numerous interesting points en route. The peaceful pastoral scenes, the grazing cattle and sheep all enhance the atmosphere of quiet prosperity for which this fertile well-kept country is known. As you pass into the more thickly settled suburbs, a bend in the river brings into view that magnificent abode of royalty, Windsor Castle.

record. He is later discovered stentoriously snoring under a horse's watering trough, from where he is dragged out by the heels and ordered to finish his chores. But it's no use. The only thing that interests Ima is sleep, sleep, sleep. He sleeps lying down and he sleeps standing up. Position may be everything in life, but it doesn't make a particle of difference to Ima Simp. He simply can't stay awake.

Noting the arrival of a great hook-worm specialist in town. Ima's father consults him, and he decides to operate on Ima. The surgeon removes a part of Ima's brain for examination. His cat promptly devours it. After vainly pursuing the voracious feline, the doctor decides to replace the lost portion of Ima's brains with that of a goat. As soon as the change is made, Ima shows every indication of being possessed with all the instincts and habits of the goat. From that moment things begin to happen. Ima gives as fine an exhibition of plain and fancy butting as was ever shown by any real goat.

WHIFFLES AND THE EMPEROR (Released week of May 10).—Whiffles' uncle is an ardent admirer of the great emperor, Napoleon, so when he attends a moving picture show and sees his idol being ridiculed on the screen by his nephew, his anger is aroused. He protests to the other patrons, but they give him the merry ha! ha! Not getting any satisfaction, he goes to Whiffles' home and rouses him from his sleep. Whiffles also laughs at him and is promptly cut out of the old man's will.

But nothing seems to worry Whiffles and he is soon fast asleep again. Owing to the excitement of his uncle's visit, his sleep is troubled by a dreadful nightmare. Napoleon's marshal calls with a detachment of soldiers and places him under arrest for poking fun at the great Emperor. He is severely berated by Napoleon but soons calms the irate man by his pleas for mercy and his genial manner. Being left alone for a few moments, Whiffles meets the Empress Josephine and in spite of the fact that he is adorned only with his pajamas, he makes an instant hit with the Emperor's spouse. But alas for Whiffles! While he is on his knees pouring his love-tale into the ears of the smitten Empress, the Emperor returns. He immediately orders Whiffles to be taken out and shot. As the report of the rifles ring out and the bullets enter his breast, Whiffles gives a convulsive leap and lands in a heap. In reality, Whiffles falls out of bed at that instant and wakes up with a shock. A hasty examination convinces him, however, that he is all there and he solemnly vows that Napoleon will have to find another imitator.

THE NEW EXPLOITS OF ELAINE (Episode No. 21—Two parts—"The Ear in the Wall"—Released week of May 17).—Wu Fang, the Chinese master criminal, knows the charm of Elaine, and knows also the danger of her ready wit. He sends her a box of roses, half white and half red, with a fiendish note attached giving her her choice as to who shall die first—Craig Kennedy, or her Aunt Josephine. Elaine is terror-stricken, but Kennedy, all unknown to her, flashes the red roses in the window, as the signal that they have chosen his life as the first to be attempted. The signal is noted and the deadly machinery of Wu Fang set in motion. Kennedy prepares for what he knows will be an ingenious attack. He sprays his hall-mat directly outside his door with a fluid that will photograph whosoever's foot steps on it. Wu Fang, by means of a method of wiring, connects a detectaphone between Kennedy's room and the cellar, where, with his henchmen, he hears Kennedy's 'phone instructions to police headquarters, ordering a raid on Long Sin and Innocent Inez, the demi-monde. Wu Fang communicates with Long Sin in time to forestall the police, who, when they arrive, find an empty apartment. Kennedy knows that his instructions must have been overheard, so, using a galvaniscope he detects the wiring in the hall, and knows that Wu Fang is listening at the other end of the wire, somewhere near by. The super-grip of this episode is in how he tricks the wily Oriental at his own game. It's too good to give away in the synopsis.

THE NEW EXPLOITS OF ELAINE (Episode No. 22—Two parts—"The Opium Smugglers"—Released week of May 24.—Wu Fang, the serpent, kidnaps Elaine's chauffeur, and substitutes in his place one of his henchmen. Craig Kennedy, disguised, searching Chinatown for a trace of Wu Fang, is met by Capt. Brainerd, of the U. S. Secret Service. Brainerd is trying to locate a band of opium smugglers who are going to "pull off a trick" that night. Kennedy points out a passing Chinaman who he knows keeps an opium joint. Together they track him to a dingy apartment, where they find and overpower three Chinamen receiving messages via carrier pigeons from the captain of a tramp sloop. They learn where the sloop is lying, and start out in a revenue cutter to apprehend it.

Meanwhile, Wu Fang, through his underling, the chauffeur, kidnaps Elaine, whom he intends to slip abroad the smuggler's sloop for shipment to Shanghai, where she is to be sold. The opium is unloaded, and Elaine carried to the ship. Kennedy, Brainerd, and Jameson, after a sharp fight, capture the Chinamen guarding the opium and load the stuff into their boat, before starting to run down the smuggler's ship. Elaine, aboard ship, uses the wireless telephone Kennedy has provided her with, and apprises him of her predicament. She flashes a lantern from the porthole, and Kennedy's boat makes for it. She flees from the Oriental set to guard her and climbs a rope ladder to the dizzy height of the topmast. He follows, a knife in his teeth. She makes a startling leap into the dark waters and he after her. It is a race for life in the fathomless ocean, with the Chinaman gaining at every stroke. He overtakes her and is about to strike when a shot from the racing revenue cutter kills him. Elaine is rescued, and the smuggler's ship captured.

WHO PAYS? ("Houses of Glass" Series No. 6—Released week of May 17).—A young married woman, happy in her husband's love, hears gossip reflecting on his fidelity. The gossip is a foul conception of an unclean mind, but so insidious is it that it enters her heart and slays her Faith before she is aware. Deeper and deeper it drives her into the maze of Disbelief, until she is induced to spy on him and his suspected stenographer. In her surreptitious errand she is discovered in a compromising, though innocent position in another man's office, and again Scandal, that "snowball of Society," is tossed on its endless journey by the willing hand of Gossip. She is named as co-respondent in a divorce suit, and when he hears of it, the husband himself feels the hand of Doubt clasp its icy fingers about his heart. Doubt Steals away his Reason, he slays the innocent man, and must look forever on the world through the cold bars of a murderer's cell. His wife must live always in the shadow of her dark Doubt and the good name of his stenographer is tarnished by the slimy tongue of Scandal. WHO PAYS?

WHO PAYS? ("Blue Blood and Yellow," Series No. 7—Released week of May 24).—Anita Logan, wealthy heiress, has an ingrown superstition with regard to the worth of "blue blood." Alfred Scott, aristocratic idler, has an inherited conviction of the worth of gold dollars, and is prouder of his ancestors than they ever could be of him. A young man, a student, loves her, but his "class" is a negligible quantity, though his mind is clean and his love has no gold alloy in it. She chooses the "blue blood," and marries him—for her faith in his lineage. He marries her for his faith in the buying power of her money. A palsy of fear overcomes him when he learns that her wealth is forfeited should she marry before she reaches the age of twenty-five. He persuades her, "for her own sake," to keep it dark, and she is touched by his consideration. Under cover of his apparent freedom, Scott makes overtures to Anita's sister. He is apprehended and Anita, in order to be divorced from the aristocratic philanderer, has to declare her marriage and forfeit her fortune. But the "blue blood" has one move left. He threatens to compromise Ann's sister's name, should the suit for divorce be pushed. Ann, to save her sister's name must live out her life with the blooded aristocrat, and her sister's part of the bargain is to support them. Paul, the scientist, can never know the fulfillment of his love. WHO PAYS?

THE ISLAND OF REGENERATION (Vitagraph—A picturization of Rev. Cyrus Townsend Brady's Novel of the same name—Six Parts—May 17).—John Charnock, his ailing wife and little boy, John, are on a trip around the world on Charnock's private yacht, Namsemond. The yacht catches fire while in the South Pacific Ocean and Mrs. Charnock, her son, and Rover, the dog, are the only ones who escape from the burning vessel. Drifting in an open boat for several days, they land on an uninhabited island. The life of a castaway is too severe for Mrs. Charnock and she dies, leaving John, Jr., a lonely occupant of the island.

Twenty years now elapse. Katherine Brenton, a high spirited wealthy young lady, becomes imbued with certain radical ideas in regard to the conventions supposed to exist between man and woman. Valentine Langford, a wealthy clubman, desiring to possess the beautiful preacher, becomes one of her converts and suggests they put their theories to the test by taking a trip together on his yacht. All goes well until they reach the southern waters of the Pacific Ocean when Langford's real object begins to assert itself and she comes to the full realization of his nature. To escape from his brutality, Kate goes off in a power launch and after her fuel is exhausted drifts until she reaches an island, where she is found by Charnock, now a full grown man and the only inhabitant. Fresh from her encounter with Langford, she is suspicious of all men and it is quite some time before she realizes that Charnock has been alone on the island practically all his life and knows nothing of the usages of civilization. While exploring the island, Kate finds the remnants of a small boat and the remains of a woman and dog together with trinkets and other things that convince her the strange man is John Charnock, supposed to have been lost twenty years ago. She at once proceeds with his education, moulding him into a being imbued with her ideals, but in the process which extends over three years, realizes through her increasing love for him her beliefs were wrong.

In the meantime, Langford, who had returned to his home in San Francisco, becomes convinced that Kate might have landed on one of the numerous islands in the South Pacific, fits up his yacht for an extended cruise, intending to explore every island he could find. An earthquake on the island and a daring rescue by Charnock, bring the pair to a realization of their love for each other, which is uninterrupted until one day Kate, sighting a ship, lights a beacon that brings Langford and the captain of a man of war, attracted by the smoke. There is a reckoning between Langford and Charnock. Langford accuses Kate of their having been together on his yacht for two weeks. Charnock's love for her is shaken and she refuses to leave the island until he comes to a realization of her innocence. Charnock leaves on the man-of-war, but becomes restless, returns to the island and finding Kate's clothes at the edge of a pool, thinks she is dead. Again going aboard the man-of-war, he is taken to the United States, where he establishes his identity and assumes charge of his father's estate. The discovery of coal on his land makes him a rich man and mourning Kate as dead, he determines to start the Katherine Brenton Foundation for the benefit of the poor. When Charnock left on the man-of-war, Langford could not believe that Kate was dead and returned to the island. Finding Kate, who had been hiding, he realizes his case is hopeless and at her pleading, promises never to reveal that she is living, and, on going away, leaves her with supplies. Reaching San Francisco, Langford hears of the Foundation, and although sick, journeys to Charnock's home in Virginia to tell him he had better go back to the island, but does not break his word to Kate. Charnock, every hope rekindled, fits out a ship and returns to the scene of his exile, to find Kate anxiously awaiting his coming.

THE MELTING POT (Five Parts).—David Quixans, a young Jewish violinist living in the town of Kishineff, Russia, is left an orphan through the massacre of the orthodox Jews upon the "Black Easter" of Russia, when under the leadership of Baron Revandel, Governor of Kishineff, who has been commissioned by the Czar to baptize one-third and massacre one-third of all the Jews in Russia, he is left orphaned in his ruined home. The sympathy of Vera, the daughter of the Baron, is aroused in connection with the Jewish outrage of which she is a witness. While upon an errand of mercy, she attracts the attention of the Czar's spies and is subsequently made a prisoner, where her father refuses to recognize her and she is sentenced to Siberia. A Jewish woman who wishes to join her husband in Siberia induces Vera to change places with her and Vera successfully makes her escape upon a trading vessel bound for America. David is exiled with the Jews to America. He joins his uncle in "The Music Master" and "Grandmother" in New York.

Vera in America finds employment in a Russian Mission upon the East Side, where she attracts the attention, by her beauty and culture, of Quincy Davenport, a patron of music in search of genius upon the East Side. Vera interests Davenport in David, whom she has met, and Davenport offers to send him abroad to study, realizing the possibilities of his music. David refuses to be patronized by a man who had no greater aim in life than amusement. Instead, he interests a German music master in a wonderful symphony symbolic of the amalgamation of all the foreign races in the great "melting pot" of America.

David and Vera through a bond of music find themselves in love with each other to the horror of David's uncle, who considers David false to his race in loving a Christian. Davenport cables Vera's father of her presence in America and her engagement to a common Jew peddler. The Baron hastens to America, where meeting Vera he reproaches her for forgetting her country and birth. Vera finally induces him to meet David. Throughout the year the memory of the man who ordered the massacre that left him an orphan has been an obsession with David, and when he sees and recognizes in Vera's father the spectre of the past, he is overcome with horror, declaring that a river of blood separates them forever. Overcome with sorrow, the Baron offers to let David take his life, but at the crucial moment David discovers a broken string upon his violin and realizes that rage had for the moment swept aside the brotherhood of the great land of the free. He controls himself and leaves the Baron. The great symphony finished, David appears before a brilliant audience and is proclaimed a genius. The audience is swept to its feet with enthusiasm as the music vividly portrays the saving of all the races in the great crucible of the "melting pot" of America. Overpowered by his success, David leaves the theater seeking refuge in the solemn quiet of the night, where he is followed by Vera, who convinces him that here in the new land all race prejudice has been swept aside and love and liberty can walk unmolested together.

THE MIDDLEMAN (London Film Co. -Five Parts May 17).—The owner of the Tatlow Potteries, Joseph Chandler, is in serious financial straits. He is visited by representatives of a committee of his creditors, and is informed that the potteries must be closed. This statement causes great excitement among the townspeople, as the whole population is dependent upon the works for a living. Among Chandler's employees is Cyrus Blenkarn, who is experimenting with a new glaze. With his assistant, Jesse Pegg, he examines the result of his last experiment, and finds that the last specimens are perfectly glazed and translucent. He realizes that his discovery will revolutionize the manufacture of pottery, and, accompanied by his two daughters, he bursts into the presence of Chandler and his creditors. The creditors are quick to see the possibilities of the new discovery, and inform Chandler that they will be willing to back him to any extent in the manufacture of the new ware. Chandler writes Blenkarn a check for 50 pounds, and a few moments later is himself receiving the acclamation of the workers as the savior of the town. Chandler has no scruples in taking all the benefits of Blenkarn's discovery, and in a few months is a wealthy man. Sir Seton Umfraville, with his daughter, Felicia, makes his acquaintance, and it is not long before thoughts of a match between their respective children occur to each of the men. But Chandler's son, Julian, is less enamored of Felicia than of Mary, one of Blenkarn's two daughters.

In the meantime Chandler, thanks to Sir Seton Umfraville's influence, is accepted as political candidate for the district. Julian, his son, is arranging to conduct an expedition to Africa in search of a lost explorer. When Mary discovers that Julian's departure is imminent she can conceal her guilty secret no longer. Julian is amazed and shocked by what Mary discloses to him, and when a few seconds later old Chandler hurriedly enters the room, it is to find the weeping Mary in Julian's arms. There is a scene between the two men, and Julian makes a frank confession of his intention to marry Mary. Chandler, terrified at the threatened collapse of his political career, begs his son to do nothing before his return. Julian will promise nothing, however, and sets off for Paris en route for Africa. His conscience reproaches him for leaving Mary in such a dilemma, and he writes a note to her, telling her to follow him to Paris, where he will marry her before setting off, and enclosing notes for her expenses. Mary never gets this letter, for Chandler, who calls on Blenkarn with a view to hushing the probable scandal, finds it lying on the table and, recognizing his son's handwriting, steals it.

Mary, believing Julian has left her without a word, determines to hide her disgrace as much as possible by running away from home. A few moments later, Jesse Pegg, Blenkarn's assistant, realizing that there is mischief afoot, tells old Blenkarn that he suspects the relations between the absent Julian and Mary. Blenkarn is incredulous and furious, but his incredulity is rudely shattered by the farewell note from Mary, which he at that moment discovers. He sends Pegg to fetch Chandler to him, and Chandler, confronted by the rumor, acknowledges its truth, and to Blenkarn's fury, refuses to order Julian to return. Mary is rescued from suicide on the Embankment by a woman engaged in rescue work, and is taken to a shelter and cared for. In due course a baby is born, and though the mother recovers, the child dies, and Mary, prostrated by shame and grief, sinks into a hopeless lethargy. Chandler indulges in foolish stock exchange speculations, and once more is faced with financial ruin. Again the Tatlow works are threatened with closure, and again Chandler's thoughts turn to Blenkarn.

Blenkarn, driven half insane by the shame and loss of his daughter, has left the works, and in direst poverty, is devoting himself to a search for the secret of the old Tatlow ware, which has long been lost. Unfortunately, he is unable to bear the cost of continued experiments, and on the verge of his most critical experiment he is refused the necessary coal for his kiln. Chandler's manager, Batty Tod, has promised that if Blenkarn's experiments are successful, he will provide the necessary money and help Blenkarn in crushing Chandler. Chandler approaches Blenkarn and offers to give him a place in the works on condition that any discoveries Blenkarn makes shall belong to Chandler. Blenkarn scornfully refuses all help. Unable to secure coal, he breaks up his furniture and burns it instead, and throughout the night sits waiting for his kiln to cool. In the morning the kiln is broken open and the test pieces are extracted. They are worthless. The old man collapses despairingly beside an opened kiln. He chances to raise his eyes and suddenly sees the perfect piece of Tatlow ware lying inside, and unseen before. He has succeeded. Before long Chandler and his manager, Batty Todd, call on the old man. Chandler offers to buy the discovery, but Blenkarn is scornfully contemptuous.

In Africa Julian learns of Mary's disappearance, and of old Blenkarn's distress, and at once sets off on his return journey. News of his return is read to Mary by her kindly rescuer, and provokes such a storm of emotion as to convince the Salvationist worker that Julian should know the secret of Mary's identity. She breaks in on his triumphal reception in London, and Julian, forgetting everything, rushes off with her to Mary's room. The next day when Julian arrives at Tatlow Hall it is to find Blenkarn in possession, as owner of the Tatlow Potteries and the employer of the now humbled Chandler. Blenkarn's first fury against Julian is calmed when he learns of the stolen letter and the fact that Mary is already his wife.

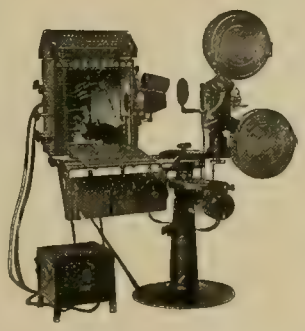
BIG INCREASE IN MOTIOGRAPH SALES

There's a Reason

It is rock steady, flickerless pictures combined with the most excellent wearing qualities; a combination to be Found in no Other Machine.



There are NO die cast soft metal gears in the MOTIOGRAPH. We use solid steel gears, hardened and ground star and cam, and the best arc lamp and lamphouse that money can buy.

(In placing your order for immediate delivery of Motiograph be sure your nearest dealer has a machine ready for you or give him a few days for Factory Shipment.)

Makes Money

For Picture Theatres Airdomes, Stores, Stands, etc.

The famous BUTTER-KIST Corn Popper runs itself while you take in the money. It needs no watching. Pops, separates and butters automatically. Capacity 75 bags per hour—$3.75 in sales.

An unbeatable salesman. The glittering motion draws crowds—increases theatre attendance. Coaxing fragrance of popping BUTTER-KIST makes people hungry to eat it. It teases the nickels and dimes out of their pockets.

See These Sales Records

Scores making $25 to $60 clear profit weekly. Peter Kominos writes: "I sold $1,440.65 in three months."

Motion picture shows selling up to $400 per month.

You clear 70c on every dollar—233 1/3 per cent on investment.

BUTTER-KIST Corn Popper

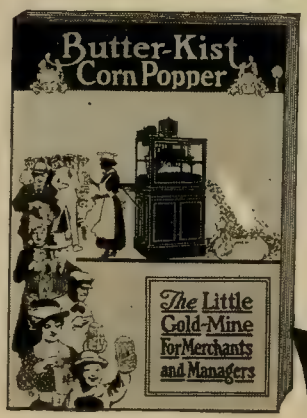
(Strictly Automatic)

Folks say they never tasted such popcorn as BUTTER-KIST. Big, fluffy, white flakes—crisp, crackling, melt-in-your-mouth morsels—piping hot, each piece evenly buttered.

Everybody loves it.

Machine is superbly built, with gleaming plate glass sides—mahogany, oak or ivory white cabinet. Metal parts highly polished and nickeled.

Managers! Write for "The Little Gold Mine" FREE!



Handsome new book—"The Little Gold Mine"—gives the wonderful new merchandising facts. Make a small payment down and soon pay balance from BUTTER-KIST sales. Fully illustrates machine, gives actual sales records and proof of profits! Sent free postpaid. Your copy is ready. Shall we send it?

Every day you save means $3 to $16 in sales—extra money. (81)

Motors

Once upon a time, in the days when automobiles were all the rage, there lived a man named Bill. Following the lead of others, Bill decided that he, too, must have a car. After a week spent in looking over different makes and models he bought a machine that in iridescent splendor ran a dead heat with the wonderful creations as illustrated in the advertising sections of the classy magazines. So impressive was its appearance that three of Bill's friends each bought a car of the same model.

The first fine day Bill started out for a spin. All went well until he reached a big hill. The car could not climb it. When Bill returned home he called an automobile expert who soon discovered that Bill bought style and appearance, without giving even the slightest consideration to the worth of the car's most vital part—THE MOTOR.

Bill had always been lucky and in this case luck did not desert him. A neighbor had seen him return with the car, which so struck his fancy that he offered the owner five hundred dollars more than the original purchase price. Of course, Bill eagerly accepted.

Fortune, however, was not so kind to Bill's three friends who, finding their cars worthless with bad motors, sold out at a big loss.

This incident is parallel with a situation in the motion picture business today.

The film rage has brought Bill and his many friends into the game as exhibitors. They erect beautiful theatres and buy the finest equipment to be had, but overlook the most vital part of the scheme—GOOD PICTURES.

For a time their business is good because these fine theatres are a novelty, and the necessity of powerful driving force in the way of good pictures is not realized—just as Bill did not notice the defect in his motor while rolling along on a level road-way.

But with their theatres past the novelty stage, these exhibitors face an uphill climb to success, which they are unable to accomplish simply because they lack the motive power of good pictures to carry them on. Stalled at the bottom of the hill, unable to advance, they fail.

An occasional exhibitor proves an exception to the rule by making money with bad pictures, just as Bill made money selling a car with a defective motor. However, such results are a stroke of rare luck—they do not permit of repetition. The exhibitors who always succeed are those who combine the strong driving force of good pictures with the advantages of beautiful and comfortable theatres.

MinA Films furnish the power to help exhibitors climb the big hill to success. These one reel comedies are smooth running in conception, high geared in action and strong in fun making.

A powerful one reel MinA comedy released every Thursday on the General Film Program.

MAKE 'EM YOURSELF SLIDES

Make them yourself. Written with pen and ink or typewriter. Three minutes to make a slide. Used for advertising slides, to announce future or feature programmes, for chorus slides when chorus slide is missing. We send four colors of gelatin. The slides look well and anyone can make them. They are handy also for announcing vaudeville acts. In fact, they may be readily used for anything you may wish to say to your audience.

For the sum of $3.50 we will send, by parcel post, prepaid and insured, the following:

24 cover glass, 1 package binder strips, 1 dozen mats, 1 instruction sheet, 1 form sheet and 50 strips assorted colors gelatin—enough for from 300 to 400 slides. Order now. Address:

NO ADVANCE IN PRICE

36 1-9 Cents a Square Foot. $3.25 a Square Yard

After years of experimenting at a cost of over $10,000.00, I have completed and built the Largest—the Only Coating Machine of its kind in the world. THINK OF IT!—This, my Greatest Invention, will metalize over 2 miles of cloth, 13 feet wide in one week. THINK OF IT!—Over 130,000 square feet—over 14,444 square yards. This means a screen regardless of size ready for shipment every 10 minutes.

Over 8,500 Mirroroide Screens now in use. I have been told by, even competitors, by leading experts: "Genter, if you could make Mirroroide seamless, No screen on earth could stand against it."

Well, Genter, the Pioneer, Did It.

I will personally guarantee that all cloth used is purchased in 500-yard bales. I'll guarantee it's not window shades. I'll guarantee it's metalized glass. I'll guarantee it contains no glue, starch, whiting, varnish, turpentine or paint oil. Above all, It Won't Crack, no matter how close it is rolled—nor will it turn black or tarnish. It can be washed with soap and water. Above all, Protection Against Any Patent Intringements.

At present made in smooth finish—but, in Pale Gold, Silver Flesh, or Silver White—

MIRROROIDE, SCREEN DE LUXE GRADE, HEAVY MATTE FINISH, IN 2 WEEKS

To guarantee against imitations, all Genuine Mirroroide is so stamped. In addition, the back of each Mirroroide Screen is tinted Lilac, Silver White, Pink, Silver Flesh, Orange, Pale Gold. In addition, apply a lighted match—Mirroroide Won't Flame.

LAEMMLE FILM SERVICE, Minneapolis, U. S. A.

Stockton's Scriptwriting Service

To aid those who wish to guard against the formation of bad writing habits, or who wish to estimate their progress, I offer the following service:

Script Criticism For a fee of two dollars for each reel, I will read your manuscript and write a personal letter, pointing out the faults of plotting, technical development, manuscript preparation, etc. Sometimes I can help you to make the script salable, but I do not guarantee a sale. I do not revise manuscript; I do not typewrite it, nor do I offer it for sale. I simply write you a letter that tells you what the trouble is.

Plot Estimates If your stories do not sell and you want to know why, send me five synopses and one full script. I will criticise the script and tell you whether it is your plot or your development that is wrong. The fee for this service is $5 for the five synopses and additional plot. Synopses must not run more than 300 words each. Send a synopsis of your undeveloped plot and fee of one dollar and you will be advised as to whether it will pay you to develop the same.

Please Note My fees do not include envelopes or return postage. Send prepaid and self addressed return envelope and remit in New York exchange; not local checks. I reserve the right to return unread (with fee) any story or plot that does not warrant treatment. All scripts must be typewritten.

To the National Convention of Motion Picture Exhibitors

The Selig Polyscope Company has arranged for the convenience and comfort of Motion Picture Exhibitors who want to foregather with their brethren in Convention at San Francisco on July 11th. A Pullman Train De Luxe will leave Chicago on Thursday, July 8th, arriving in 'Frisco in plenty of time for the big doings.

Round Trip Fare, Including Hotel, Etc., Is $128

An Excursion Manager was in the Selig offices the other day. "I don't see how you can do it," he exclaimed. We couldn't do it, but for the fact that we have chartered the special trains and pay the deficit out of our own pocket.

We Certainly Do Want You With Us In California

We take different scenic routes going and coming—Stop at the best hotels—Visit all the Western cities—Visit two expositions—Garden of the Gods, Pike's Peak, Cripple Creek, Grand Canyon, Selig Jungle-Zoo, etc., etc.

Send Ten Dollars Now for Pullman Reservations on Flyer

If you are unable to take the journey, the deposit will be cheerfully refunded. The deposit applies to the total fare. Dependable chaperons will be aboard to care for unescorted ladies and children.

JUST YOU LISTEN TO THIS!

"THE TWO NATURES WITHIN HIM," A SELIG DIAMOND SPECIAL in three reels, released Thursday, May 20, in regular service of General Film Company, is one of the greatest three-reel productions in plot, action and scenic effects ever produced by the House of Selig. Bessie Eyton and Thomas Santschi star.

ALSO LISTEN TO THIS!

"THE QUARRY," A SELIG DIAMOND SPECIAL in three reels, released Thursday, May 27, is a film adaptation by Gilson Willets of the world-famous novel of the same name. It is an absorbing story of the underworld and of how a victim of circumstantial evidence is finally exonerated in the eyes of the world.

THEN LOOK OVER THESE:

"LIGHT O' LOVE"—Released Monday, May 24. A two part love story with a new plot.

"TWO BROTHERS AND A GIRL"—Released Tuesday, May 25. A one-reel drama of heart-felt appeal.

"MOTHER'S BIRTHDAY"—Released Wednesday, May 26. A Selig one-reel drama proving that there is no real home without a mother.

"IN THE AMAZON JUNGLE"—Released Saturday, May 29. A Selig Jungle-Zoo Wild Animal drama in one reel. Denizens of the jungle furnish thrills.

AND STICK A PIN IN THIS!

Every Thursday, a Selig Diamond Special in three reels will be released through the General Film Company's regular service. You know that the name of Selig attached to multiple reel productions means that no time nor expense has been spared in producing them.

And YOU Will Say the Same Thing, Too!

FROM Terre Haute's Orpheum Theatre, Mr. Frank J. Holland sends on his surprised thanks for one of the new Thanhouser releases; says his audience was charmed, and he adds: "It is a veritable masterpiece, but it came unheralded!"

Unheralded! That proves my contention that you Exhibitors are going to do all the talking for me! I promised you that you would. Here's another Thanhouser promise come true! Another proof that good pictures—pictures which are consistent in their quality—always good—do not need heralding. They herald themselves!

Would you rather I herald my films TO you, or your audiences herald them FOR you? Which?

How to Make Money

by Lewis J. Selznick

No. 18

This series of articles is planned to make money for you—to show you why my ideas have succeeded—and why they will succeed for you if you will weigh each one carefully. Some of them will sound egotistical. I want them to—it's the only way I can drive home my arguments.

World Film Corporation Absorbs Shubert Film and Its Peerless Studios

THE greatest corporation in the world is the United States Steel Corporation, because it owns and controls every phase of the making of its products.

World Film Corporation is the strongest of the feature producers, because it owns and controls every phase in making its features.

World Film is the only established feature program releasing regularly, which not only owns its own exchanges all over the country and controls its entire selling policy—but also has its own production force.

World Film has recently acquired all of the Shubert interests and the entire ownership of the Peerless studios, which has produced the greatest features released on the World Film program.

Through its own exchanges and its own sales force it can feel the pulse of the consumer's demand and the exhibitor's needs, and by controlling its producing branch it can apply the ideas that must be enforced in order to produce the greatest features which will bring to the exhibitor the greatest revenue and at the same time create the biggest consumer demand.

"THE PURPLE IRIS"

the first 2 reels of a magnificent 12 reel GOLD SEAL series entitled "UNDER THE CRESCENT"

A stirring, true and life-like picture story of the actual experiences of Princess Hassan, wife of the eldest son of the Sultan of Egypt. They tell for the first time in pictures, the real inside story of that mysterious hidden life in an Oriental Harem, of which so little is actually known in the outside world.

Full of the gorgeous splendor and barbaric magnificence of the East. The heroine (Ella Humphrey, Princess Hassan) is an American girl actually and legally married to the Prince Hassan. Produced under the direction of Burton King.

"The House of 1000 Relations"

Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby in another VICTOR 2 reel screaming absurdity

This screaming story of the experiences of Harry and Rose in a boarding house, their decision to go into housekeeping and the visit of their relations who also bring a crowd of friends and other relatives, will keep the house in a roar from start to finish. It is simply and colossally absurd yet it hangs together with a plausibility which is simply irresistible.

All included in Regular Universal Program for Week of May 31st.

No other Program can begin to compare for big money making value.

"THE SILENT COMMAND"

A LAEMMLE 4 reel masterpiece of thrilling dramatic interest. Features Robert Leonard and Ella Hall

A creepy, thrilling story of love, hypnotism and crime that holds the spectator spellbound. Shows how the machinations of a clever but unscrupulous doctor and his piercing, soul stirring eyes, work mischief to his innocent victims. By the loving help and tireless self sacrifice of a young lawyer, he is at last unmasked. Will carry everybody with it from beginning to end.

"THE HEART OF CERISE"

Pauline Bush and William Clifford in a great REX 3 reel French Drama

A powerful drama of love, pathos, jealousy and revenge which tells of the intimate joys and sorrows of a small French Dramatic Company. Cerise is put into a false position and a great deal of hardship and trouble ensues before she is finally vindicated.

"THE SMUGGLER'S LASS"

Gene Gauntier and Jack Clark in a thrilling BISON 2 reel drama of the olden days.

Bryan is "a broth of a boy" but his smuggling adventures cause a lot of heartache to his pretty sweetheart before they finally escape from the country.

"A LIFE IN THE BALANCE"

A powerful IMP 2 reel drama, featuring King Baggot at his best.

The old doctor is failing. His young rival tries to help but is rejected by the daughter. However, love and patience triumph in the end.

"THE SWINGING DOORS"

Murdock Macquarrie in a powerful BIG U 2 reel drama of real life.

The dramatic story of Jean, a French immigrant, his misfortunes and the love story of his pretty daughter. Strong and pathetic in plot and action.

THE WILLIAMSON SUBMARINE PICTURES BREAK ALL RECORDS

All records for attendance have been broken by these magnificent, unique under water pictures.

Hundreds of delighted exhibitors have testified to their enthusiastic reception by the biggest houses ever seen in their theatres, even though they charged special prices. Thousands of people have been turned away, unable to see them. The police have stopped the sale of tickets on account of the enormous crowds.

The exhibitor who fails to cash in on this overpowering, unparalleled wave of prosperity is blind to his biggest opportunity of the Century.

THE WAR OF A SOUL

is revealed in Essanay's 3-act photoplay

"The Coward"

By H. Tipton Steck

This is unquestionably one of the greatest psychological problem plays ever presented. It bares the bitterest battle with conscience of a man born to cowardice. If you want to see your spectators grow tense and breathless in watching the thrilling scenes of a man wrestling with his inner self book this photoplay, released June 1st. Sheldon Lewis and Nell Craig, as the leading characters, bring out these emotions with exceptional clarity.

When William Ernest Henley Wrote

"In the fell clutch of circumstance
I have not wept nor cried aloud;
Under the bludgeonings of chance
My head is bloody but unbowed."

He worked out the basis for Essanay's great photoplay

Essanay's Progressive Policy Reaps Tremendous Success

ESSANAY is advancing daily in the improvement of the quality of its photoplays and in the number produced. Its output nearly has been doubled in the past few weeks. It now is producing 12 or more reels a week. Besides the regular six releases each week, including a two and three act drama, it is producing one and two reel Essanay-Chaplin comedies, and four, five and six reel features, released direct to the exhibitor through the V. L. S. E.

THIS means a great increase in its working force. Essanay has added one more company to the two already at the Niles, California, studios. It has established a new studio with two companies at Los Angeles, where Charles Chaplin now is working. It has a large company at Chattanooga, Tenn. Another company with an all star cast is located in Michigan. Still another is going to the Atlantic coast, while many new players have been added to the force at the Chicago studios. This means local color and realism in all Essanay photoplays.

VIOLA ALLEN now is working at the Chicago studios in producing "The White Sister," the greatest work of F. Marion Crawford, in which this world famous star made such a signal success on the stage. June Keith, William Buress and Johnny Slavin are at work with the Michigan company in producing Charles Hoyt's great stage success, "A Bunch of Keys."

ESSANAY is purchasing the very best novels by world famous authors for its photoplays. These include Henry C. Rowland's great series on the adventures of Dominica, "The Blindness of Virtue," by Cosmo Hamilton, in which Edna Mayo stars, "The Man Trail," by Henry Oyen, and scores of other equally popular and noted works of fiction.

Another Famous Players-Mary Pickford Triumph!

Mary Pickford, the unrivalled favorite of the screen, has added another notable characterization to her long list of triumphant successes, in her latest portrayal, "Fanchon the Cricket."

We would suggest that you read the trade papers' glowing tributes to Miss Pickford's art in this charming subject:

W. Stephen Bush in "The Moving Picture World" enthusiastically declares:

"Carefully weighing my words I find that any term other than perfection will be inadequate in appraising the merits and artistic value of this feature. It captivates and fascinates. Clean, simple, beautiful, endowed with infinite charm, this feature deserves to rank at the very top."

Horace A. Fuld in "The Dramatic Mirror" affirms:

"Mary Pickford has proved without dispute that there is but one Mary Pickford. The picture is a series of Mary Pickford moods, all quite enchanting, none long enough to become monotonous. Just the play which gives her a chance to do what is best suited to her."

Peter Milne, in the "Motion Picture News," agrees as follows:

"With every appearance of Mary Pickford in a Famous Players release, nothing less than a small sensation is created. 'Fanchon the Cricket' is no exception to this prevailing order. To predict success for the picture much resembles the well-known process of painting the lily, for failure and a Pickford-Famous Players release have never met."

Miss Agnes Smith, in "The Morning Telegraph," makes the opinion unanimous:

"The role of 'Fanchon' affords Mary Pickford infinite opportunities to display the charm and originality that have made her so famous. 'Fanchon the Cricket' will be an event in the moving picture world. The settings are uniformly beautiful. Each scene is a delight, and the picture, on the whole, has such spontaneity, humor and originality that it goes without saying 'Fanchon the Cricket' will achieve great popularity."

GEORGE KLEINE

"A 'HAM' comedy featuring Lloyd V. Hamilton and Bud Duncan that is quite one of the funniest of the series so far. A good laughable burlesque throughout."
—Dramatic Mirror, issue of May 12th.

Now you know how funny previous "HAM" comedies were! It's because they were filled chock-a-block with laughs that these comedies attained their present popularity.

Consequently, when the Dramatic Mirror's reviewer comes out with the statement that

"HAM" THE DETECTIVE

"is quite one of the funniest of the series," you can safely make up your mind that it is even better than its predecessors.

Not even in his palmiest days did Nick Carter encounter such fearful adventures as those experienced by who are employed to bring to justice the bold, bad blackhander who threatens to blow up Signor Antonio Dedough and his daughter, Citronella. It's an absolute certainty that your patrons will agree with the Dramatic Mirror's reviewer after they have seen this mirth provoker.

"HAM" and "BUD"

Released Tuesday, May 25

The New Edison Program, 3 and 4-reel Features in the Regular Program

A 3-Reel Feature by one of America's Most Successful Dramatists—
Lee Arthur, Author of the phenomenal success, "The Auctioneer"

"THE TEST"

Featuring Herbert Prior

Released Friday, June 4th. About 3000 feet. Direction, James W. Castle

Lee Arthur, distinguished dramatist now writing exclusively for Edison films, has written in this feature, "The Test," a theme of universal heart interest. It is marked with all the tests that a good play can stand—full of action that treads upon action, events happening with the force of fate but grappling in the toils the poor humans who must work out their dramatic existence and end.

As a struggling lawyer weighted in debt who, nevertheless, does not forget the call of a near-to-death friend, and, to save the friend's life, steals, we have one of those problems of "Did he do right?" which always add power to a play. He is discovered —dishonored—starts anew and then comes the supreme test.

Herbert Prior gives to the screen a manly and convincing characterization that does not, at any time, lean upon the theatric or over-acted for effect. It will strike home to conviction because his conception of a man so driven by fateful circumstances reflects life in its own rugged power.

The new regular program—Fridays, a three or four-reel feature; Wednesdays, a single reel comedy; Saturdays, a single reel drama

And the new program features plays of strength—not length

Facts and Comments

WE HAVE received a letter from the Ohio Board of Censors stating that the Board does not intend to confiscate eliminated portions of films. We based our comments upon complaints made to the writer by exchange men located in the state. We earnestly hope that there was no ground for the complaint and that the censors have enough fairness and respect for other people's property to return eliminated portions of films to the owner or distributor of the film.

* * *

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD has from the very beginning been a mine of information and an example in more ways than one to all publications which devote any of their space to motion pictures. Both here and abroad the paper is widely copied, sometimes with credit and sometimes without. We have no objection; to be copied and imitated is one of the penalties of success. Recently one paper appropriated our entire literature on the censorship question and makes the agitation against this evil an original editorial policy of its own, calmly reprinting our "Appeal to Exhibitors" and repeating our offer to supply exhibitors with anti-censorship materials. It is, of course, much easier to borrow ideas than to originate them.

A MAGAZINE writer speaks of the need of cleaning the motion picture theater. He refers to physical not moral cleanliness. Incidentally he draws an alarming picture of conditions in some theaters. "Go down to your theater in the morning," he says, "and see. The genial manager, the smiling ticket-seller are not in evidence. The only person in sight is a porter, usually colored and lazy who, by the sickly light of a single gas jet or electric bulb, is making a pretence of sweeping out the house. He may have one door open a few inches and more than likely he sweeps the refuse into the street. What he does not do is to fling open every door and window, sweep and dust with sanitary equipment and thoroughly purify the air." We can only speak from personal observation and experience, but having seen many theaters every week we think the writer's graphic picture is a trifle too black to accord with actual conditions. At the same time keeping the house clean is really one of the most important duties of the managers. Our own knowledge on the subject favors the supposition that ninety-nine managers out of every hundred fully realize this and live up to their duty.

WITH Italy on the verge of war, with France and Germany having practically stopped the production of films, it looks as if the importation of motion pictures would soon come to an entire standstill. England alone has lately sent us any films of importance, and there is no certainty whether this will continue much longer. The production of highly artistic films treating a classic or literary theme will suffer in the next few years. This is to be much deplored; we were wont to look to Italy, especially, for the art in our films. Every single one of the great film classics has come from Italy. Italy had given us a wonderful standard. We can ill afford to miss it.

A DISTINGUISHED pioneer in the film world, speaking to the writer recently, suggested that THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD start a campaign to keep "unsophisticated" money out of the motion picture business. "Unsophisticated" was far from the word he really used. We have now and then sounded a general warning, and in more than one case the warning was sufficiently specific. However good our intentions may be, we feel that there is, after all, no substitute for the school of experience. The notorious rapidity with which the "unsophisticated" are ushered into this wicked old world makes missionary work almost hopeless.

AT THE present rate of consumption "Broadway stars" still available for films are hard to discover. The visible supply is practically exhausted. After the last "Broadway star" has become a film producers will have to go about with a divining rod to discover new sources of theatrical fame. With all the apparent prominence of "Broadway stars," exhibitors and everybody else in the industry realizes that this desire for Broadway fame in prospective film stars is but a passing affair after all. The motion picture will probably march on to new triumphs long after it has ceased to depend on a Broadway star for temporary fame.

In the Beginning

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

IF THE photoplaywright is not engaged in dragging from obscurity writers who have dropped out of sight, or in transforming the work of modern authors in the struggle for recognized place, he may follow his intuitions in beginning his photodrama, and he may reach a creative achievement far more interesting than anything he could accomplish as an adapter, but he will find himself up against a commercial environment as peculiar as it is stupid. Most of the popular and profitable screen productions are from men unheard of in other arts and the real stars of screen portrayal, those who are making money for the exhibitor, draw no fame from theatrical careers. Yet, in spite of these facts, the men who buy and distribute features lay great stress on reflected light, "the flash."

In explanation of this—we will call it—"peculiarity," is the influx of theatricalism and a somewhat chronic inability on the part of those who purchase and distribute feature photodramas to judge of merit—they are not especially qualified to forecast success. The buyer tells the producer that his product must be a revival of something that has died a natural death in some other art, that of prose fiction or of stage performance, and that it must exploit some actor or actress who has starred on Broadway. The flash often covers a multitude of sins. The purchaser will sit patiently through a screen portrayal that is positively ghastly with stage artificiality or through a lifeless reproduction of some worn-out novel, when he would pass judgment at the expiration of one act of an original five-reel photodrama. This peculiar state of affairs might just as well be considered by the author of original photodramas. He is up against a condition.

The beginning of a photodrama thus assumes an importance beyond that of artistry. There is a commercial value in a first reel which compels attention or which so excites curiosity that prospective buyers may be led into a more intelligent examination of the whole story. Even though it may contain a wealth of thought, display a rare charm and grace, be replete with the magic of sustained interest in its big scenes, it may never be a child of the sun, delight millions with its glory, if its first act fails to make an impression. To be profoundly careless of this first impression may, therefore, mean a highly artistic inability to earn one's daily bread.

To go at the heart of a story at once without endangering interest in its crisis may plunge the photoplaywright into a mental whirlpool of indecision, but the way out may be as easy as that of a melodrama hero thrown into a sewer where the water rose higher and higher during a series of exciting scenes until it reached his face, when he calmly swam out by an exit not available until the water had risen. It is not always necessary to begin at the beginning in photoplays, and, there being no arbitrary starting point, one may plunge into the middle of his subject without qualms. Antecedent causes and circumstances may be shown in the course of action immediately preceding a crisis. To what extent this may be done, however, without a lapse of sustained interest, is a matter requiring nice judgment. Opportunities for failure at the high point are multiplied by the number and extent of previous explanatory phases to be pictured.

A three-reel mystery story of fine development opened with a rapid succession of incidents, including a bitter quarrel between two men closely followed by the murder of one. Commonplace in subject, the development proved to be unusual and of high interest. Aside from the evidences pointing straight to one man, there was not the slightest clue to the real murderer, not a visible motive, not a character other than the accused man capable of the deed. The author now set up an entirely new line of action, itself quite sensational, leading gradually to the first, though there had apparently been no previous association of the main characters. It was a daring expedient to reach the edge of a crisis and turn back for a gradual solution of the mystery, but it succeeded.

In spite of the fact that a number of able critics have written learnedly on various forms of creative composition, there is little to offer in the way of rules—suggestions are, however, permissible, and that is about as far as one writer can go in helping others. There are instances without number to show that it is unwise to always plunge into the thick of the struggle, and it will become apparent to the writer of screen stories that he is at his best when he has a free hand. It need not be taken for granted, therefore, that any one method of introducing characters, theme and action is to be blindly followed, but there are many considerations, artistic as well as commercial, which favor attacking a photodrama near its end.

An audience can be held by interesting personalities during the opening of a stage play; the novelist may keep our minds aglow by the power of his own thoughts until his narrative is under way; the photoplaywright may not indulge—he has to depend largely upon what can be made visible of characterization, motive and movement. He may get at character, penetrate motive and set action going on in a way to hold attention while preparing for important situations, but his problem bristles with difficulties if he follows a straight line from his earliest events to his terminal position.

To the gentlemen engaged in trading between the creator and the user of photoplays it may seem almost laughable that a scenario writer should take infinite pains with his work, but it is to be expected that audiences will grow more and more exacting—that is in accord with experience—and the standard of technical excellence must be constantly raised. The number of writers for screen production is rapidly narrowing down to those who do take pains and who are capable of concentration upon large themes and their effective visualizations. The art itself started as did the old-fashioned story of a "solitary horseman seen wending his way" and it promised much, like that old story, that it did not fulfil.

We can still start our tale with the solitary horseman and even have him stop at a wayside tavern, but we cannot keep on forever promising all and giving so little. Something must happen that arrests attention. He meets there a woman or a man or both, closely connected with a crucial period of his life, one possibly involved in tragic mystery. Why do they start and pale at the sight of this new-comer? Why are they and other characters, who are apparently living tranquil lives, suddenly thrown into confusion at the sight of the stranger who has come upon them? There is nothing new about this method—it is as old as the detective story—but it is worth the consideration of writers who do not relish wearing laurels in the bread line. A live beginning may help to tide over that period of preparation which nearly always precedes the really big scenes in a play. It can often stimulate anticipation of good things to come, and it should certainly operate to put the spectator in the responsive state of mind of an impressionist.

*Copyright, 1915, Louis Reeves Harrison.

The Range of the Screen

By W. Stephen Bush.

THE victories of the motion picture in the world of amusements are growing bigger and more numerous every day. Think of the victory of the motion picture over vaudeville. But a few years ago it looked as if vaudeville would overwhelm the picture. For a time a strange hodge-podge and misfit grew up—a mixture of motion pictures and vaudeville. The craze spread to even the smallest cities and the smallest theaters. Men still doubted the power of the motion picture as an exclusive form of amusement. The Moving Picture World fought cheap vaudeville and predicted its certain elimination from the motion picture theaters. The prophecy has been vindicated by the facts. Now comes George Bernard Shaw and tells us of the influence which the motion picture has now and is bound to have hereafter upon the legitimate stage. What the great playwright and reviewer has to say about the tremendous advantages of the screen over the conventional stage will sound commonplace to the readers of The Moving Picture World. It will sound entirely different to that portion of the theatrical world which is even at this stage still unreconciled to the permanency and the importance of the motion picture. He says that the motion picture is bound to force the highest attainable quality upon the productions of the speaking stage.

Are we, who claim to be convinced of all the extraordinary advantages of the screen, always willing to act up to our convictions? There is still vaudeville in motion picture houses. There are theaters by the dozen devoted to vaudeville and owned or controlled either wholly or in part by film men. We know of more than one house fitted out in gorgeous style hesitating between vaudeville and pictures, or between pictures exclusively, or pictures mixed with vaudeville. Men with a rich and varied experience in motion pictures, men who have made their money in the motion picture business build magnificent theaters and fear to trust their fate to pictures alone. They, of course, like pictures, but will the public be satisfied with an out-and-out picture house? They suspect the public of a lingering fondness for vaudeville.

For the enlightenment of such doubters we might point to more than one highly successful house which has been devoted to pictures exclusively for at least a year or so. We might also ask these doubters to consider the growing variety of picture programs. There never has been a form of entertainment in the world's history more capable than the motion picture of satisfying a wide variety of tastes. The motion picture is not merely a new development of the dramatic art. If it were just that and nothing more it could never have attained its present popularity. When motion pictures first made their appeal to public interest and favor they attempted nothing more than a representation of life aside from any formal dramatic construction. The invention which enabled man to reproduce motion, or to plausibly stimulate such a reproduction, need never be confined to the drama. We have seen far more than the purely dramatic in the motion picture. The taste which craves for the pathos of the novel or for the charm of description is as easily satisfied by the screen as the preference for the severely dramatic. We have seen the world's greatest epics transferred to the screen with a success in visualization which has astonished the world. Poetry, too, with but the slenderest thread of drama the screen has reproduced with no loss of beauty or power. Indeed, there is no part of literature from the idyl to the tragedy which cannot be effectively visualized upon the screen. What other form of human entertainment can do this?

Nor is the screen confined to literature and to the drama. In the language of a distinguished pioneer of educational films we have but touched the surface in putting the marvels of Nature upon the screen. Again, as a recorder of news, the camera excels all previous methods of reporting.

The exhibitor who is capable of thoroughly appreciating and absorbing these facts and of utilizing them in the composition of his program is sure to find the road to success. There are exhibitors who believe that the Alpha and Omega of the motion picture business is hunting for "punches." Their efforts go no further than looking for "strong meat" and "plenty of sensations." Having secured a feature with a railroad accident or a man jumping from a cliff or an heroine struggling in the millrace and about to be drawn into the wheel they think they have done their full duty. We are altogether too apt to overestimate what are vulgarly called "punches." A "punch," if such be our definition of a strong climax or an highly emotional scene or a hair-raising accident, is all right in its place, but it is not half as important as the proper balancing of a program. It may sound paradoxical, but it is literally true that there are many splendid programs to-day that have but one weak point, and that is the so-called feature. I am not speaking of the program as the exchange man understands it, I am speaking of the program which the exhibitor puts together in the sweat of his brow and upon the balancing and the quality of which depends his daily bread and butter. Feature-making is developing into an art more and more every day. It is a curious situation. On the one hand there are clouds of features and on the other hand there are but few which the exhibitor feels safe in offering to his patrons. Of all film productions the feature is the hardest to select. Here, too, the present of the old-fashioned "punch" is not always an infallible criterion. A feature may be pre-eminent because of its color, its atmosphere, its stars, its story. The best story is not necessarily the story with a plot full of "punches." Characterization and atmosphere often make the simplest and most elemental of plots overwhelmingly powerful, while a strong dramatic story lacking these elements will often leave your audience cold and disappointed. I would hesitate to lay down such a proposition for the speaking stage, but I have no hesitation whatever in applying it to the screen. I cannot make my meaning clearer than by pointing out a concrete example. The basis for the well-known drama, "Fanchon, the Cricket," was taken from the tale of George Sand; the film was founded on the same source. Now the tale of Fanchon is exceedingly simple. Its apparent dramatic values are obviously slight. To make it a success on the speaking stage the adapter had to add a good deal by way of multiplying and sustaining the dramatic interest. He had the dialogue but he could not get the atmosphere, which a skilful direction of the film has secured. The filmer then left the story much in its original charming form, relying upon the power of the screen to tell a simple, touching story with a wonderful artistic background. The result is astounding: The drama does not begin to give the spectator the pleasure which the film affords him in such unstinted measure.

Study the power and the variety of the screen and its growing new developments.

At the Golden Gate

Blaisdell Meets Up with a Lot of Old Timers in San Francisco—Says the Exposition Is Some Show.

From the Moving Picture World Staff Correspondent.

San Francisco, California.

EXHIBITORS throughout the country who are considering the question of attending the annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, to be held in San Francisco July 13 to 16, may as well take into account the fact that to miss the big exposition is to overlook something worth going more than three thousand miles to see. A wonder city it is, indeed, these men and women of San Francisco have designed and constructed. Fifty million dollars has been expended on these structures and grounds in the 635 acres of Exposition Park. The amount of money does not impress one as being the chief factor. What does stand out is the manner in which it has been employed. The dominant note is artistry—in architecture, in landscape, and in the employment of the 3,600,000,000 candlepower which furnishes the illumination and effects. Two hundred searchlights are used. For the firework displays two batteries of twenty-four searchlights each provide a riot of color which baffles adequate description. When these lamps, masked under colors of blue, yellow, red and white, are turned onto clouds of escaping steam there is duplicated the glory of a rare mountain sunset. To be sure, this is only one incident in the big show, but it gets under your skin.

I am judging the fair simply as one who has rambled through the grounds for one evening; but that was sufficient to satisfy, as to its magnitude. I had the marked advantage of the guidance of A. H. Byrd, vice-president of the Wyanoak Publishing Company of New York City, who has just closed a contract for the reproduction in sepia and colors of a hundred of the more striking pictures among the twelve thousand taken by the Cardinell-Vincent Company, official photographers of the Exposition. Mr. Byrd, a fellow-screener, by the way, has a wide business and social acquaintance in the motion picture industry. He has been away from New York since January 20 on a trip covering a wide territory. He has been in San Francisco since the middle of March.

The local offices of the United Film Service was the first film shop sighted by the World man after his arrival in San Francisco. George J. Ekre is the new manager. He had been in New York but five days on a recent visit when he hooked up with James C. Graham. Mr. Ekre said he was just getting in touch with conditions and was "plugging away" to build up business. The attraction of the fair has drawn away some of the patronage of smaller photoplay houses and the larger houses in the Market street section get the benefit of the strangers in town for the big show, he said. Mr. Ekre added that business for the United was looking better all the time.

O. V. Traggardh, president and general manager of the Union Film and Supply Company, said that besides maintaining selling offices in San Francisco, Los Angeles and Seattle, his company was opening one in Portland. On the film side the Union specializes in state rights. Mr. Traggardh is the treasurer of the new film board of trade and one of its workers. He said that with twenty-two or twenty-three exchanges in the city the organization was a necessity and that it was proving of benefit to the exhibitor as well as the exchange man. Letters were coming in from all over the country asking for details as to the scope and work of the board.

While visiting Mr. Traggardh we shook hands with F. C. Malkes, of the World's theater, Gilroy, Cal.

H. W. Oviatt, manager of the Pathe exchange, greeted the World man in hearty fashion. He said he intimately knew the founder of the World, J. P. Chalmers, Jr., and had at one time sent him correspondence from Los Angeles. Mr. Oviatt came to the San Francisco office on February 8 from the Los Angeles branch of the Pathe. He referred to the business he was doing with the Pacific Coast edition of the Pathe News, which is shown in Seattle, Portland, San Francisco and Los Angeles. The positive prints are made here, after which the negative is shipped east. He said the plan of giving quick action to the Westerners was meeting with success. For the new Balboa-Pathe serial of "Who Pays" Mr. Oviatt said he was all ready to play ball as soon as the umpire gave the word. It is a big office the Pathe exchange has at 67 Turk street. There is a projection room with a Simplex installation.

Saturday afternoon just after a chat with D. J. Grauman, pioneer exhibitor of San Francisco, I met down stairs in the lobby of the Empress theater Sid Grauman, the manager of this big Loew house. The son, who, by the way, is president of the Screen Club of San Francisco, insisted that we look over at least one act. It happened to be a picture—one that carried my thoughts back to good old N. Y. as I saw on the screen Howard Crampton and little Katherine Lee; and then as six and a half foot Jess Willard came into the picture there were recollections of an afternoon in speedy El Paso when Captain Warren Dean, of the Fifteenth Cavalry invited me to reach away up and shake hands with the big fellow. The picture was Imp's "The Heart Punch"—and there was a bit of a punch in it, too. Willard is not a half bad actor, either.

Saturday noon as the guest of William Citron, of the Fox Film Corporation, I attended the weekly luncheon of the Screen Club of San Francisco. The table was spread in a private dining room of one of the best restaurants in this town of good eating places. Among those present were Fred Frisk, George E. Chamberlain, O. V. Traggardh, Robert S. Stebbins, H. J. Gosliner, G. Blumenthal, N. K. Herzog, Sol Lichtenstein, Maurice Markowitz, Tom North, Abe Markowitz, H. Calmy, Sol Lesser, Leon Netter and Joseph Huff.

The Screen Club of San Francisco is settled in very comfortable quarters in Eddy street. The new home was informally opened Friday evening, and yours truly was given the honor of being the first to inquire "What'll it be?" There was an argument, to be sure, but the stranger was finally allowed to have his own way. The film men, exchangemen and exhibitors alike, have a convenient rallying spot in congenial surroundings. The fact that the organizations of the two branches of the trade have tentatively accepted the invitation of the club to hold their meetings in the new film headquarters augurs well for the solidarity of the business in San Francisco.

In the offices of the World Film Corporation W. W. Drum, western division manager, introduced the World man to Alfredo Miron Estrada of A. Miron Estrada & Co., of Guatemala, and James Ch. Jones of the same film. Mr. Estrada is the general manager of the Europa, Excelsior, Apollo and Moderno theaters of Guatemala. Mr. Jones, who acted as interpreter, said the company besides conducting theaters, also rented films, which now are being obtained from Cuba and New York, the European supply practically having been closed. Mr. Jones made the interesting statement that Estrada & Co. is now erecting studios and laboratories in Guatemala and intend to begin the production of pictures in August. Men are now being engaged in California. Mr. Jones said climatic conditions in Guatemala were favorable for picture-making. The plant is located at an altitude of 5,000 feet. The rainy season extends over three months, but the downpours are spasmodic rather than prolonged. The company will do commercial and industrial work as well as produce dramatic subjects.

The World Film has spacious offices in San Francisco. One of the features is a little theater.

Crossing Powell street at O'Farrell this Sunday noon I saw a figure that looked strangely familiar. It was Matt Snyder, now nearly two years out of New York, living here in San Francisco with his daughter. If you saw "The Heart of Maryland" you know Mr. Snyder—he is the fine old general in that stirring picture. The veteran sailor, soldier and actor looks as hearty as ever—and he commanded a ship before the days of the civil war, was imprisoned in Cuba and sent by Spain into exile in Northern Africa—from whence he escaped. He served through the war between the States and was in the last body of Confederates to lay down arms. Mr. Snyder has been with the California Motion Picture Company from the beginning. The veteran has a host of friends in the dramatic profession. He is one of the late comers to the screen, after more than two score years on the speaking stage; he's just as good at the one as he was at the other. "Am I going back to New York? Well, now, son, it would look mighty good—just for a visit, you know. You never can tell."

We found George Breck at his big store at 70 Turk street, where he keeps a big stock of picture machines and films and general supplies for picture theaters and vaudeville houses. Away back in 1893 Mr. Breck assembled in San Francisco the second motion picture machine to be set up in the United States—and he has been in the motion picture business ever since. Just to prove Mr. Breck is still in business it may be mentioned that he has sold ninety ticket choppers in the exposition grounds. In the basement Mr. Breck has a model operating room, where, for instance, screen buyers may witness a demonstration of different makes, including his own Radiant Sunlight. Several of these latter are in state buildings at the fair grounds. Mr. Breck maintains a model theater lobby, in which are shown the latest devices. In the basement also is an enormous stock of all kinds of supplies. The Breck store, by the way, is the Pacific Coast distributor for Thomas A. Edison, Inc. The Vita slide, a novelty which some thought would be too expensive, is meeting a general sale all over the country. It is being taken up by merchants under a yearly contract, and is used by them in theaters for advertising purposes. Mr. Breck demonstrated a number of these interesting slides, showing how it is possible to create the remarkable situation of a theater audience applauding an advertisement. Asked as to how he found business, Mr. Breck said it was good—and he added that it was his observation that many exchanges were going out of the supply business.

J. R. Crone, manager of the Mutual Film Corporation's San Francisco branch for the past twenty months, said that business with his exchange had been good since October except during a few rainy weeks. The Master pictures are going well. We also met X. K. Stout and the Mutual's outside representative, F. W. Voigt.

It was at the invitation of Harry David, assistant manager of the fine big Portola theater, that I saw one of these Master Mutuals—at least I assume it was. "The Outcast" was the subject, and it was a feature, too. There is a court scene in this story which in length exceeds anything I have seen—and the interest was maintained all the way at the top pitch. Mae Marsh and Bobby Harron make a rare team.

It was on a Thursday I called on Tom North, representing George Kleine Attractions, at his office in the Pacific Building. It was a business-like looking place, too. Mr. North was making arrangements to transfer his quarters and was busy, but remarked that he'd like to see the World man about sundown. He did. It was in the wee sma' when goodnight was said. There was a party of seven. During the evening we called on Sam Gordon, one of the earliest exhibitors in San Francisco. Mr. Gordon owns an amusement place adjoining his Broadway theater. Quickly he had the World man in an outfit of bewhiskered "pants," a big hat and a bandanna looking into the barrel of a pistol held by one of the leading film lights of the U. S. Tom North was behind an imitation mining camp bar looking immensely pleased. The World man tried to look good and properly frightened. To tell the truth, the camera proved him an abominable actor.

While here we met Ralph L. Marks, one time secretary of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of San Francisco, one of the officers of the Screen Club of San Francisco, and a man who has been officially connected with the exhibitors since their first organization. He is giving much thought to the problems presented by the coming national convention of exhibitors. The first organization of picture men in San Francisco was formed about eight years ago, Mr. Marks said. While there was no local organization at present, there was no doubt that at the meeting on April 28 one would be created, for the convention anyway, and probably for permanency. One of the suggestions receiving much attention is that of grading initiation and dues according to the size of the theater represented.

Harry Leonhardt, western representative of the Fox Film Corporation, said that during the convention exhibitors of Fox films and all other visiting picture men, for that matter, would be welcome at the exchange at 107 Golden Gate avenue. Mr. Leonhardt has under his supervision also the Los Angeles and Seattle offices. He said he would leave the coast during the following week to meet at Salt Lake Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Company. "We are going to print in the company's bulletin the individual photographs of our exhibitors out here, describing them as the Fox Feature Club of California," said Mr. Leonhardt. The office, of which William J. Citron is manager, has been open since October 1.

We had a pleasant chat with the Davis Brothers, dealers in advertising matter and supplies for moving picture theaters at 158 Eddy street. They reported business good. The same statement was made by W. G. Preddey, dealer in motion picture electrical supplies, who occupies the other side of the store. Mr. Preddey said he had found the preceding month especially a busy one. He said in his opinion there were about thirty installations of motion picture apparatus within the fair grounds, larger estimates to the contrary notwithstanding. BLAISDELL.

Anna Laughlin

ANNA LAUGHLIN, a member of the Vitagraph Stock Company, has been continuously before the public since she was five years old, when as a tot she was engaged by the Grove Street Stock Company at San Francisco to appear with Arthur May in "Rosedale," September, 1894. Miss Laughlin was born in Sacramento Oct. 11, 1889.

Her father died when she was five years old and her mother moved to San Francisco, where, armed with letters to several influential theatrical managers of the Golden Gate City, succeeded in securing for her daughter the engagement with the Grove Street Stock. This paved the way for better parts in "Inherited," with Maud Granger; Louise in "Infatuated" and Suzanna La Rouque in Paul M. Potter's "Rogar La Honte." Little Miss Laughlin was beginning to make a name for herself and cast longing glances to New York City, the centre of theatrical activities. An opportunity to play Eva in an "Uncle Tom's Cabin" company headed for the Atlantic Coast, presented itself and was accepted. Arriving in New York City Miss Laughlin was immediately successful in securing the part of Editha in "Editha's Burglar," which she played for an entire season.

Anna Laughlin.

Boston was the next city to be invaded by the coming theatrical star and the Old Boston theater, the scene of her trimuph, "Little Lord Fauntleroy" serving as the vehicle. Engagements in "A Summer Shower," in which she was featured with Arthur Sidman; "The Man Without a Country," in which she created the part of Ruth, and "The War of Wealth" followed in rapid succession, until, becoming too large for child's parts, she went into vaudeville.

Fluctuating between the vaudeville and legitimate stages from the time she was fourteen until August, 1913, Miss Laughlin made rapid advancement, appearing successfully with such well-known stars and productions as the Wilbur Opera Company; "Belle of Bohemia," both in America and England, playing opposite Richard Carle at the Apollo theater, London, with "The Casino Girl;" opposite Dan Daly in "The New Yorkers," created the part of Dorothy in "The Wizard of Oz," and was featured in "The Top o' the World," and "In the Land of Nod." Vaudeville now claimed Miss Laughlin for a season, she appearing with Joseph E. Howard, under the team name of Howard & Laughlin. An offer from Frazee and Lederer to appear in "The Lady's Lion," featured with Jefferson de Angelis, was the inducement for her to return to the comic opera stage, this engagement being followed by one in support of Eddie Foy in "Mr. Hamlet of Broadway."

In August, 1913, Miss Laughlin was induced to try posing for motion pictures and was placed under contract by the president of one of the large producing firms to appear in dramatic roles of feature pictures. After eight months of this work, the legitimate stage again called and in March, 1914, she returned to support Blanche Ring in "When Claudia Smiles," playing with this attraction until well into the summer.

But the lure of the pictures again claimed her. Six months with one of the well-known film producing companies served as a stepping stone to membership in the Vitagraph Stock. Miss Laughlin's first picture with the Vitagraph was "Rector's At Seven," following which she played an important part in "Fair, Fat and Saucy." She has been selected to play opposite Frank Daniels, and for her third Vitagraph release will be seen in "Crooky Scruggs."

Olive Johnson

OLIVE was born in Detroit, Michigan, where they make all the automobiles, and her anniversary is the 12th of May. It was in 1911 that she was born. She first went on the real stage when only 23 months old, with her mother and her aunt. For many months she appeared in stage productions until two years ago when the Universal found her, and then the Sterling company recruited her to play leads with Billy Jacobs. She was under the tuetelage of Robert Thornby, who directed most of the Kid films, and while working in the Hollywood studios became quite a pet among the grown-ups. Director Thornby used to call her his big leading lady, and even called her Olivette, the actress.

Olive Johnson.

Olive, when asked why she was not working with little Billy any more, smilingly replied that "Oh, we just got fired," but her mother put in that it was not really truly firing, because the company had given the mighty little players their two-weeks' notice because the company disbanded. After the Sterling brand died Olive went to the Biograph where she appeared in several juvenile pictures.

Olive is not only a little leading lady, but somewhat of a champion youngster as well, for two years ago she was given a handsome gold medal for being the most perfect formed baby in the world.

Some of the best pictures in which she starred are "Olive's Love Affairs," a worthy Sterling picture; "Olive's Pets," same company, and "Olive's Hero," "A Beach Romance," and many pictures in which Billy took the title.

Little Olive has one desire or hobby, that is to dress up like Cleo Madison and then play that she is a real honest to goodness grown up leading lady. Cleo is her one ideal, and she loves her mightily. She also likes to imitate Ford Sterling's facial "gyrolations," and sometimes when she dresses up like a boy she tries to imitate Charlie Chaplin.

At present she is being featured in Mutual kid releases and is just completing her second picture under the guidance of the director who is handling the juvenile company.

ESSANAY INCREASES OUTPUT.

In line with his policy of progress, George K. Spoor, president of Essanay, is rapidly pushing forward Essanay's capacity for production and in the last few weeks has almost doubled the output of films. Essanay is now putting out more than twelve reels every week. This has been done by increasing the number of directors and companies while increasing the quality of films constantly. In addition to the six regular weekly releases, including a two and a three-reel feature, it is getting out one and two-reel Essanay-Chaplin comedies, and four, five and six-reel features, which are being released direct to the exhibitors through the V. L. S. E. To produce the extra releases, Essanay has added largely to its force at the Chicago studio, Viola Allen being one of the leading players recently secured. It has added an extra company at Niles, Cal., studios; has opened a new studio at 147 North Hill street, Los Angeles, and has a company playing at Chattanooga, Tenn. Another company will be established on the Atlantic coast this summer to take special plays requiring an eastern setting.

BILLIE BURKE WITH N. Y. M. P. CORP.

It is announced by the New York Motion Picture Corporation that Billie Burke, the popular actress who has appeared under the management of the late Charles Frohman for the past several years, has signed a contract to work in pictures and is now at the KayBee studios in Los Angeles. This well known star of the legitimate stage has a host of patrons and should prove a drawing card for picture theaters.

Seelye With V-L-S-E

C. R. SEELYE sprang the surprise of the week by giving up the position of sales manager for the World Film Corporation to become assistant general manager in the New York office of the Big Four, otherwise Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essanay, Inc. Mr. Seelye moved into his new quarters at 1600 Broadway on May 17th.

C. R. Seelye.

The former sales manager of the World Film has made an enviable record in carrying through new methods in the sale of pictures, in developing a thoroughly trained force of salesmen and in systematizing office records so that the home office might be in close touch with its branches and with exhibitors. On a recent trip to the far West he made many friends among motion picture men and returned with a comprehensive report on conditions, and supplementing his information were definite plans for reaching the market. He is credited with originating for the World Film a theater card system enabling branch managers to get in communication with all theaters in towns of over 1000 population at least once a week. Personally, Mr. Seelye is characterized by energy, a capacity for hard work and the ability to enthuse others into carrying out his aims. During his connection with the World Film he was always successful in surrounding himself with able men ready to forward policies, the practical value of which was proven by results.

G. J. Schaefer has been appointed to succeed Mr. Seelye as sales manager for World Film. Mr. Schaefer has shown his value, first as secretary to Lewis J. Selznick, and more recently as a member of the department he has been chosen to direct.

NORTH HAS NARROW ESCAPE.

Late this afternoon I dropped in on F. C. Aiken, special representative of General Film, who informed me of the miraculous escape Mr. North had had from death in San Francisco. The new manager of the Big Four for Portland, Oregon, was stepping into the elevator of his hotel when, the operator's attention being momentarily distracted, a child threw the lever. In the office the manager, just a moment before in conversation with Mr. North, saw the impending tragedy. He reached out his hand and touched a button that providentially was within his reach. The pressing of the button automatically stopped the car.

Mr. North was so badly bruised on one leg below the knee that he was confined to his room for a day or two. At last reports he was walking around on two legs, a little chipped, but as chipper as ever.

More power to the elbow of the manager of that hotel! He saved for the film bunch one good fellow it can't afford to lose.

BLAISDELL.

LEWIS TO LEAVE FOX.

It is rumored in film circles that Edgar Lewis, the producer, is about to leave the Fox Film Corporation, with which concern he has been a fixture. It is said that Mr. Lewis has recently received some very flattering offers on the strength of the rumor. Mr. Lewis refuses to comment on his plans for the future other than to say that his work will embrace bigger and better plays than he has done in the past. When it is considered that within the last six months he has produced "The Thief," "Samson," "The Gilded Fool," "The Nigger," "The Plunderer," and is now making "The Bondman," Mr. Lewis' plans for the future will be of interest to the film industry.

Supper to Winfield R. Sheehan

San Francisco and Nearby California Exhibitors Meet General Managers of Fox Corporation.

FOR the purpose of affording an opportunity to the subscribers of the Fox Film Corporation service in the vicinity of San Francisco to get acquainted with Winfield R. Sheehan, the general manager of the company, the San Francisco exchange arranged a supper on the evening of May 6 at one of the large downtown restaurants. The details were in charge of Harry Leonhardt, western division manager, and William J. Citron, manager of the local exchange. It was said to be one of the largest gatherings of city picturemen ever known. James Beatty, of the Liberty theater, San Jose, was toastmaster. There were speeches by Frank Dahnken, F. J. ("Dynamite") Smith, Robert F. Abrams, president of the San Francisco exhibitors; Mr. Sheehan, H. J. Gosliner, Harry Leonhardt, N. K. Herzog, Sid Grauman, Joseph E. Levin, Bruce Johnson, Frank R. Macauley, Harry Cooper, W. McCarty, Mr. Citron, Mr. Turner, Tom Lewis, Mr. Shields, Louis Greenfield, C. Krueger and W. C. Midgley. Messrs. Bennley, Williams and Coffey and Donnelly provided good interspersing entertainment.

It was about 11 o'clock when the party gathered. There was an abundance of enthusiasm; it started right at the beginning when Mr. Dahnken proposed a toast to William Fox. "Dynamite" Smith paid his respects to some of the legitimate actors, frankly expressing his preference for the camera-wise picture player. President Abrams praised the Fox exchange officials for bringing about the gathering. Mr. Sheehan said that Mr. Fox understood the needs of the exhibitors, chief of which were pictures that would make money. He said the encouragement of the exhibitors had resulted in the expenditure of greater sums for pictures that will have attraction for box-office receipts. "We don't say we have made the greatest pictures in the world," he said, "but we have been increasing in strength and are going to increase if we have your support and encouragement. Mr. Fox intends to put still larger sums into his business."

Among those present were H. C. Schmidt, Marque theater, Palo Alto; S. Silverman and Edward Scott, Princess, Oakland; Gus Johnson, Edison, Newman; Joseph Amflinger, C. & C., Taft; W. C. Midgley, Rex Midgley and C. Kruger, Franklin, Oaklin; Joseph Dunning, Fresno; B. Hanlon, Bell theater, Vallejo; C. E. Hart, Peninsula, San Mateo; George Roy, Burlingame theater, Burlingame; William H. Clark, Bijou, Elmhurst; B. Bender, Regent, Alameda; R. Tcherassy, Point, Point Richmond; John Ratto, Ratto, Jackson; J. Laugenar, Airdome, Woodland; Cullers & Childers, Jamestown; Billy Martine, Star; Modesto; C. Hatton, Colonial, Stockton; L. Hellman, Strand, Oakland; T. C. Reives, Berkeley, Berkeley; W. H. Seaver, Rockridge, Oakland, and these from San Francisco: E. Nasser, J. C. McCann and W. Nasser, Palace; G. Nasser, Castro; Robert Abrams, Idle Hour; S. G. and A. E. Varnhargen, Garrick; Sid Grauman, Empress; S. Ahrens, Fisher's; F. R. Macauley, Irving; Joseph Huff, Unique and Odeon; M. Schubner, Frank Blaine and A. J. Deacon, William Fox Attractions; I. L. Marks, Acme; R. L. Marks, Acme; Bruce Johnson, Tivoli; Frank Dahnken and Chic Turner, Turner & Dahnken Circuit; Harry Cooper, Orpheum; Fred Wescher, William Fox; Louis Greenfield, All Star; Joseph Levin, New Fillmore; S. C. Loomis and Joseph Malm, Regent; A. Goldberg, Peerless; H. Frohman, Queen; Nat Goldstein, William Fox; D. Levy, Majestic; H. K. Herzog, Silver Palace; Tom Lewis and Harry Williams, Orpheum; A. Kahn, Progress theater; C. J. and S. E. Michelson, Clement; Al Moon, Washington Square; J. J. McArthur, Majestic; A. Eby, Mission; George Mason, Orpheum; Sam Levin, Haight street; A. Goldsmith, Queen; Ben Levin, Valencia; Irving Ackerman and Sam Harris, Republic, and B. J. Ferguson, Washington Square.

LUBIN FEATURE OPENS MADISON SQUARE GARDEN.

Madison Square Garden, New York City, the most famous show place in the world, has been converted into a motion picture theater, and opened its doors on May 22 with the six-part Lubin masterpiece, "The Sporting Duchess." This edifice, remarkable both for its architectural beauty and as the gathering place of American aristocracy at the great horse shows, dog shows, automobile and sportsmen shows, will now take its place in amusement history as the largest motion picture theater in the world.

The selection of "The Sporting Duchess" as the opening attraction is a tremendous triumph for the Lubin Company and the V. L. S. E. program. Every film company producing features had sought the distinction of having one of their pictures selected for the initial showing, and the decision of the management to book the big six-part Lubin reflects greatly to the credit of the director and the stars, as well as to the Lubin Company and the "Big Four."

LUBIN MAKING "THE RED VIRGIN."

The Western Lubin studio has begun the filming of a three reel drama called "The Red Virgin," a play that promises to attract considerable attention. A great deal of time has been spent in selecting scenery, costumes, locations and in the building of special sets. Many of the scenes will be filmed in the exposition grounds at San Diego, Cal.

Night Photography

Series of Interesting and Successful Experiments Made by Director Harvey in a Thanhouser Production.

By John William Kellette.

JOHN HARVEY, Thanhouser director, has accomplished the seemingly impossible in the production of a five reel feature for the Mutual Masterpiece program with most of the photography taken between the hours of sunset and sunrise. While the public prints heralded the fact that the greatest director of them all, David W. Griffith, tried night photography in "The Birth of a Nation," which was so unsatisfactory that he went back to day scenes and tinted film, Mr. Harvey, with the aid of Carl Louis Gregory, his cameraman, who needs no introduction to Moving Picture World readers, went ahead along lines conceived by him and the Thanhouser release of May 2, "Their One Love," was the forerunner of "The Patriot and the Spy," which is booked for an early June release, critics having said of "Their One Love" that it was comparable only to "The Birth of a Nation."

John Harvey.

But in his last production Mr. Harvey has eclipsed anything heretofore imagined along night photography lines, his chief, Edwin Thanhouser, a cool analytical mind, having sat entranced in the little projection room at the studio and uttered the statement that never had he seen anything to compare with Mr. Harvey's achievement, and that nothing in "The Birth of a Nation" could compare with it.

The writer has just returned from Glen Island, a 64-acre spot in Long Island Sound, built by men with love for German architecture, which contains, among other things, a fort front, with massive embrasures, towers and sentry boxes; a castle, used in summer as a "bier stube," but which looks for all the world like castles of old with a moat in front, towers and lookouts on top, and a tall observation tower. Old iron cannon of the 1812 pattern adorn the island and it was just the spot to put on a foreign picture. Mr. Harvey secured it and held possession, day and night for ten days, and he had his army of workers equipping the island for his night effects.

He secured members of the Second Battery, Light Artillery, of New York City to do soldier stuff, in connection with 100 men from the studio, and he had infantry, cavalry and artillery battles that are bound to revolutionize the industry, and altogether about 1,000 people were worked in the picture which features James Cruze, Marguerite Snow and Alphonse Ethier.

To change night into day Mr. Harvey used about $2,200 worth of fireworks, much of which were made into aerial bombs, while a small sized army was kept busy throwing them into battle scenes. About 5,000 rounds of ammunition for small guns were used, while 100 charges belched forth from field artillery pieces, which put sleeping in New Rochelle out of the question, and was the basis of a pretty clash between Mr. Harvey and Mr. Thanhouser. Because "Wid" in the Evening Mail has told of it, I will not be breaking any confidence in telling some of the points that were missed. Mr. Harvey made so much racket on the island after 11 o'clock each night that the inhabitants of that part of the city complained to the Solons, and notice was served on Mr. Thanhouser that all firing must cease on the island Lawsuits were threatened, and Mr. Harvey was commanded to stop the battle stuff.

Effect Produced by Bombs and Flares.

Mr. Thanhouser tried, upon several occasions, to talk with Harvey over the phone, but the director had been tipped off on what was coming and kept away from the talk box. Mr. Thanhouser generally gets what he goes after. He went after Harvey, after passing the word along to have Harvey wait for him on the island, but Mr. Harvey had just put ninety-six hours in one stretch without taking his boots off, and had consumed five perfectly good hours in getting Gatling guns up on the roof of the castle, and his electricians had hoisted ten Kleigel arcs and connected the juice to do defensive work, and Mr. Harvey was in no mood to have anybody tell him to cease firing. Instead, when he heard that his chief was en route to the island he posted guards at the ferry slip and gave orders to allow no one to land unless it be Jim Wallace, his chief chauffeur, and then hied with Gregory to the other end of the sixty-four acres to map out his light scenes. But Mr. Thanhouser reached the island in Jim Wallace's car. He was held up, and when the soldiers found him insistent upon staying they told him Harvey had gone to the studio to confer with him. Mr. Thanhouser phoned back to send Harvey back to the island. Messengers carried the news to Harvey, and he decided to "have it out with the chief." They met! Mr. Thanhouser, cool, deliberate, commanded, because he had given his word to the authorities, that no more firing be done. Harvey said he'd fire that night, that the authorities could arrest and fine him, and Mr. Thanhouser could "fire" him Monday morning, if he wanted to, but that he was going to get that picture.

They compromised! Mr. Thanhouser got an extension until 11 o'clock, upon Harvey's promise that he'd fire no more after that hour, and he kept his word—he quit at 10:57!

Facing this page are scenes taken in the dead of night. They are dead things compared with the moving picture films, and give only a faint idea of Harvey's wonderful visualization of the Thanhouser story. The writer stood behind Gregory's camera as they were taken and felt himself in another world. Silhouetted against the starless sky were lace-like trees that seemed to breathe of fairyland; shadows of soldiers, flitting here and there, led one with imagination to the belief that armies of thousands were stacked behind smoke curtains, and the bursting aerial bombs seemed to carry the immortalized strains of "The Star Spangled Banner" back to the onlooker. Gatlings and small-arm fire belched forth from the embrasures of the castle and it was for all the world like grim war.

Through it all Director Harvey shouted his orders through a megaphone, and where the voice wouldn't carry he used a lantern to transmit his signals. He had military aides on his staff and to these he told the effects he wanted to get. And he got them. He piled riders and horses off bridges in headlong dashing dives into the waters of the Sound. He had night cavalry and artillery charges that thrilled even the blase moving picture producer, and he demonstrated to his critics, even, that he is in a class by himself.

John Harvey has bigger and better achievements in store for the moving picture industry, and with Gregory behind the camera seems destined to open up new channels in an art that is always looking for something new. Harvey was born at Cleveland, Ohio, in 1881, and was educated in the public schools in the Buckeye city. His experience in the amusement field covers practically every branch, and for ten years he was a baritone lead in light comic opera. He was the owner and trainer of the wonderful collie dog "Shep," which had the distinction of being the world's greatest canine actor, and has been with the Thanhouser company as director about a year. Before joining the New Rochelle organization he was with Vitagraph, and is a popular member of the Screen Club.

LUBIN PLAYERS TO GIVE SHOW.

Elaborate preparations are being made by the Lubin photoplayers for the production of George M. Cohan's musical comedy, "50 Miles From Broadway," in the South Broad Street theater, Philadelphia, June 2, for the benefit of the Lubin Employes' Annual Beneficial Association. The entire Lubin studio—"stars, stock and extras"—will appear in the comedy and the occasion, because of this, promises to be one of the most unusual given in Philadelphia in some time. In each act there will be a complete change of cast and in addition a large number of special stunts will take place during and between the three acts. Percy Winter is directing the production. The principal roles will be played by the following well known stars:

"Sadie Woodis"—Lillie Leslie, Ethel Clayton, Rosetta Brice.

"Joe Wescott"—George Soule Spencer, Crane Wilbur, Jack Standing.

"Dave Harrigan"—Edgar Jones, Ferdinand Tidmarsh, Howard Mitchell.

"Jed Woodis"—Kempton Greene, Joseph Kaufman, William W. Cohill.

"Tim Harrigan"—Peter Lang, Walter Law, Joseph Smiley.

"Nellie Harrigan"—Mary Charleson, Louise Huff.

Others in the cast include Marie Sterling, John Smiley, William Turner, Alan Quinn, Florence Hackett, Clarence Elmer, Arthur Matthews, Frankie Mann, James L. Daly, Clara Lambert, Bernard Siegel, Douglas Sibole, Charles Brandt, Eleanor Blanchard, James J. Cassady and Gilbert Ely.

JACK NOBLE IN TOWN.

Jack Noble, who has been out on the coast putting on the big Rolfe productions of "The High Road" and "Fighting Bob," is now in town and will begin work immediately at the Hunter Studios, on a screen version of Sir Gilbert Parker's novel, "The Right of Way," in which William Faversham will be featured.

Rhea Mitchell

RHEA MITCHELL, co-star with Robert Edeson and William S. Hart in "On the Night Stage," and a featured player in a number of other Mutual Masterpieces, is a native of Portland Ore., who started in the theatrical business as soon as she finished school, playing small roles with the Baker Theater Stock Company, and filled stock engagements in every city on the Pacific Coast excepting Los Angeles. For one whole season she played the Orpheum Circuit with Sydney Ayres in a dramatic sketch.

Rhea Mitchell.

Later she became ingenue lead with the famous Alcazar Stock Company in San Francisco, and it was from this position that she graduated from the speaking stage into the ranks of the motion picture interpreters. It was under the auspices of Thomas H. Ince and the New York Motion Picture Corporation that she made her picture debut, and she has continued with them ever since, appearing successfully in Broncho, Domino and Kay Bee films.

She is known in the studios as the "stunt" girl. Such trifles as jumping off cliffs and high buildings, being rescued from a burning ship, lost and found in a swamp and pulled out of quick sand, are nothing to her. Several times she has depicted the struggles of a drowning girl with startling verisimilitude.

Stella Archer

MISS STELLA ARCHER, for the past five years, has been the leading woman with Robert Hilliard, is having her first picture experience with Albert Capellani, the famous French director, whose premier production in America is the Wm. A. Brady-World Film photoplay, "The Face in the Moonlight," in which Robert Warwick is starred.

Stella Archer.

Miss Archer has been on the stage practically her entire life. At an early age she made her debut with the late Richard Mansfield, doing extra work, which soon attracted the attention of Mr. Mansfield. Before she left him, she had portrayed important parts in his repertoire. She has a substantial following in the West, through her work with the Liberty stock company in Oakland, Cal. For five years she was the main support of Robert Hilliard, having played the difficult part, the wife, in "A Fool There Was," a performance which stamped Miss Archer as a remarkable actress. Her recent work in "The Argyle Case" is also well and favorably known.

Mr. Capellani was looking for an actress to portray the role of Lucile in "The Face in the Moonlight," an exceptionally strong dramatic one which must be played by an actress who could look only eighteen years old. For "The Face in the Moonlight" a tall actress was required, as Robert Warwick, H. Cooper Cliff, Montague Love and several other men in the cast are considerably over six feet tall. Later Mr. Capellani met Miss Archer and engaged her.

Thrills Under Difficulties

When Edison Director Finds That He Cannot Drop an Automobile into a Creek, He Turns to a Strawberry Patch.

DIRECTOR EUGENE NOWLAND, of the Edison Company, has little use for the New York Department of Bridges. He is strongly in favor of a few changes in administration and the installation of executives more thoroughly alive to the needs of photoplay art. He would like to do away with much superfluous red tape and find other employment for a number of men who seem to enjoy playing the roles of "day spoilers." They did their best on a recent morning set aside by Director Nowland for the making of a startling scene at a section of Eastchester creek that once was spanned by a bridge. Now only the remnants of a bridge remain; but it is still bridge property, protected by yards and yards of red tape—and a wooden gate.

The Edison director understood that he could use this precious bit of land and as much of the sluggish water in Eastchester creek as was needed for the making of a thrilling incident in a picture to be called "McQuade of the Traffic Squad," acted by Pat O'Malley, Bessie Learn, William Fables, James Harris, Captain Dennis Ward, a sure-enough ex-police captain, and others. Nothing was wanting, save the assent of the Department of Bridges. O'Malley, Harris and Fables were ready to enter a Ford car, which was to be run off the twelve-foot buttress and into the creek while six cameras recorded the happening. It was figured that the car would somersault into the shallow water, throwing the occupants into the deeper water beyond where life savers would pick them up. In case someone landed awkwardly, a doctor was there with his little black bag.

Frank Bannon, of the Edison Company, took a party of trade paper representatives to Eastchester creek that morning, and when the hitch came, when the keeper of the bridge became the guardian of the closed gate, Mr. Bannon entertained his guests at luncheon while Director Nowland rearranged his program. "McQuade of the Traffic Squad" must not be robbed of its thrills.

Close to the creek and on the slope of a hill is somebody's strawberry patch. Between it and the roadway is a steep embankment, sprinkled with ugly looking rocks likely to overturn a car moving at high speed. Not having access to the creek, Director Nowland had turned to the equally dangerous strawberry patch, and O'Malley, Fables and Harris raised no objections to the new plan. One camera was placed on a stand in the center of the field and advantageous points had been selected for five others.

The machine with its three struggling occupants—a police officer and two crooks, in the story—was drawn down the road by another automobile and cut loose when within a few feet of the light boards on the edge of the field. The fence was ripped apart and the car ricochetted over the stones, down the embankment and into the strawberry patch, but, strangely enough, it did not capsize. The three men jumped and went on with the action of the scene that should make realistic melodrama, even if the life savers and the doctor had nothing to do.

LUNA COMPANY CHANGES QUARTERS.

G. P. Hamilton, director of the Luna Company, writes from Los Angeles that the company has moved from their old studio to the beautiful Norbig studios at Los Angeles, which they have leased for six months, with the anticipation of having the advantage of wonderful outdoor scenery and light for the making of comedies for the United program. At the end of the lease the company expects to go to new studios of their own, some place in the vicinity, and with an enlarged company to support Dot Farley, who is playing all the leads for the comedies, expect to increase their output.

OTIS HARLAN WITH SELIG?

It is rumored that Otis Harlan, the world-famous light comedian, will sign a contract with the Selig Polyscope Company to appear in Selig comedies under the new Red Seal brand. Otis Harlan is known as one of the wealthiest of stage stars. His home is in New York. He achieved an enviable reputation throughout this country as a star in the late Charles Hoyt's comedies. He also supported Elsie Janis in "The Vanderbilt Cup" and has appeared in many other productions of high class. It is said that Harlan will soon arrive in Chicago to begin work in the Selig Chicago studios.

Teddy Sampson.

ONE of the many petite Reliance-Majestic leading ladies, by name, Teddy Sampson, was born in New York City twenty years ago, on the eighth day of August. When she reached the age of fifteen, Miss Simpson made her theatrical debut in a Gus Edwards vaudeville act, the name of which was "School Days," at the Circle theater. For one season she remained with "School Days," and then joined a musical comedy company. With Blanche Ring in "The Wall Street Girl" was her next engagement, and she remained with Miss Ring for about seven months. Miss Sampson then rejoined Gus Edwards in his "Chorus Girl Review," and they toured on the Orpheum circuit for eight months.

Teddy Sampson.

While Miss Sampson was appearing at the Palace Theater in New York, she was introduced to Mr. Griffith. She was then engaged by Mr. Griffith to become a member of his Reliance and Majestic studio. Later, when Mr. Griffith brought his company to Los Angeles, Miss Sampson was a member of the party. For the past two years she has been playing in Reliance and Majestic photoplays and is considered to be very clever. Since being in California she has been married to Ford Sterling, the well-known Keystone comedian.

Some of the late pictures in which she has appeared are: "The Outlaw's Revenge," "The Fencing Master," "Sympathy Sal," "For the Honor of Bettina," "The House of Bentley," "The Slave Girl," and at the present she is portraying the part of the Japanese girl in the Mutual Master Picture, "The Fox Woman," from the novel by John Luther Long, author of "Madam Butterfly."

Miss Sampson is a very charming young woman, and is the possessor of a pretty, attractive singing voice. She has many other accomplishments—chief among them being fencing. As a picture player, she ranks among the favorites, and is a great favorite among studio folks. A great future awaits her in motion pictures.

RITCHIE-WELSH FIGHT FILMS LOSE.

Lovers of the manly art must forego the pleasure of viewing motion picture films reproducing the Ritchie-Welsh fight for the championship of the world which was fought at London several months ago, Judge Hough of the United States District Court has decided.

Although it may seem ridiculous to place the ban on fight films in view of the fact that limited round prize fights or boxing exhibitions are permitted in many of the states of Union, Judge Hough held that under the statutes at present it is illegal to transport films into this country or from state to state and ordered the condemnation of over 2,000 feet of the films of the mill which were seized by the collector of the port when George Considine attempted to bring the pictures into this country.

Judge Hough held the contention of the promoter that the mill was merely a boxing exhibition and hence the reproduction of the films of the mill is permissible is unsound in view of the undisputed fact that the battle was fought for the championship which changed hands as the result of the mill.

"The term 'prize fight' in its present day conception is of very recent origin," Judge Hough declared in reviewing the derivation of the term and the changes in the meaning of the phrase. "Less than two hundred years ago most persons would have understood the term to mean persons who fought with the sword for a prize or wager," said the judge, who referred to its application to fencers and later to pugilists.

Daix Censor Bill a Law

Governor Brumbaugh of Pennsylvania Signs Measure Modifying Censorship in That State.

GOVERNOR BRUMBAUGH of Pennsylvania signed the Daix bill Monday, May 17. This measure is a substitute for the present moving picture law and causes a reorganization of the entire censorship department and its present form of activities. By the terms of the new law, a board of three moving picture censors is established, an increase of one member over the board as it now stands. The chairman of the board is to receive a compensation of $3,000, the vice chairman $2,500, and the secretary $2,400 per year. According to the terms of the new law one of the members of the Board of Censorship must be a woman. A fee of $1 is required for the censoring of all pictures, originals and duplicates, and all money thus acquired is to be turned into the state treasury.

The passing of the bill, and it may be said, the bill itself, is the result of an effort on the part of the moving picture operators of the state to have the law of 1911 repealed. The new law requires an annual report to the Governor, instead of to the Secretary of Internal Affairs, and also provides for the appointment of two clerks and two stenographers, a chief inspector, six inspectors, four operators, an assistant operator, a film patcher and two messengers.

Projection rooms and offices are to be maintained at the state's expense in Philadelphia, but the board may have other offices where needed.

Rose Coghlan

ONE of the most remarkable women on the American stage today is Rose Coghlan, who will shortly be seen in Lubin's six-part Liberty Bell feature, "The Sporting Duchess." Miss Coghlan played Lady Teazle in "The School for Scandal," the first attraction presented at Wallack's Theater in New York City. That was thirty years ago, and marked the opening of what was then America's most fashionable playhouse. Recently this famous theater closed its doors forever, and Miss Coghlan had the honor of being the last star to appear on the stage in the performance that closed its history.

Rose Coghlan.

She will celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of her stage debut next October, and from her appearance it is hard to believe that for half a century she has been constantly before the public.

Speaking of her picture play experience, in the production of "The Sporting Duchess," she said: "Everybody at the Lubin Studio was perfectly lovely to me, and while the work is all so different to that on the stage, I enjoyed every minute of it. I think I surprised them just a little bit, especially when the scenes were made in which the hunt takes place. Mr. O'Neill, who directed the picture, came to me and inquired if I would 'just sit' on a horse and be photographed. When I told him I intended to ride, he seemed worried about my personal welfare. I will confess that I half regretted this declaration, for I had not been on a horse's back for twenty-five years. However, I had made the bluff and I intended to make good. The horses were brought around at nine o'clock in the morning, and until five that evening I was almost continuously in the saddle. At six o'clock I was in my bed and I stayed there until studio time the next morning, when the worst was to come, for the ballroom scene was then put on, and I had to dance. Such is the life of a motion picture artist.

"It is strenuous work, but as glorious as it is hard, and I am hoping that when the public sees the screen version of 'The Sporting Duchess' they will like my work as well as they did in its stage presentation. I feel confident they will, for so much more was possible with all of nature for stage settings; and Miss Ethel Clayton as Muriel is charming."

Change in Edison Program

Releases Its Five-Reel Feature, "The House of the Lost Court," on Paramount Program.

WHAT is taken to be a marked change and a departure in the policy of the Edison Company, is the almost simultaneous announcement of the releasing on the Paramount program of a five-reel feature, "The House of the Lost Court," which Edison has had in preparation for two months, and a change of their weekly program so that, in point of number, there will be less releases.

"The House of the Lost Court" is from the book by the noted English writer, Mrs. C. N. Williamson, who has thrilled her readers with stories of weird adventure and mystery plot, and features Viola Dana. The film is now being shown at the Broadway theater, New York. Miss Dana, not so long ago, when playing leads in Broadway productions, was hailed all over the country as "Broadway's Youngest Star," she then being not much more than a child. It was Miss Dana's remarkable work in the three-reel feature, "The Stoning," that brought forth such encomiums from all sides, and caused a prominent member of the National Board of Censorship to rather break precedent and give to the press an unusual letter of commendation, believing that the lesson conveyed so dramatically well worth the departure. In the cast of "The House of the Lost Court" are included practically all who were in "The Stoning" and it includes many of Edison's most talented players, besides Miss Dana, Gertrude McCoy, Sally Crute, Helen Strickland, Robert Conness and Duncan McRae. This departure appears to be an Edison entry into the long feature field, released on other programs than its own. Heretofore the few long features that company has produced have been released through the special feature department of the General Film Company.

Viola Dana.

The new program will eliminate the Tuesday one-reelers and the alternate Monday three-reel features, all three-reel features hereafter being released Fridays. On Friday, June 11, however, there will be released on the regular program Lee Arthur's famous stage comedy drama as a four-part feature, this being found necessary because of its containing so much good material. From time to time, when the story warrants it, the Friday three-reeler will likely give place to a four-reel feature. This will mean but three releases a week, one reel on Wednesday, a feature on Friday and a one-reel on Saturdays.

This will, Mr. Plimpton believes, give the production end more time to consider and perfect each picture so that each film may have all the care and attention of a feature picture.

THRILLS IN LADY MACKENZIE'S PICTURES.

The Lady Mackenzie Film Company, which has just been organized to handle the motion pictures taken by Lady Mackenzie during a hunting trip in Africa, has opened offices in the Candler Building, 220 West 42d street, New York, and is preparing to offer the pictures to exhibitors. Arrangements have been made to give an exhibition in a prominent New York theater where an evening's entertainment will be given with these pictures forming the entire program. In point of interest the pictures taken by Lady Mackenzie are said to excell all others taken in Africa. Many thrilling incidents are accurately portrayed in these pictures. The story accompanying the pictures will be told by one of the hunters who accompanied the expedition.

Chaplin Not Coming to New York

Essanay Company Decides to Keep Him in Los Angeles—But He Gets Twenty-five Thousand Dollars Just the Same.

CHANGE will have to be made in the announcement that Charles Chaplin is to come to New York to appear at the new picture show at Madison Square Garden, New York, for two weeks for the trifling sum of $25,000 for the engagement. Word comes from the coast that the deal is off, but that Chaplin will get the twenty-five thou' just the same. The money was passed to him on May 14 in the form of a check drawn by Gilbert M. Anderson on the Fort Dearborn National Bank of Chicago. George K. Spoor and Mr. Anderson were both in Los Angeles to put the deal through.

Two weeks ago Mr. Spoor, in Chicago, was called on the phone from New York by I. Presburg, Manager of the Arena Amusement Company. Mr. Presburg was very anxious to secure Mr. Chaplin's appearance at the opening of the Garden. Mr. Spoor said it was impossible, but that he was starting for New York and could be seen there. In New York Mr. Spoor said the engagement was out of the question; that six figures would have no more influence than five. The releases had to be maintained and the head of the Essanay Company declined to listen to the suggestion that Chaplin could be working on pictures enroute and in New York City.

Mr. Spoor returned to Chicago at the end of the week. Back in the Lake City on Monday, May 10, Mr. Spoor had a hunch the wires between New York and Los Angeles were too busy, so he just boarded the midnight train and on May 13 met Mr. Anderson in Oakland. The report was then that Chaplin had decided his contract with Essanay would permit him to make the trip and return to the company. It was understood the comedian was to travel across country in a special train, with observation platform appearances and a circus parade on arrival in New York.

Mr. Spoor and Mr. Anderson were in Los Angeles on May 14 and on the same day there was deposited to Chaplin's account the bouquet of twenty-five thousand dollars and there was executed a supplementary contract to the mutual satisfaction of the parties concerned. The transaction is probably without precedent in amusement history.

On Sunday Mr. Spoor returned to Chicago and Mr. Anderson to Niles. While in town the Essanay manager was entertained by Wm. N. Selig at his big Zoo which now is practically completed.

Rare Antiques in Studio

Samuel Jacobi Provides Costly Setting for Joseph A. Golden's Production of "The Price."

WHEN Joseph A. Golden, president of the Crystal Company, planned his production of George Broadhurst's play, "The Price," in which Helen Ware is being starred, he determined upon elaborate interior settings comprising genuine antiques, instead of imitations such as usually are made to serve the purpose. He went to Samuel Jacobi, gave a general outline of what was wanted and told him to go ahead with the furnishing of a drawing room and a studio, quite as though he were equipping the Fifth avenue home of a millionaire.

A Jacobi Stage Setting.

Mr. Jacobi took Mr. Golden at his word and last week the Crystal studio contained rare antiques, the total value of which was many thousands of dollars. Great care was exercised in designing the rooms under the personal supervision of Mr. Jacobi, who made a point of having everything in perfectly good taste that the interiors might harmonize and not become a mere jumble of costly objects. Many directors from other studios visited the Crystal plant just to see the sets for two of the big scenes in "The Price."

The drawing room, used for a reception, has chairs and lounges of the Louis XVI. period, the value of one old chair being placed at $150. In the extreme rear of the room is a mantlepiece of the same period, handsome tapestries cover the walls and equally striking are the curtains and rugs used in this scene. Rare bronzes and pieces of bric-a-brac that could not be duplicated at any price are used in the decoration of a room containing enough valuable material to stock an antique shop. The studio of a wealthy artist was furnished in the same lavish manner with the finest of tapestries, paintings, and pieces of sculpture by old masters. If the dramatic quality of "The Price" equals the art displayed in preparing the settings, it will be a notable production, indeed.

O. W. Biarmer

WHILE columns have been written extolling the capabilities of producers, directors, players, cameramen, and incumbents of other important positions in the scheme of motion picture producing, there is one individual of whom very little mention has been made at any time, despite of the fact that his work, when backed by a thorough understanding of its requirements, is of greater importance by far than is generally realized. That individual is the studio manager.

O. W. Biarmer.

Of those following this vocation one of the best known is O. W. Biarmer, who is in charge of the studio of the Centaur Film Company in Bayonne, N. J.

Since his advent into the motion picture business some years ago Mr. Biarmer has been associated with David Horsley, the founder of the Centaur Company. His first effort was as one of the sales force for the Lumiere raw stock film, for which Mr. Horsley was the American agent. Here his work was so effective that in a short time he was made general sales manager. In this capacity he traveled the entire United States and Canada, visiting every motion picture manufacturing plant of importance.

Being of an observant nature, he made note of the different systems of management (particularly in the studio), then in vogue, cataloguing this information for future reference. Sooner than expected he was called upon to use the knowledge thus acquired, for with the outbreak of the war, the Lumiere supply was cut off and the American offices consequently discontinued.

In the meantime Mr. Horsley had erected the Centaur plant and studios in Bayonne. These studios he decided, in time, to operate as a commercial proposition, renting them to outside producing companies. In appreciation of past efforts Mr. Biarmer was placed in charge by Mr. Horsley.

Not content with following the routine generally accepted by studio managers, Mr. Biarmer set to work making improvements wherever possible. Here his intimate knowledge of studio requirements in the way of photographic qualities of the different makes of electrical equipment and devices, of building props, scenery, and other necessities, came him in good stead, with the result that the Centaur plant offered outside producers unusual facilities for picture making.

Ordinarily, the work of a studio manager may be considered a matter of mere routine; but when handled by one possessing a vast knowledge of the craft, backed by untiring efforts, as in the case of Mr. Biarmer, it becomes an important item in picture making.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

CONVENTION PROSPECTS.

President Pearce on the Importance of the National Convention at San Francisco in July.

A MEMBER of the World's staff visited Marion S. Pearce, the national president of the Exhibitors' League in Baltimore, last Friday, and found him enthusiastic on the subject of the coming national convention.

"There are a large number of exhibitors," said Mr. Pearce, seated in the elegant offices of his new Hippodrome at Baltimore, "especially in the West and on the Pacific Coast, who have never had an opportunity to attend a national convention before. The place of convention being now brought nearer to them than ever before there is no doubt that they will make every effort to be present. The enthusiasm encountered everywhere convinces me that the convention will easily be the most successful ever held. I must say that I am more than pleased at the amount of interest taken in the convention along the Atlantic seaboard. The exhibitors of the East realize that attendance at the national convention will enable them to see the great California Exposition and to make the marvelous journey across the continent. The program of the convention has been arranged in such a way as to give the exhibitors every opportunity to enjoy the wonders of the Exposition. All the business sessions will be in the morning. Special coaches will leave the various sections of the country and all these specials will converge at Chicago. From Chicago there will be a grand exhibitors' special to the coast. The great producing interests located in Los Angeles and other parts of the Coast will make a special effort to entertain the members of the convention.

"It will be a great time for getting acquainted. The biggest people in the industry will be present and all will be glad to meet the exhibitor.

"Depend on it we will not neglect business. There will be no petty politics, but the real business problems of the exhibitor will be taken up and discussed in an intelligent and profitable manner. This great national organization must be put on a self-sustaining basis and the convention will have to deal with the arrangements necessary for that purpose. We will have, I trust, a central office in the City of New York, which is the great centre of the motion picture interests of this country. We will have a national secretary in connection with this central office. He will be able to get valuable information at first hand and communicate it to the various state branches. Prospects for a stronger organization were never brighter than now. Exhibitors everywhere realize the need of a strong national body. The length of time exhibitors want to stay at the convention city will entirely depend upon themselves. There will be no special train schedules for the return trips."

Mr. Pearce, it must be added, has freely given of his valuable time and his cheerful energy to strengthen the national body. He has done so at the expense of his own private interests.

LEAGUE BRANCH FORMED IN THE BRONX.

A mass meeting of Bronx exhibitors was held Thursday, May 13 at the Art theater, 1077 Southern Boulevard, New York City, under the auspices of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, New York Local No. 1. The purpose of this meeting was the reorganizing of the Bronx exhibitors. Lee A. Ochs, the president of New York Local No. 1, presided. He made a short address in which he outlined the benefits of the organization and the necessity of the exhibitors getting together for their mutual protection. Brief addresses were also made by Mr. Harris, the former attorney for the Cinema Club, and Herman Hoffman, an attorney of Manhattan.

Next followed an election of officers for the Bronx branch of New York Local No. 1. D. B. Picker, of the Burland theater, was unanimously elected president. Chas. Goldreyer, of the University theater, was unanimously elected vice-president. A. B. Samelson, of the Art theater was unanimously elected secretary. Thomas Howard, of the Claremont theater, was unanimously elected treasurer.

The new officers promised to do their utmost to enroll new members and strengthen the organization.

DON'T MISS READING MEETING.

Big Time Has Been Planned and Important Business Will Be Transacted.

MOTION picture exhibitors who fail to attend the convention and exhibit of the Pennsylvania State League, to be held in Reading, June 7, 8 and 9, will miss one of the greatest treats in their lives. Not only are the Reading exhibitors interested, but the Chamber of Commerce, city officials and the most prominent business concerns have volunteered their services. The city will take on the appearance of a holiday. Every picture fan will be asked to display the American flag at his residence. This, in addition to the bunting and other decorations to be used in the business sections, will add to the attractiveness of the exposition.

The entertainment of visiting exhibitors and their friends will occupy a prominent place during the sessions. While the picture men are in session the Ladies' Reception Committee, appointed by Manager Ben H. Zerr, will have charge of the visiting women and friends. Mrs. J. G. Hansen has been chosen chairlady. Other members of the committee include Mrs. Ben H. Zerr, Mrs. Harry J. Schad, Mrs. C. L. Carr, Mrs. Frank D. Hill, Mrs. Frank A. Gould, Miss Deppen, Misses Elsie, Dorothy and Bertha Hansen.

The automobile parade Tuesday afternoon, headed by the Ringgold Band, Monroe A. Althouse, director, will be shown in motion pictures through the courtesy of the Lubin Manufacturing Co., of Philadelphia. Arrangements for these pictures as well as other scenes, will be in charge of J. Allen Boone, the genial publicity representative for Mr. Lubin.

Recently Mr. Hansen, secretary of the Reading Exhibitors, received an interesting communication from the United Film Service, Inc., stating that Edwin August, supported by the following: Ruth Blair, Iva Shepherd and Bill Bailey, would produce a two-reel photodrama in Reading during the convention. This will undoubtedly prove a unique feature. Miss Ethel Grandin, together with Messrs. Arthur and Ray Smallwood, will also attend.

A number of the screen artists from the Metro, World Film and Fox companies have been assured. Through the efforts of the Inter-State Film Co., Philadelphia, the following Universal stars have been promised: Harry C. Myers, Rosemary Theby, Ben Wilson, Dorothy Phillips and Mary Fuller.

The Lubin Company will send a large delegation in a special train with a representation of more than 75.

The Reading exhibitors have arranged for a ball on Tuesday night, June 8, at the Auditorium. This will prove the greatest affair of its kind ever held in the East. Never has such an array of leading players been promised for any function outside of New York City. Following the ball the players will be entertained at a banquet at the Mansion House. This function will be exclusively for the screen artists. The banquet for the exhibitors and their families will take place the following night at the Berkshire.

This convention will prove a benefit to the exhibitors from many viewpoints. Matters which vitally effect every exhibitor will be taken up. An exhibit seldom equalled has been arranged. A very few booths remain, and the entertainment will be one of the greatest surprises ever given motion picture exhibitors.

WHERE IS WILLIAM MARLOW?

This is to advise William Marlow that his mother, who resides at 678½ East Clair street, Indianapolis, Ind., is sick and would like to hear from him.

CHICAGO LETTER

BY JAS. S. McQUADE

"The Birth of a Nation" Barred in Chicago.

THE fiat has gone forth from the office of Chicago's recently elected mayor, Wm. Hale Thompson, that "The Birth of a Nation" will not be permitted exhibition in this city. The scenes showing the assassination of President Lincoln and the events in the reconstruction period following the Civil War are mainly responsible for the mayor's action.

"I will not permit any theatrical man, or picture show company to operate or show a film in any theatre in Chicago which reflects on any race or nationality," said the Mayor on Saturday, May 15, after hearing arguments for and against the issuing of a permit and after viewing the picture himself. "I will not grant my permission for the exhibition of a picture just to give a theatrical man a chance to charge $2 a seat. Complaint was made to me that this particular photoplay was the cause of race riots in the east. We want nothing of that in Chicago."

On the other hand, the manufacturer of the film of this subject sought to establish the justness of his claims for exhibition in the following announcement:

"To the American people the outcome of four years of fratricidal strife, the nightmare of reconstruction, and the establishment of the south in its rightful position is the birth of a new nation. Lincoln's plan of restricting negroes to Africa was dreamed of only—never carried out. The new nation, the real United States, as the years glided by, turned away forever from the blood lust of war and anticipated with hope the world-millennium in which a brotherhood of love should bind all the nations together."

The Chicago Herald supported the mayor's action editorially, as follows.

Mayor Thompson has barred from Chicago the notorious photoplay based on the romances of racial hatred by the Rev. Thomas Dixon. Mayor Thompson is right. It should be barred.

In vain do the promoters protest that in their spectacle there is "a note of optimism, brotherly love and readjustment of racial conditions intended to soothe and brighten."

A famous French author dedicated to "My sons, when they reach the age of 20," a graphic account of the disasters that follow on yielding to enticements to enter into illicit sexual relations.

The book may, perhaps, be usefully read by many young men. Yet when presented in dramatic form it became merely the picture of a brothel and its inmates, affronting all clean-minded spectators and gratifying only the morbid emotions it sitmulated.

However excellent the intentions, everything depends on the way they are carried out. The public derives no benefit from "popular" presentation of the scenes of the clinic and the confessional. This particular presentation, both in its ordinary and its film dramatization, has a riot-provoking record. Let it stay barred, so far as Chicago can bar it.

"The Birth of a Nation" was underlined in the Illinois theater program to open in that house May 1. Charles Fitzmorris, secretary to the preceding Mayor, Carter H. Harrison, inspected and passed the films some time before the primary election, in which Mayor Harrison was defeated.

Chicago Women's Clubs Against State Censorship.

The bills recently introduced at Springfield for a state censorship law in Illinois will be fought tooth and nail by members of various leagues and federations of women's clubs, of Chicago. A representative meeting of these members was held in the Chicago Woman's Club Saturday, May 15, and every one present pronounced herself strongly for "home rule," and for the censoring of moving pictures exhibited in Chicago by Chicago herself.

"Bills Nos. 382, 393 and 422 are now pending before the Assembly for the creation of a state board of censorship," said Mrs. Herman Landauer. "The bills are a blow at home rule. If passed, three censors will be appointed by Governor Dunne. They will each draw a salary of $2,500 a year. These state censors could not express the highest needs of a local city. Each city is capable of that task only."

Christian Endeavor organizations of the state are also strongly in favor of retaining the Chicago board of censors, and a state wide campaign was launched Monday, May 17, to bring pressure to bear upon the legislature to kill the bills now being considered. The Rev. E. L. Reiner, pastor of the Waveland Avenue Congregational Church, and chairman of the finance committee of the Illinois Christian Endeavor Union, made the foregoing announcement Sunday evening, May 16.

"Moving picture manufacturers don't like the moral standard set by the Chicago board of censorship by which immoral scenes, scenes of crime and other objectionable matter are cut out of films," said Mr. Reiner. "They tried last summer to abolish the present board by action of the city council, but failed because church and civic organizations fought the crafty manufacturers.

"The Chicago board has the reputation of being among the best censors in the country. Cities and towns throughout the Middle West require exhibitors to show their Chicago permits before they can show certain films. Oak Park and Naperville have passed ordinances making this requirement.

"Naturally, the manufacturers want to break down this system and establish their own board of censorship.

"We cannot allow them to succeed. We will call upon our organization throughout the state to fight the manufacturers' plans. The Chicago standard must not be lowered.

"We will urge instead that the standard shall be raised and that all drinking and gambling scenes be eliminated as well as criminal scenes."

Mr. Reiner asked his congregation to write letters to representatives.

Efforts will also be made to interest the Chicago city council to take action to oppose the proposed legislation.

Moving Picture Industry Ranks Fifth in United States.

The federal census report covering the moving picture industry for the year 1914, up to December 1, shows that the manufacturing of film subjects forms the fifth largest industry in the United States.

During the eleven months $20,000,000 was spent in the making of 10,000 reels, each averaging 1,000 feet of moving picture negatives. From each reel of negative an average of thirty-five positives was made at a total cost of $17,000,000, which made the total sum expended $37,000,000.

The report shows that it cost on an average between $10,000 and $15,000 to produce the regulation five-reel feature; also that about 10,000,000 people in this country patronize the picture theatres daily. Of this aggregate Greater New York can claim 900,000 daily, and Chicago 385,000.

Chicago Film Brevities.

It was with great regret that I learned of the serious accident to my friend, Tom Mix, out in Los Angeles. I am glad to learn from the Chicago office of the Selig Polyscope Co. that Mr. Mix's injuries were not so grave as at first reported. It has been found that a bone in his forearm was broken and that his chest and head were considerably bruised. The wonder is that America's greatest star horseback rider, roper and picturesque actor in Western plays has escaped so easily, after such a terrible mix-up. Tom has my sincere best wishes for his speedy recovery.

A number of sets of Selig's big feature, "The Carpet from Bagdad," shipped to England, France and other foreign countries, were lost when the Lusitania was torpedoed. The films had been ordered by foreign governments for the entertainment of their troops when given relaxation from hard fighting in the trenches.

Miss Ruth Stonehouse left Chicago Monday, May 17, for Chattanooga to join the Essanay forces there. In addition to other parts assigned her there, she will play the lead in "The Man Trail," adapted from the story by Henry Oyen, which will be a five-reel subject.

E. B. Rice, owner of the Seeley theater, 2042 Roscoe Boulevard, called at the office one day last week to renew his subscription. The Seeley seats 300 persons and charges an admission of five cents for a Licensed program of three and a half and four reels of pictures. When special features, such as World Film Corporation, Famous Players, etc., are shown, an admission of ten cents is charged. Mr. Rice stated that he ran "The Christian" and "The Spoilers" to capacity houses at fifteen cents. He reported very good business.

The American theater, one of Jones, Linick & Schaefer's big houses on the West Side, began a season of moving picture entertainment on Monday, May 17. The program will be changed daily, and the presentations will begin at 6:30 evenings, with a matinee on Saturdays at 3:00 p. m., and continued presentations on Sundays from 1:00 p. m. to 11:00 p. m. The admission will be ten cents for adults and five cents for children.

Watterson R. Rothacker, general manager of the Industrial Moving Picture Co., this city, gave an address on "The Advertising and Educational Possibilities of Moving Pictures," before the real estate board of Cook County, Tuesday afternoon, May 18, at the Hotel Sherman. Mrs. Watterson R. Rothacker recovered sufficiently from her recent serious illness to take the journey by rail for Venice, near

Los Angeles, on May 9. She will occupy the pretty little bungalow secured by her husband in that beautiful spot until he joins her in June. Frisco, Portland, Mount Rainier, Seattle and Vancouver will then be visited in turn on their way back home, via the Canadian Pacific Railway.

John Ahonmos, former owner of the Clifford theater, 1537 West Twelfth street, was arrested recently charged with failure to pay the war tax on that house. The arrest of Ahonmos is said to be the first for this cause made in Chicago.

Edgar O. Brooks, Western manager of the Cosmofotofilm Co., made a hasty call Monday, May 7, on his return from a trip of four weeks through the Middle West, during which he visited Detroit, Cleveland, Columbus, Indianapolis, St. Louis and Kansas City. He expressed himself as being much pleased by the fine business done throughout the territory by his company.

On Sunday afternoon, May 16, a company of Essanay players left for Dowagiac and other Michigan towns, in which Charles Hoyt's comedy, "A Bunch of Keys," will be produced. Essanay has engaged three new stars to take the leading roles; namely, June Keith, who will take the part of Miss Teddy Keys; William Buress, the part of Grimes, and Johnny Slavin, the role of Snaggs. As the scenes of the comedy are laid in small towns and it is Essanay's policy to secure the proper realism in these rural settings, Cassopolis, Pogagon and Eau Claire will be visited in addition to Dowagiac.

Douglas H. Bergh, George Kleine's personal traveling representative, was in the city a few days last week, after an absence of several months on the Pacific Coast. He reported very satisfactory business for the George Kleine product in every place visited. He told me a rather interesting story which goes to prove that the Moving Picture World can be found in even the smallest hamlet where a moving picture theater exists. Tom North, who has now severed his connection with George Kleine's forces to become manager in Portland for the V. L. S. E., Inc., not long ago visited the hamlet known as Sterling City in the Sierra Madre range. The snow was nine feet deep at the time, and almost the first man Mr. North met was Gilbert Horton, proprietor of the Horton Playhouse, a small structure devoted to the showing of moving pictures. "I know I have just what you want, after your trip," said Mr. Horton. "I know you want all the latest news about the trade, and here it is," he said, bringing out the latest copy of the World. Seeing that the little burgh depends for its existence on the lumber mill of the Diamond Match Co., and has only a population of 225 people, it will be evident to the reader that this publication is the only pioneer in its line in the country.

George K. Spoor, president of the Essanay Co., has issued invitations to Chicago exhibitors, public officials and representatives of the press to attend a private exhibition of "The Slim Princess," that will be given in the Palace Music Hall, the big vaudeville playhouse in the City Hall Square Building, on Clark street, Thursday, May 20, at 10:30 a. m.

Arthur Bard, general manager of the Associated Film Manufacturers, of New York City and Los Angeles, stopped over in the city Thursday, May 13, and left for New York City the following Sunday night.

Viola Allen arrived in the city from New York Saturday, May 15. She will begin work in the Essanay studio, in "The White Sister," her well-known stage production, on Tuesday, May 18.

Four reels of pictures taken in Japan and China for the United Photoplays Co. were shown Tuesday evening, May 11, at a meeting of the Geographic Society. The pictures were taken under the direction of Dr. George A. Dorsey, curator of anthropology of the Field Museum. Dr. Dorsey, who is an ex-president of the society, is still in the Orient. An address was given in connection with the pictures by Dr. Fay-Cooper Cole, assistant curator of anthropology at the Field Museum. The principal subjects treated of in the pictures are the whaling industry at Aikawa, Japan; the pearl fishers of Japan, and life in China as shown in the street scenes in Peking. These pictures, known as the Dorsey Pictures, began an indefinite run at the Studebaker theater, under Jones, Linick & Schaefer's management, Saturday, May 15.

"Graustark," Essanay's first big feature released through the V. L. S. E., Inc., opened a run at the Fine Arts theater Saturday, May 15.

The Strand Theater Co. at Orchestra Hall is offering "Betty in Search of a Thrill" with other strong film attractions during the current week.

"A Fool There Was" entered upon its third and last week at the Ziegfeld theater Saturday, May 15.

"Mizpah" is one of the first of a series of big spectacles that will soon be produced in the Edendale studio of the Selig Polyscope Co. The film story is an adaptation from the celebrated play of that name by Ella Wheeler Wilcox. Colin Campbell has been chosen as director, and Kathlyn Williams and Tyrone Powers have been assigned the leading roles. A large cast of principals, including Wheeler Oakman, and about a thousand supernumeraries will support them. It is rumored that the Selig Co. may send several actors and actresses to the Holy Land to secure the proper atmosphere for some of the scenes, just as was done in the filming of the "Ne'er Do Well," when a company was sent to the Panama Zone. The settings, it is promised, will be in full keeping with the scenes of the play. When completed, "Mizpah" will be released as one of Selig's "Red Seal" photoplays, which form a part of the output of the V. L. S. E., Inc.

H. L. Wallick, broker for the Lea-Bel Feature Film Co., with offices in the Schiller Building, left this city for New York for a week's stay, Tuesday, May 18.

Will Louis, Edison Director

PRODUCING is, to most men, work, but if all directors were to get the enjoyment and fun out of their work that Will Lewis, a new Edison director, does, in the vernacular, "it would be a shame to take the money."

Mr. Lewis is to direct comedies entirely and, to judge from his first picture, "A Lucky Loser," he succeeds in injecting his fun-loving nature into the film. He has also produced the comedy, "The Cook's Mistake," on the slapstick order.

Will Louis.

Director Lewis is not new to motion pictures as he was for a number of years producing comedies for Lubin where he began at the bottom of the ladder—though thoroughly experienced on the stage—and showed in a quick climb what he could do. He then spent a year in comedy direction with Solax, also producing the serious and well-known 5-reel suffragette film with Emeline Pankhurst featured.

Mr. Lewis hails from a small town near Germantown, Maryland. and it was his knowledge of the farm boy that made his first hit on the stage. He has had an extensive experience in myriad roles in stock having first been associated with the Forepaugh Stock in Philadelphia for three years when he became stage manager. He spent two years in stock with the Chestnut Street Theater players in that city, when he went to the Columbia Stock Company in Washington, D. C.

He has been from the first a character man and his "Little Gecco" in "Trilby" has been remarked as a fine bit of characterization. One of Mr. Lewis's best productions was the dramatic version of "Parsifal" done at the Grand Opera House, Philadelphia. His son, Leo Lewis, has made quite a name as a child actor in motion pictures, and gives very threatening indications of following his sire's example.

Mr. Lewis is a prolific scenario writer, having written scores of scripts for Lubin. He is in hopes of having the time to write more funny films for Edison.

Doings at Los Angeles

FRED BALSHOFER and Francis X. Bushman are here and have taken over a part of the Hollywood Universal studio, which was recently vacated by the big Laemmle company. They will do some remodeling and renovating before starting on production. Fred says he is glad to be back at the capital and his star is busy getting ready to work and incidentally meeting the westerners.

Tom Mix, Selig's western producer of cowboy stories, is recovering slowly in the Sister's hospital, where he has been ever since his accident at the Rodeo here ten days ago. The telephones have been ringing almost constantly ever since the popular director has been in and it is with joy that the news was received that the cowboy was on the road to recovery.

Since Charlie Chaplin and his Essanay players have been in town it has been nothing but a round of pleasure between scenes for the jolly little comedian. He has "grabbed off" most all the picture publicity in local papers since his arrival, and he has posed with great people, mayors, actresses, and everything imaginable, even being snapped with animals and an automobile.

* * *

The other night Manager Lloyd V. Brown of Clune's Auditorium entertained 200 members of the Selig plant, including most of the big bugs of the firm. Mr. Selig was there also, and saw the "Clansman" for the first time.

"Who Pays," the Balboa-Pathe series of a dozen question stories, is winning a place in the western photoplay world, and the work of Ruth Roland and Henry King is well appreciated as is that of Daniel Gilfether, Ed Brady, and numerous others. Bert Bracken is directing the last of the series now, which are to be released periodically.

Three Universal big guns are this week on the sick list and receiving treatment in the municipal hospital at the valley picture city. They are Henry McRae, who suffered mild blood poisoning when he stepped on a rusty nail; Otis Turner is navigating with the aid of a heavy cane, his ankle having been badly sprained, and Fritzi Brunette is suffering more painful injuries, sustained when she ran amuck with a new automobile. She will be back at work in a week or so.

Our little friend Billy Jacobs has been sick for two weeks with a serious attack of pneumonia, from which his parents did not expect him to recover, but fortunately the little picture star has pulled through in fine style, although handicapped by a seige of measles just as he was finishing with the lung trouble. Little Billy's mother says that he is gaining steadily and will soon be back to work at the Majestic Mutual.

Since the combination of Morosco and Bosworth productions, the stage space has been cramped, and as a result, a new strip has been added to the already large area, the new one containing about 2,500 square feet. Another 25,000 square feet have been added to the stages across the street where big exteriors are done as well as some mammoth interiors.

Billie West, the mutual girl, is training to be a cameraman for she was presented with a "two by four" camera the other day and ever since she has been shooting up the studio and finishing her own prints at her home. At least Bennie Ziedman says she is.

Carlyle Blackwell, who just completed a picture at the Lasky studio with Ina Claire, was taken sick shortly after the last scenes were made, and now he is on a vacation to recuperate.

Even if Thomas H. Ince was hurled 30 feet from his auto while it was going at racing speed, he refuses absolutely to be downed, and he is "going to the bat" with everyone who comes to see him. After installing a big projection machine in his home, he viewed all the pictures that were put out by the New York firm. At first he sat in an invalid chair, but is now able to sit up and see the films. He expects to be out in a week or so and be back on the job at Inceville.

* * *

Mr. George Blaisdell of the Moving Picture World returned to the city after several weeks' tour of the northern part of the state. He is temporarily located in a nice apartment house and has secured a typewriter to grind out some stories on the west coast capital.

The old members of the deceased Photoplayers' Club gathered together once more for a dinner and talkfest at Levy's cafe Thursday night. Henry B. Walthall was honored with the chair and he ably piloted the good fellow-ship through the sea of mirth. Many representative moving picture men were present, including many visitors and big men of the industry.

The total stage space, when the new Keystone stages are completed, will be the largest used exclusively for producing comedies in the world, so says Frederick Palmer of the Sennet publicity bureau. His figures must be correct, for the plant certainly is being greatly enlarged. A small army of workmen are rushing the new buildings across the street, and in thirty days they will be ready for use.

Marshal Neilan has left the Famous Players and has accepted a directorship with the Selig company, where he will put on a serial. Mr. Neilan has for several years been in the business, and is a well known and popular man, having been with the Kalem, and other concerns. He worked with and directed Ruth Roland in comedies for a long time in Hollywood. He goes to the new place and will start work immediately.

When the bathing girls had their parade in Venice this year, pretty dark-eyed Miss Fay Tincher won first prize, fifty dollars in gold, and the admiration of hundreds and hundreds of people of the fair southland. Fay wore her famous typewriter dress of Komic fame, only it was slightly abbreviated, making quite a unique bathing suit. Many girls of the picture were entered, but the Mutual favorite won over the throng of fair entrants.

Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Film Co., is in town and has established headquarters here where the productions will be handed out. Although no pretentious quarters have as yet been secured, and only a vacant storeroom rented, the place is piled high with goods and a string of exhibitors have been coming and going all the time. Harry Leonardt, special Western representative of the Fox attractions who looks after the territory west of Denver, is also here for a week or so.

The truth will out and it has been discovered that Louise Glaum, leading woman at Inceville, and Director Harry Edwards of the LKO company were wedded many days ago. The official announcement came rather as a surprise and the couple were congratulated upon their keeping the affair secret.

Mina films are being made in California, Milton H. Fahrney having already started production at the old Universal studios in Hollywood, until the new stage is ready at the Horsley jungle in the city. He is using Goldie Coldwell, George Ovie, Louise Fitzroy, and Jefferson Cabourn.

Sad to relate, four famous filmers were pinched for using too much gasoline in their cars. Otto Lederer, a Vitagraph leader; Marshal Stedman, one of the Big U sub-managers; Lewis J. Cody, leading man at Inceville; and the other one cannot be named because he has been speeding too much lately.

* * *

Plans for a new interior stage building at Universal City are now in the hands of construction men and work will be rushed on the big buildings which are to cost $100,000. The past two weeks of bad weather has fully convinced the officials of the firm that large covered stages with lights are absolutely necessary where so much film is turned out each day.

* * *

A premature explosion of gunpowder for a Keystone scene wrecked the concrete bottom of the big plunge at the studio, and narrowly missed injuring three players. The mammoth bath tub of cement will have to be extensively repaired before it can be used again. Chester Conklin was slightly injured.

* * *

Thomas H. Ince has secured the services of Jane Grey and Hale Hamilton, who will shortly appear in New York pictures. Dorothy Dalton, wife of Lewis J. Cody, has arrived at this studio where her husband is a leading player, and may possibly appear in several Ince pictures.

CLARK IRVINE.

Picking the Winner

How Colonel McCardell Lifted the $10,000 Prize for His "Diamond in the Sky" Scenario.

IT was black night in the offices of the North American Film Corporation in Chicago as three persons let themselves in with a regular latch key and prepared to tackle an almost herculean task—that of picking the winner of the $10,000 prize scenario for the famous Globe-Wernicke sectional film drama, "The Diamond in the Sky." They were John R. Freuler, president of the North American Film Corporation; R. R. Nehls, manager of the American Film Manufacturing Company, and Miss Mae Tinee, film critic, judges of the $10,000 prize photoplay competition announced by the Chicago Tribune and associated newspapers.

Roy L. McCardell.

It was, indeed, a task that confronted them, for in a great pile before them were 19,846 separate and complete manuscripts, all of them purporting to be the correct solution of the great question and each a candidate for that $10,000. Colonel Freuler gave one quick glance at that pile and sententiously remarked, "some job." Manager Nehls suggested that the judges be awarded the prize for selecting the winner and Miss Tinee collapsed in the corner with a bottle of aromatic salts.

But, realizing that the eyes of 19,846 scenario writers of greater or less degree were upon them, the judges bravely assailed the task of reading over that 19,846 scripts written on every variety of paper from Old Hampshire bond to butcher's wrapping paper and by every known make of typewriter and fountain pen.

After conscientiously reading through just thirteen scripts Nehls remarked with a sigh: "Well, there is one dead sure thing about this contest, just 19,845 of these contestants are going to be disappointed."

"You've said a mouthful," chirped Freuler, "but I hope the best one wins. I've read sixteen of them up to now and I'd hate to tell the truth about some of them. Just look at this one from Yap Hank, L. I. It calls for a whale to be used in the third section and explains that a whale was stranded on the beach off Great South Bay last summer and that probably another will be stranded there this summer. The author will notify us when the whale lands and we can send our company there to take the scene. What does she think we are, whalers? I'll admit this picture is a whale, but the idea is too indefinite. Thank goodness we don't have to send these scripts back—the postage bill would be a whale!"

"Did you say you had read sixteen?" ventured Miss Tinee, looking toward Mr. Freuler. "So have I, and that's double sixteen—16 to 1 twice, and here's a script numbered 1616 that looks good on the outside. Let's give it the once over."

Mr. Freuler picked up the gray covered manuscript and read: "The Diamond From the Sky"—a Picturized Romantic Novel." Down in the lower right hand corner he spied the number "1616." He opened the cover and there, on the inside, he beheld on the title page:

"The Diamond From the Sky."

"A Modern American Dramatic Romance in Chapters."

Turning another page he found:

"Foreword.

"'The Diamond from the Sky,' a strictly modern story. It ranges from the Bad Lands of the West to the green fields of Virginia, from country lanes to city streets. Its settings vary from the colorful tawdriness of gypsy camps to the luxurious surroundings of a multi-millionaire's palatial mansion. Each separate chapter ends with a strong suspense to hold the eager interest of audiences and draw them to see the succeeding instalments of the story. It tells of true love that triumphs over all obstacles and of the courage of heart that never despairs. Through all the chapters runs a tender theme of love and self-sacrifice of a girl of gentle birth, reared among the wild and reckless—and ever, to the very end, a vivid vein of romance and adventure."

Mr. Freuler thumbed a few of the pages. There were sixty of them in all—each one carefully typewritten on substantial paper. Glancing through hurriedly, he found each of the chapters enumerated—and for each chapter there was a complete explanation of the scenes, settings necessary to reproduce the picture, as well as a concise synopsis of the story. Each of the characters was mentioned—humor and tragedy alike played parts. There were the beautiful ingenue as the heroine, the powerful character as the hero, the adventuress, the humorous characters, and the pathetic characters.

"This looks like the goods," said Freuler, "but, you know we have got to see them all, haven't we, Nehls?"

Nehls wearily admitted that such was the only way, so the three brave judges tackled their job and for hours and hours without stopping for either food or water they toiled on and on.

Seventeen days later as the gray of dawn broke through the windows of the offices of the North American Film Corporation upon the gray and drawn faces of the three judges, the last script was thumbed over and laid aside. Of the great mass of manuscripts only one remained—the fateful "1616."

Then the question arose: Who is the author of 1616? Another search through the envelopes, numbered to correspond with the scripts, and the mystery was solved. Envelope 1616 contained the name of Roy L. McCardell, 140 Pelham Road, New Rochelle, New York.

Nothing could have been a greater surprise than to discover that Roy L. McCardell was the author of the winning scenario. Mr. McCardell is known throughout the country for his newspaper stories and scenario work. For the past fourteen years Mr. McCardell has written scenarios. He is a professional prize winner, having taken the prize in practically every competition he entered. He has won silver trophies, $2,000 cash prizes, $1,000 cash prizes, $10,000 cash prizes, prizes of every description. And he doesn't believe it's luck. Here's what he says:

"I have been earning my living as a writer since I was thirteen years of age. My early experience was of an amateur nature, but I soon drifted into professional work. I spent some twenty years as a member of the editorial staff of the New York Herald. I was in turn reporter, rewrite man, city editor, Sunday editor, and for a long period had charge of the Sunday Magazine section. My editorial experience formed a good groundwork for my career.

"Although I was confident of winning the $10,000 prize when I submitted 'The Diamond from the Sky,' I was nevertheless surprised when I was notified that I was the winner. I knew that competition would be keen. This simply proved an incentive to me. I worked harder on this competition than I have ever worked on any prize contest which I have entered.

"You probably have heard of my scenario work. I entered the field of photoplay writing some fourteen years ago, doing a number of comedies, and one reel dramas for several Eastern companies. I have been devoting most of my time to photoplay writing for the past four or five years. Consequently I knew the manufacturing difficulties which had to be comprehended in a scenario.

"This experience helped me considerably. I had not only been through studios, but had seen my own scenarios being produced. I had seen the method of handling settings, the obstacles of photography, etc.; I knew the cameraman's tricks; I knew producing difficulties and advantages so thoroughly that I was enabled to work out my scenario to the best advantage.

"When the $10,000 prize offer was announced I decided to enter immediately. First I made a study of the serial situation, and found out the basic elements that were needed in a successful production of this sort. I found that the public was interested in romance, beauty, youth, thrills, adventure —and most of all a sincere story that exemplified the high ideals of humanity.

"When I was notified that my manuscript had been selected, I could only believe that it was the reward of hard work, together with my complete knowledge of literary work and motion picture production. I believe that by the time the final chapter of "The Diamond from the Sky" is shown to the millions of people who are bound to see it, I will have established a standard of excellence in continued photoplays that will be recognized throughout the world."

Mr. McCardell is the author of some 800 scenarios. He has also written feature stories for newspapers for many years. His home is at 140 Pelham Road, New Rochelle, New York, but temporarily he is residing at Santa Barbara, California, where he is writing the story of "The Diamond from the Sky," which parallels the photoplay and will appear in newspapers throughout the country.

Aubrey Smith

IF Christy Mathewson appeared in English films you would have a parallel to what is happening in the forthcoming Frohman-World Film offering, "The Builder of Bridges," which will shortly be released by the World Film Corporation. For C. Aubrey Smith used to play cricket for Sussex, the one time champion county of England; he was a great hitter, a scholar and a gentleman. Then at the height of his athletic prowess he stepped on the stage of the St. James' Theater, London, and was successful. Suppose you had Christy Mathewson to go and play opposite Ethel Barrymore at the Empire Theater, Broadway, New York City, you would have Smith's standing in London explained.

C. Aubrey Smith.

From the stage to the screen was inevitable with Mr. Smith. He played leads with Margaret Illington in "The Lie;" was with Maude Adams in "The Legend of Leonora," and with Marie Doro in "The Morals of Marcus," and with Grace George. He is an ideal Edward Thursfield in "The Builder of Bridges," being of commanding height and good presence.

To make the picture it was necessary for Director George Irving to suspend Aubrey Smith in a cage between the unfinished arches of a great bridge. For this purpose Mr. Irving chose "Tunkhannock Bridge," which is the largest concrete bridge in the world. It has ten beautiful arches, is over 2,000 feet long and is nearly 300 feet high. In the engineering world this bridge passes for something special, if not unique.

As the cage containing Mr. Smith, the director, the camera man and technical director, swung 300 feet above the ground it bumped a buttress of the bridge somewhat awkwardly and for a time it looked (and felt) as if a disaster were certain, and the entire party would be hurled to the ground 300 feet below.

But the cage swung into its proper position and all was well. Mr. Smith was cooler than the proverbial cucumber, and some successful exposures were made.

Our Foreign Film Trade.

Present European Hostilities Affect Film Exports—Statistics of Foreign Business from July 1, 1911.

INTERESTING statistics of the amount of American film shipped to foreign countries since July 1, 1911, have been recorded in the pages of Commerce Reports, a booklet issued daily by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce at Washington, D. C. The report shows that the present conflict in Europe has affected our exports considerably in that there has been a falling off in the number of linear feet exported for the period of July, 1914, to January, 1915, inclusive, to the extent of 78,664,537 linear feet, as compared with the business done for the period of July, 1913, to January, 1914, inclusive. This means that we did $2,015,943 less of film export business for that period. The report follows:

"Prior to July 1, 1911, motion-picture films were not separately listed in the official export statistics of the United States, being included in the general classification, "Photographic goods." In the last six months of the year named 42,468,442 linear feet of American cinematograph films, valued at $3,277,668, were shipped to other countries. In 1912 —the first complete calendar year for which figures are to be had—exports amounted to 62,240,743 feet, value $5,501,593; in 1913 these shipments rose to 146,436,783 feet, though the value dropped to $5,291,464; in 1914 they receded to 117,580,304 feet, value $4,742,620.

In the year 1912 there were exported to France 1,019,171 linear feet of moving pictures valued at $375,549; in 1913, there were 306,774 feet valued at $41,688; in 1914, 316,020 feet valued at $26,261. To the United Kingdom in 1912 we exported 51,039,463 feet valued at $4,447,942; in 1913, 126,002,358 feet valued at $3,900,529, and in 1914 95,655,810 feet valued at $3,207,981. To Canada during 1912 we exported 5,930,072 feet, valued at $460,322; in 1913, there were 12,467,488 feet valued at $977,663, and in 1914, 10,981,146 feet valued at $856,245. To Brazil in 1912 there were exported 423,131 feet valued at $36,371; in 1913, 372,882 feet valued at $21,090, and in 1914, 67,214 feet valued at $6,570. To other foreign countries we exported in 1912, 3,828,906 feet valued at $181,399; in 1913, 7,287,321 feet valued at $350,494; in 1914, 10,560,114 feet valued at $645,563. The total value of motion pictures exported for the year 1912 was $5,501,593; for 1913, $5,291,464, and for 1914, $4,742,620.

The extent to which the present European conflict has affected the American export trade in motion-picture films—chiefly through interposing transportation difficulties—is apparent from the following report, which gives comparative figures for the seven months ending with January, 1913, 1914 and 1915: From July, 1912, to January, 1913, inclusive, we exported to France, United Kingdom, Canada, Brazil and other foreign countries, 27,803,761 linear feet of motion pictures with an estimated value of $2,171,769; from July, 1913, to anuary, 1914, inclusive, 108,481,572 feet of film with a value of $3,622,252, and from July, 1914, to January, 1915, inclusive, we exported to the countries mentioned above 29,817,035 feet of film, valued at $1,606,309.

It is interesting to note that the average value per linear foot of film exported in the last six months of 1911 was 7.72 cents; in the complete calendar year 1912, 8.84 cents; in 1913, 3.61 cents; in 1914, 4.03 cents; and in the seven-month period ending with January, 1915, 5.39 cents."

SCENERY IN "A PHYLLIS OF THE SIERRAS."

"A Phyllis of the Sierras," the third Bret Harte photoplay to be produced by the California Motion Picture Corporation, will be released on June 28 through the World Film Corporation. The motion picture will be remarkable not only for the magnificence of its interior sets but also for the grandeur of the redwood country in which the exteriors are now being filmed. The California Motion Picture Corporation has earned an enviable reputation for the selection of charming exteriors, and the standard already set up will be raised in the forthcoming production.

TSURU AOKI WILL WORK OPPOSITE HENRY WOODRUFF.

Henry Woodruff, who, with Dustin Farnum and H. B. Warner, recently signed a contract to appear under the New York Motion Picture Corporation banner, is expected to begin work at Inceville at once. A story is being prepared for him by Thomas H. Ince, in collaboration with C. Gardner Sullivan, entitled "The Beckoning Flame." Tsuru Aoki, the noted Japanese actress, who has appeared frequently in the Ince films with marked success, will work opposite Mr. Woodruff.

A Japanese Photoplayer

Makato Inokuchi Believes His Stars Made Him a Star—Now With Selig.

"HOW strangely the Supreme Being provides that each one should do his share in the work of mankind, to the end that I should become a moving picture actor! And here, too, in the Land of Liberty so far away from my own."

Seeing things always in the mystic light in which the Oriental loves to view even the minutest happenings, Makoto Inokuchi, one of the few sons of Nippon now on the rolls of the moving picture stage, so expressed himself in connection with his career, as he stood waiting for his scene at the Selig Jungle Zoo Studio.

Makato Inokuchi.

"Indeed, my people never trained me, nor intended to make me an actor," he continued. "It was quite the contrary, they hated to see me in the profession.

"In my childhood days my parents aspired for me to become a statesman or some other honorable occupation; in the old Japanese way of thinking, to be an actor is not so ranked. As I was a good student, holding first place in the class almost all through my primary school days, my people thought to send me to an American college to study economics and finance, which study our people thought harmonized with our family interests. It was then one of the popular aspirations of young Japanese to come to America to study.

"To tell the truth, I believe that each person has a certain calling, to suit the time of his birth; this God provides without our being conscious of it. How pitiful, then, that so many of us should try so hard, and in vain, something that God never meant us to do!

"This fact was demonstrated to me from the age of five years, and it followed me from that time on. When five years old I made a little speech at the Japanese Young Men's Association—a sort of little anecdote, which I had been taught in kindergarten. That shows I had nerve enough to become some kind of a public man. And when seven years old I saw for the first time the stereopticon pictures, shown by a traveling lecturer. I believe this was almost the first impulse to my future career that was instilled into my childish imagination. I became so much interested and curious concerning this strange, beautiful art, with the eloquent lectures that accompanied it, that when I returned from them I remembered nearly every word and gave a childish, but correct, imitation of the lecturer, which astonished my people. They said, 'The boy has an unusual talent—but I hope it won't make him a stereopticon lecturer.'

"But my fondness for these things grew and grew, until finally I got money from my parents and relatives and bought a whole outfit of stereopticon equipment. This was when I was 11 years old. I gave free public exhibitions at clubs and before society, with success, and my schoolmaster was very proud of me.

"After these lectures, by request of the host, I usually gave the so-called 'Students' Sword Dance,' so popular and almost exclusive among students. One of the elderly gentlemen said, 'I think you will become a Seuky Yokusha—big star.' I laughed at the idea of it and I told my mother what he said, which made her mad, and she took it rather as an insult.

"After years in American schools and colleges, my fondness for literature and arts grew, in spite of regular study of the subjects chosen for me, and finally I found my interest centering on the dramatic. The transition is not difficult. During this time I did several translations from famous English authors, including Shelley and Edgar Allen Poe. I also wrote a few one-act plays and scenarios. After my college studies, on the way to my home, I went to New York to view the wonderful city, where Broadway theatricals and its gay life attracted me. Study in the dramatic school and of the moving pictures followed, quite, it seemed, by accident. Later I became a member of such companies as 'Paid in Full,' 'A Daughter of Heaven,' 'Bought and Paid For,' 'The Derelict,' and many others of less importance.

"The opportunity in moving pictures came for the first time about four years ago, when Pathe Freres used me as an assistant, at a time when no legitimate actor considered it desirable to appear in the pictures. I returned to the footlights in the Liebler production with Viola Allen, but my impression of the pictures was very pleasant. I thought that some day I wanted to study it carefully. At length the moving picture art became wonderfully uplifted, to such a high standard that all legitimate actors became willing to enter the work. So, since last summer, I also have found the opportunity to become one of their number in film productions. I played in nearly all the pictures in George Kleine's American productions before I came here, and in several pictures with the Kalem Company, which fortunately resulted in my getting an engagement with Mr. Selig.

"Now I realize that my childish bent has followed through my life, to what ends I do not know. I hope to do fine work with the Selig pictures."

Historical Opportunities in Cartagena

Not Fertile Ground for Marketing Pictures, but Sensational American Subjects Would Go—Abundant Material for Historical Productions.

CONSUL ROSS HAZELTINE, Cartagena, Colombia, announces that motion pictures have not attained the popularity in Cartagena which they enjoy in other parts of South America. There are no manufacturers or exchanges, and only two theaters, one of which is rarely used. One theater shows French films two nights a week. The admissions charged are very reasonable considering the quality and length of the films.

During the year 1914 motion picture supplies were imported into Cartagena to the value of $936, of which $850 came from France and the remainder from Germany. Most of the films shown here are said to be entered at Barranquilla. The import duty on developed films is $5 per kilo ($2.27 per pound), gross weight; the duty on unexposed films is $0.10 per kilo ($0.045 per pound), gross weight. The films are purchased and resold when possible. American films are not shown, although there is little doubt that sensational western dramas would prove popular.

The opportunity for American producers does not exist, however, in the sale or rental of films, but rather in the manufacture of historical films. Cartagena has the most romantic history of any city of the old Spanish Main. The remarkable walls, which are said to have cost $59,000,000, were constructed during the reign of Philip II. of Spain, and to-day they are in a perfect state of preservation. Some of the forts have been destroyed, but several are in excellent condition. The ancient Palace of the Inquisition (now private property), completed in 1706, is also in excellent condition. The picturesque fort at San Jose at Bocachica, dating from 1698, has scarcely been touched by the passage of years. The Castle of San Felipe, begun in 1630 and completed 27 years later at a cost of $11,000,000, but now in ruins, is situated on a hill overlooking the city and harbor. These and other historical structures give Cartagena a scenic background not excelled in all Latin America, but nothing has yet been done to turn these advantages to practical account.

EDISON DAY AT READING, PA.

Harry Eytinge, Edison, was the specially invited guest at the Rex theater, Reading, Pa., recently, where an Edison Day and Night was held in honor of the visit of the player. Five performances were given and Mr. Eytinge appeared three times during the day and night, giving a talk from the stage on the making of motion pictures and the life of a cinema player. Manager Frank A. Gould had advertised the event widely and Mr. Eytinge received a rousing reception, flattering to both the player and the company. A number of films, in which the visitor appeared, were shown. He held an informal reception after and between performances. Manager Gould is most enthusiastic about the event and is already looking forward to the opportunity to hold another Edison "carnival."

OBSERVATIONS

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN.

THE element which has so persistently favored every action that might stay the progress of and help injure the motion picture business comes forward with the statement that the manufacturers of the pictures are responsible for the mushroom growth of censorship bodies throughout the country, and not the people who are looked upon as being enemies of the picture business. In support of this it is cited that a certain picture was severely and justly condemned and its production prevented in a town that had a censorship board. Instead of withdrawing the subject from the market, the owners made all the advertising capital they could over the condemnation and produced the pictures in the nearest town having no censor organization. As a result the residents of the latter town at once organized a censor board of its own.

The facts stated may be correct in every detail, but the conclusion drawn from them by the censor champions is not. That certain producers of films have steadfastly ignored and combatted all efforts and regulations towards censorship and have endeavored to force the exhibition of pictures which they know would not bear any censorship cannot be disputed, but the number of outlaws have been so few that their influence could not possibly have brought about the condition of censorship that exists today. Time and again the legitimate producers of motion pictures have challenged the censorship champions to show that more than five per cent. of the entire productions have violated public decency or policy, but in no instance has the opposition successfully met the challenge. It has simply rested upon generalities. It is safe now to challenge these people to search the entire country and show the existence of one per cent. of the films now upon the market that could not pass examination before any unbiased board of censorship.

* * *

The radical element is utterly devoid of reason. It is so wrapped up in the mistaken idea that it alone possesses all that is moral that not the slightest concession is made to any outside effort. In all the years this element has conducted its bitter warfare, it has accomplished but one purpose, and that is to awaken on the part of the public a precaution against pictures that might possibly have a harmful influence. When pictures were produced regardless of the lessons or examples they imparted, or the influence upon the minds of those who witnessed them, the pictures were new to the public. They were looked upon as a novelty and none thought for an instant that they would become such a factor in spiritual or educational life. Then the element which has since become so radical entered upon its sphere of usefulness and for the first time directed attention to what the public, and even the makers of the films, had not thought of. There the work of the radicals ended. Sincere, productive work.

* * *

The first people to devise means by which harmful influences might be averted were those engaged in the motion picture business. Very sensibly the manfacturers and exhibitors realized that the question raised as to the moral influence of certain subjects was an important one. They looked upon it as a warning to be heeded if they hoped to be successful. Voluntarily they encouraged the formation of a censorship board and allowed the People's Institute to select the membership. It cannot be disputed that the Institute comprised many of the best people the intellectual and religious circles of this great city possessed.

* * *

For several years this board performed its duties with such fidelity that the moral and intellectual standard of the films rose most perceptibly. Then some people called attention to the wonderful strides the motion picture business was making and some with itching palms insinuated that the people who had volunteered to censor the products had made soft berths for themselves. They could not be doing the work for nothing, they said. Then the sleuths proclaimed a startling discovery. The board of censors was being paid by the film manufacturers. The secretary of the board was under salary and that money with other required to meet the disbursements of the board was paid by the film manufacturers.

Then the radicals once more took the stage and declared they would have a system of censorship that would censor. These people are working like beavers in every important city and town throughout the country, and what have they accomplished with all their claims to a higher sense of morality and exalted intelligence it is difficult to pick out two of all their organizations that have concurrent thoughts on any of the subjects passed upon by them. They have so demoralized the public mind on the question of censorship that a cry for relief can be distinctly heard. If a popular vote were taken on a constitutional amendment to incorporate a provision for the censorship of motion pictures, the amendment would be so decisively swamped that it would not come to the surface again for another generation at least. It may seem like a far reach to suggest that motion picture censorship should become a subject of popular vote. But it is by no means beyond possibility. Censorship, Sunday laws, license regulations and other controversies bearing on motion pictures have the calenders of the courts in all parts of the land crowded with cases. The time will come when the public will inquire into the courses for all the turmoil and heavy expense put upon the taxpayers and a demand will be made whereby a standard be fixed to put an end to it.

* * *

Atlantic City, N. J., and Lincoln, Neb., are burdened with Sunday law litigation. New York State has just finished a similar fight, with a decision in favor of the motion picture people by the Court of Appeals. In Grand Rapids, Mich., there is a fight on among the reformers because some of them claim the censors should not be given passes to motion picture houses, it being claimed that when the passes are used the managers know the censors are present and the programs are arranged to suit the occasion. What rot! The censorship board of Milwaukee, Wis., is at war with itself. A member resigned as a protest against the conditions that exist in the board and the other members say he "got huffed" because he could not have his own way. In the same city there is a fight over a bill legalizing Sunday shows. From Boston comes the news that the legislature of Massachusetts is swamped with all kinds of censorship bills. One prominent member of the legislature has declared there is danger that censorship in the state may become so strict and unreasonable as to be stupid. And so it is all along the line. In most instances the people causing the disputes have become habitual disputants because they cannot satisfy themselves as to what they really want or should have. After they get what they think they want, they take up the time of the courts and the legislatures in striving to get more. The time, so absorbed, means so much more expense to the taxpayers.

The sentiments of a very prominent exhibitor of this city seem to point toward the only avenue of permanent relief for the people who have suffered so long at the hands of the professional agitators who parade under the cloak of the clergy. He said: "The exhibitors must organize. There must be a campaign of education among the exhibitors to bring them to a realization of what organization means to them. And when organized, the exhibitors must become more closely connected with all others connected with the motion picture business so that the entire business may become so amalgamated that it will be prepared at all times to meet the enemy. The reformers whip the politicians into line by threats of the church vote. We must be prepared to do equally effective lobbying against unreasonable legislation by showing that not only is the moving picture vote large enough to command attention, but the moving picture people pay many kinds of heavy taxes and the churches are exempt from all taxation. On these two points we have our persecutors beaten a mile. As exhibitors alone it seems we can accomplish little. We must size up with the enemy and become semi-political."

LASKY TO PRODUCE "CHORUS LADY" AND "TRAVELING SALESMAN."

Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company announces that it has acquired the photodramatic rights for two of the greatest comedy successes ever produced on the American stage—"The Chorus Lady" and "The Traveling Salesman," both by James Forbes and both originally produced under the management of the late Henry B. Harris.

BATTLESHIP ALABAMA IN PICTURES.

George W. Terwilliger, the Lubin writer and director, recently "borrowed" the battleship Alabama, which is at League Island Navy Yard, Philadelphia, and took a number of scenes on board. As a return compliment, Mr. Lubin gave the officers and crew a moving picture show and smoker this week, and the occasion was a gala one at the navy yard.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Welcome Back.

EZRA RHODES, of the La Salle, South Bend, Ind., drops in again after a long sleep. He writes that he is enclosing a vest pocket folder after the Lyric, Libertyville, model. But Mr. Rhodes gives his own stamp to the idea and offers several new wrinkles that are worth taking notice of. He may think he copied another style, but he didn't. He did use the idea of text top and bottom of the front page with the house card in the middle, but that's all.

In the first place he gets a new style of folding. Instead of folding from the right to the left, one form is printed to show the back, front and first page. On the inside form the second page of the program is at the right. When the first page is folded over we get what might be a four page folder with the two page program inside and the front and back cover. But lift up the front page and there is revealed two pages of notes in two thirteen em columns running the wrong way of the two pages, making this one entire page instead of two short ones.

It is one of the best forms of a six-page folder that has come along for some months.

He still holds to his invitation to come in and see a part of the performance at noon and get a return check good after business hours. The invitation is worded:

> We want our regular noonday patrons who have not time to see the full show to ask for a return check good for later in the day.

That's the notice. This is the idea: A man has a lunch hour. By the time he has eaten lunch there is not time enough to make a show worth while. He might see one reel or two, but not more. He decides to wait until evening. Then something else comes up and he does not go then. But under this plan he drops in for as long as he can stay, feeling that he can come back later and finish off. Business is not very brisk about the noon hour. Mr. Rhodes does not miss anything if the patron comes later and stays for the entire show. If the man comes back it's the same as though he had come for the first time. If he doesn't come back Mr. Rhodes has the money anyhow. It's a great scheme for a house in the business section that runs continuously, as this clipping indicates:

> Our regular program is six reels of pictures, one short subject followed with a feature production. We aim to start our shows promptly, at 9 a. m., 10:30 a. m., 12 noon, 1:30 p. m., 3 p. m., 4:15 p. m., 5:30 p. m., 7 p. m., 8:15 p. m., 9:30 p. m. On Sunday, by order of City Administration, first show starts at 1:30 p. m.

Mr. Rhodes used to be a regular and welcome caller. We hope that he has the habit again. He is one of the "born" showmen.

Two in One.

C. R. Blubaugh, of Fort Scott, Kans., breaks a too long silence to shoot in a Hennegan cover program covering his two houses, Pictureland and the Vaudette. He wants to know what we think. In the first place we think that the printer should suit the ink to the job It is good ink but not the right sort. It smudges and spreads and takes away from the clean look. We think, too, that here and there a line might be pulled up by the use of italic, in the issue to hand, for example, the Thursday distribution of post cards at the Vaudette. And we would date each day. Then we would use the back page for house talk instead of giving it to an advertiser, call it a day and stop worrying. Mr. Blubaugh prints up and down instead of across the page, getting five fifteen em columns. Columns one, three and five are advertising. The other two are the program columns, with strips printed top and bottom in red ink. We do not believe that the cost of the extra impression in red pays for itself. It looks well, but it does not pay for its cost.

Shifted, But Thinking Still.

James C. Quinn is out of the exchange business in Los Angeles, and is with the Magner Company. He writes:

> I suggested to a friend of mine the other day that he advertise the hours during the day when he shows the Chaplin pictures. He is running an all-day show in an office building district, where the majority of his possible patrons have only so much time during the day to attend a show and an announcement of the time the reels would be shown would act not only as an advertisement for the house, but also as a pointed suggestion to them to arrange their spare time so that they could be there to see that particular picture, something that most of them may not have thought of, or if they did there was no way that they could definitely figure their time without knowing what hours the pictures would be shown.
> He suggested that I should figure up an attractive way of presenting it and the enclosed is the result. There may be better ways of handling it, and there probably are, but I believe that it is of great importance in the downtown sections. Of course it is not so much so with the ordinary program, but with a popular star like Charley Chaplin the idea ought to appeal very strongly to picture fans. Of course, the show must be kept running according to schedule and that is another good chance to impress patrons. The "B-O-O-O-ARD" one was sent out first, followed by "Charley's Running Time" this week. I think the Isis manager, Mr. Millard, would be glad to send copies to anyone interested.
> I am connected with the above office at present and expect to have some advertising ideas to contribute to the department from time to time on our own stuff.

These are sheets 3½ by 5½, folded once. Cheap light stock is used, but of a better grade than news. One is on blue stock with black ink and the second is printed in red on yellow stock. Neither will reproduce well, which is a pity, for the idea is clever. One is lettered on the outside "B-o-o-o-ard" and the other "Charley's Running Time." Inside both have this heading:

ROUND 5c TRIP ROUND 5c TRIP

Below is the time table and then:

(x) Drama. (s) Comedy. (c) New Picture Friday and Monday. (p) Half minute to stop laughing.

NOTE.—A regular Charley Chaplin excursion each day over the "Isis Route."

This is a part of the time table, there being ten shows in all:

STATIONS	Lv.	Lv.
(c)(x)AURORA FLOYD, 1st Section	9.52	11.12
AURORA FLOYD, 2d Section	10.08	11.28
(s)CHARLEY CHAPLIN, "In the Park"	10.24	11.44
(c)(x)A DRAMA OF EAGLE MOUNTAIN	10.40	12.00
A DRAMA OF EAGLE MOUNTAIN	10.56	12.16

This is about as much as can be done without reproduction. If Mr. Quinn will be good enough to send in one done in black ink on white card we'll be glad to reproduce. It is an excellent scheme for any continuous house and for any set of films.

Good Points.

R. C. Hallock, of the Crescent theater, Southampton, Long Island, sends a long letter and a lot of samples, both of which are welcome. From the tone of the letter it might be thought that the previous mention was adverse to the house, which was not the case. He says:

> You were good enough to review our program in a recent number of the World and we inclose additional samples. You spoke of our changing style and paper in each issue. We do this in order to obtain a distinctly different appearance each week, that no patron will confuse the new program with the old. Our method of distribution is to pass out every Saturday the program for the coming week to all who attend. This we repeat on Mondays and Tuesdays. Then through the week we keep a pile at the ticket window. This we find to be the best method of distribution for a small town.
> You mention that it requires a multiple reel feature to rise to a 24 point display. True! We are furnishing a program for intelligent, refined people. We do our poster advertising elsewhere. Our idea of an attractive, convincing program is to use type just large enough to be plainly readable (8 point) for the body and to be very sparing of display—just enough for contrast. To prove that this has paid us, I can assure you it is a fact that we have won the confidence of the public to such an extent that they rely upon our statements regarding coming attractions absolutely and we have the reputation for invariably giving more than we advertise, and have never been criticised as making false claims.
> The program is only a part of our advertising. We use special folders (sample inclosed), 20 to 100 inches of newspaper space weekly. heralds and posters up to 24 sheet.
> We have a $20,000 property in a town of less than 4,000 population. Our policy from the beginning has been to provide the utmost in safety, sanitariness, comfort and entertainment. The Crescent policy, in existence long before the Strand was built, was adopted by that house upon its opening. That's how much we think of the Crescent policy.
> In explanation of our methods and policy I might state that I am interested in the local newspaper and have been in the printing and newspaper business for twenty years.

There are two ways of looking at the change of style of program each issue. One argument is that the program always the same comes to be recognized as such. The other is that variety pays the best. It is very largely a matter of clientele.

There are no two ways of looking at the big type proposition. As Mr. Hallock says, the place for poster advertising is on the posters. If more managers would only realize that it is not the size that gives importance but the relative sizes of the types, there would be more well printed programs. A twelve point is as much bigger than an eight point as a twenty-four is larger than eighteen. Both mean the same thing precisely, except in the matter of space. You don't have to use poster type for emphasis. On the program it is better not to. Being a publisher, Mr. Hallock knows this. We beat Mr. Hallock by four years' experience, and we know it. If all exhibitors could appreciate this point they would either save on paper stock or have more room in their programs for business making stuff.

We've alluded before to the rhymed catchlines they use. Here are some more that will be useful to any house with a two syllable name accented on the first syllable. It will serve, for instance, for the Bijou, but not so well for the Unique.

Wouldst have a merry, jolly time? The CRESCENT beckons. Price, one dime.

In worry would you pound some dents? Go to the CRESCENT for Ten Cents.

One Dime, Ten Cents, is well expended within the CRESCENT. Troubles ended.

Ten little pennies make one Dime. The CRESCENT means a happy time.

There was a man in our town, and he was wondrous wise, he went into the CRESCENT TO REST HIS BRAIN AND EYES.

There was a child in our town, who, morning, noon and night, implored his folks to take him to the CRESCENT, kid's delight.

And here's a good prose line for any program. It says just what you want to say and says it nicely.

Slip this program in your pocket when leaving theater. It's the best possible answer to the question, "Where shall we go to-night?" Its advertisements will tell you where you can spend your money to the best advantage.

Two of the programs are printed on a slaty blue that is not cheerful in tone and hard to read in a partly darkened house. The others are on white or light stock. The most important issue is twelve page and cover bulletin of coming specials. In this the right hand pages, as the book opens in the middle, including the cover, are three inches longer than the left hand pages and are folded over on top of the shorter sheets, the title being printed on this lap. It is odd form and well worded, but not so well printed.

It is evident that they are using dated stuff, for they advertise one subject as "An unusual film with 'jumps' in it." In some houses with a commercial service the unusual film is one that has no jumps.

In all the changes of style and color there is one point they adhere to. They offer clean, readable type, well and temperately worded without extravagance of statement or typography. It's a decent and respectable program for a house of the same sort—good but not gaudy.

We'll always be glad to get those Tennyson catchlines or anything of that sort.

A Pickford Week.

Leon Schlessinger, of the Strand, Toronto, sends in some programs for an all-Pickford week and thanks it for the "somewhat belated" mention of his art department. If we had known he was in a hurry we would have hustled the mention through, but it is seldom that a paragraph can be run the week the matter is received or even the week after that. Will other impatient managers please also note.

We like the art department better than we do this program. The big punch is a scare head on the front that reads:

Extra! Special! Extra!

MARY PICKFORD DIVORCED

NOT

FROM OWEN MOORE!

But—From Every Other "Movie" Theatre in Toronto For the Entire Week Commencing Next Monday April 19th, as the Magnetic "Movie Queen" has been ENGAGED TO MANAGER LEON SCHLESINGER OF THE STRAND THEATRE, TO APPEAR IN REPERTOIRE.

A DIFFERENT PLAY EVERY DAY.

The effect would have been better had the bank commencing "But from every other" been set in a smaller and lighter type. It would have better connected the "divorce" line with the "engaged" line. It would have been well to have run a story under the scare head. A headline without a story is not very deceptive. There is no connection between the head and the rest of the matter on the front page, and the effect of the sell is partly lost. The remaining pages are badly jumbled. Instead of running two columns to the page and taking a column to each of the plays, there are three columns to the page, one two and one-half inches and two an inch and a quarter wide. Naturally the plays advertised in the narrow columns are lost in the shadow of the wide measure stuff. Through a confused, disorderly layout the bill is only about twenty per cent. efficient.

Why?

If you were a confirmed fan you might be willing to dig through the program of the Homecrest theater, Brooklyn, to see what they had, but you have to be a most enthusiastic and confirmed fan to wade through this:

This may help the advertiser to get his advertisement read, but we doubt it. It came home with some dry goods and looked so little like a program that it was thrown out and rescued only by chance. Now, this house is off the beaten line of travel and the program is supposedly used for store distribution to get the trade on the three-block-long shopping center, and yet it is so difficult to read that very few probably do. The program should first advertise the house and do it properly. Then, if possible, it should advertise outsiders. If both cannot be done, the house should have first call, but with this arrangement neither the house nor the outside advertisers profit much.

Does His Own.

Here is another exhibitor who does his own printing. He does not say he has had no shop experience, and we rather fancy that he has slung type at some time or another. He is Will L. Beebe, of the Candor (N. Y.) Picture theater. He gets out a sheet 4¼ by 8½, probably all his press can handle. He writes:

> I am inclined to give my people a little picture talk rather than burden them with cheap advertising. I read the World regularly from cover to cover and it is a question which department carries the greater amount of interest for me, as I get good out of every department, especially the Advertising and Projection departments.

That's the way to read this paper. Let each page tell you something. You may run licensed service and yet find good suggestions in the Universal or feature advertisements, suggestions for catchlines, display schemes or text.

Mr. Beebe probably printed his letter heads, too, using the name of the house and his own; nothing else. It is in singularly good taste. This same economy of type is observable in the program. It is not weighted down with every piece of type and ornament he has in his cases. He used a light six-point border, ornamental but not too ornate and cuts with two-point rule, which is his only departure from good form, for two point is too heavy for the rest of the display. A one-point flush rule or a two-point parallel rule would be more in keeping. He uses the all-Pathe service and takes more space talking about it than he used for the titles. He realizes, what few exhibitors seem to do, that the general talk makes for interest in the titles if it is the right sort of talk. Think this line over:

> No better pictures can be seen at any theater—we care not how large the city or how grand the theater.

Isn't that more convincing for the whole program and coming programs than a flash line that tells "this is the grandest and most sensational picture ever produced?" You know that that's not true. You know it is true that the Candor gets the same pictures that New York sees. Ten point roman and twelve point bold are the only faces used except for the title page, where there is one thirty-six point line. He trusts to talk instead of type and his confidence is not betrayed. It is all quiet and effective and not at all as the average village job printer would turn it out.

THE PHOTOPLAYWRIGHT

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is enclosed.

Revision and Sales Bureau.

ONE of those argumentative correspondents wants to know just what it is that makes the revision bureaus unworthy of support. "It must be so if you say so," he agrees, perhaps with gentle sarcasm, "but why is it? You must have a reason."

Surely we have a reason. The reason is that in the very nature of things the revision bureau is offering for sale something it has not in stock. The offer of revision is the implied promise to make a script salable. Most always this is a definite promise and not an inference. The advertisements urges the reader to have scripts revised and sold, or revised in order that they may be sold.

Practically all of the revision bureaus are also sales agencies. They charge from three to five dollars for revising a reel and ten to twenty per cent. of the selling price if a sale is made. Generally a small fee, perhaps fifty cents or a dollar, is charged for reading a script. Were the rest of the business legitimate this fee would be legitimate as a means of keeping out the flood of utterly useless scripts that would be sent in if for no other reason that the hope of a free criticism. But an agency may not exist on commissions alone. There are heavy overhead expenses. Advertising is generally the heaviest expense, but there are also rent and generally the hire of stenographers. It is almost foolishly within the bounds of safety to say that even the smallest revision agency is under an expense of fifty dollars a week. It may be that the "overhead" is some enterprises runs several hundred dollars.

Granting that there are one hundred and fifty stories produced each week, it is safe to say that half of these are from the closed market, either being written by staff employees or authors in close touch with a studio. Of the remainder not more than half are bought in what might be called the open market, that is from authors not known to the editors either through previous sales or sales to others.

This leaves a market for about thirty-seven and a half stories in which the bureau may participate. It is to be questioned whether even the largest of these agencies sells more than four or five a week. The income from commission can hardly be in excess of one hundred dollars. The rest must come from fees and revisions. Naturally the editors who pass on the scripts must be extreme optimists in order to get scripts to revise that their salaries may be paid them. If they revise fifty scripts knowing that their average market is about ten per cent. of this number, it stands to reason that they must realize that they are coaxing a certain percentage of the authors to incur a needless expense.

Apart from this it is seldom or never that the work is well done. Writers who can do good work can fare better writing out their own stories. It follows that revisionists are not able to do the best work, and so the author pays for inferior development. We fail to see any angle from which the game may be viewed that presents any aspect of honesty.

Literary agents for established writers are well enough. Men like Richard Harding Davis, George Randolph Chester and Phillips Oppenheim do not want to be bothered with business details. Their time is more profitably spent in creative work. The agent is a business manager rather than a sales manager. He supplies a created demand, he does not create it himself, but because it is well known that there are literary agents, the photoplay writer believes that they create a market, and eagerly pay the fees demanded, getting nothing in return. Most of the agencies play upon this fiction. It is their principal asset. They know they cannot sell to any greater advantage. Not always do they stand as good a chance as the individual writer. They know that, too.

Fadding.

You will not find that word in any dictionary, but it should be there. Fadding is the pursuit of fads. Perhaps you have passed the fadding stage, but many have yet to come to it. Perhaps they can be warned in time. Applied to photoplay fadding means to overwork the newest discovery.

An author reads how to break scenes. He may have read before of the break scene, but this time something that he reads drives home the idea and shows him just how to do it. He learns that it is a valuable aid to authors. He has a lot of scripts that have not sold. He knows there must be something wrong. Perhaps it is because there are no break scenes. He takes up the bundle and writes breaks into every script at every conceivable place. They come back again. Meantime his reading has emphasized visions. At once he fads on visions and puts visions into all his scripts. This is not more successful, so in turn he changes his leaders into cut-ins, fades down his stuff instead of dissolving it, works busts to the point of nausea and changes straight letters to "hand holding letter." He gets his scripts so full of technique that there is no longer a recognizable plot. He has fadded his stuff to a finish.

If your stories do not sell, it is because they are not the right sort of stories. There is something wrong with the plot, not with the technique. Write better plots or improve those you have. Technique is not what sells the story. It is what enables you to write a story and gets you more money for it after it is written. Don't fad. Work on plots.

Beginning.

This seems to be one of those times when it is extra fashionable to write letters something like this:

> About three months ago I purchased a copy of your Technique of the Photoplay. I studied it with avidity—ate with it, slept with it—walked with it. When I thought I had thoroughly digested it, I wrote a play, a comedy—had it typewritten and sent it out, but my poor play came back. Now I adhered very closely to the text, following your advice as best I could, but apparently did not come up to the scratch. Can you tell me where I can find a good, honest, capable teacher in this line of work?

Or perhaps it is more along this line:

> I wrote two plays, but was not surprised that they came back, but my third should sell, for I wrote this in the exact form of a Vitagraph story, a printed copy of which they sent me.

One writer did one play and is much surprised to find that it came back. Another did three but the first two were not in proper form. These are two of perhaps thirty letters received within the past two weeks all to the same effect, worshipping the same fetish of form. One writer had Technique of the Photoplay. One had only a Vitagraph form sheet. The former writer did not see this from page ten of Technique:

> Success is to be gained, save in exceptional instances, only through close study, hard work and long practice. It is not possible to sell many, if any, scripts the first year.

And yet she walked and ate and slept with the book, writes one "poor play" that probably was a poor play indeed, and right away yells for help. She read nothing of the introduction to Plot Formation on page 66 that runs:

> Photoplay form enables the author to present his story in its most attractive guise of perfect workmanship, but if there is no story to be presented, the elaborate care bestowed upon form will avail the author nothing.

She didn't want to see that. She read that there was money to be made in plays. She wanted to make it—at once. She thinks a photoplay is something written in a certain form. She studies form—and finds that form will not sell.

She would not make a pair of boots that she could try to sell. She would know that she would have to practice making boots. She knows she cannot be a shoemaker, but she knows that photoplays are so easy to write—just a few sheets of paper and a check for fifty dollars.

We use a Blank typewriter. It does not follow that if you use a Blank typewriter also that you can sell plays. We use a typewriter just as we use form; as a means of getting ideas down on paper. It is not the make of typewriter or the size of the paper or the technical form that really sells the work. It is the idea that these mediums permit the display of.

The second correspondent quoted above is even more a slave to the idea of form. Two plays did not sell because they were "not in proper form." The third must because it is precisely like a Vitagraph form. It is the third attempt of a very evident beginner to write a story. If anyone with the proper form could write a story, what would be the need of all this worry about scripts? The manufacturer would need only to hire half a dozen girls, give each an old script and five dollars a week.

Just to save some of your postage stamps we'll admit that some film stories look as though precisely that thing had been done. To save others other stamps we'll admit that some of the stuff on the screen with our own name on looks like that. But this is not the point at issue. It is not what you see on the screen but what is written in the script that counts, and most manufacturers are making an earnest effort to get really good material. And that is not the sort of stuff that is turned out by the man who tries to sell his first script and whose feelings are hurt when he doesn't.

And as an offset a woman in Wichita wrote for advice last summer and we told her to stop trying to sell and to lean to plot. Now she writes that some of the early plots were very, very bad. So we wrote that when she thinks that some of the later plots are good, she can make efforts to sell some.

You don't need teachers to help you. They cannot help you to the extent represented even by moderate fees. It is your own work and YOUR OWN WORK ALONE that will ever get you anywhere.

Motivation.

Don't have things happen just to make a story or to make a story more interesting. Have an interesting story because things happen. Give a motive, a reason, for all action. If John kills Jim, do not have the murder merely because "it makes the story stronger." Have it a strong story because of the reasons why the murder was done. If Harry is found in front of his father's safe with ten thousand dollars in his pocket, do not trust to the fact for strength, but to the reason that created the fact. If Harry robs his father it is a dramatic event if there is any reason for it other than that the author made him do it. And the stronger the reason, the stronger the situation. If Harry takes the money to pay a gambling debt, the scene is not as strong as it would be if he took the money to save his brother from disgrace, knowing that his father loves the other brother better. If he takes the money to give his father's discarded mistress and shoulders the blame that his mother may not learn of her husband's infidelity, the situation is stronger still. The action of the scene is practically the same in all three situations, but the motivation gives the physical scene its strength. Real strength of plot comes from story rather than from the action that tells the story, for the action is merely the recital of the motive and is not in itself as dramatic as the thought it suggests. This is a point wherein many students fail. They seek strenuous action without idea, not realizing that it was the idea behind the action they saw on the screen that made a similar scene interesting to them.

Closing Up.

Too many writers seem to feel that if they develop their story in the best possible action that no more can be done. They look helplessly at their overlong story, realizing that it has run beyond its proper footage, but not knowing how to correct the error. And yet it is very simple. Suppose that John, who is almost engaged to Sadie, calls on Nellie and Sadie sees him entering the gate to Nellie's home. She sends her young brother over to scout. The action might run somethink like this:

17—Street—John walks through.

18—Back yard at Sadie's—Mother washing—stops—calls Sadie—tells her something—

Cut-in—"Get me two cakes of soap."

Back to scene—Sadie takes money—exits.

19—Gate to Nellie's—John comes along street—looks at house—enters gate.

20—Front of Sadie's—Sadie enters—hat on—she starts—looks off.

21—Nellie's front door—John standing—Nellie enters from house—greets John—asks him in.

22—Back to No. 20.—Sadie stamps foot—Very angry—calls—Bobbie enters—Sadie points in direction she was looking—gives Bobby instructions—he exits—watches him.

23—Side of Nellie's house—window—Nellie comes to window—opens—

24—Front gate as in No. 19.—Bobby enters—goes to house.

25—Parlor—John and Nellie talking—sitting close together.

26—Side of house as in No. 23—Bobby enters—looks in window.

27—Parlor as in No. 25—John giving Nellie a ring—Bobby appears at window—looks—disappears.

28—Back to No. 26—Bobby beside window—turns and runs off.

29—Front of Sadie's as in No. 20—Sadie watching.

30—Nellie's gate—as in No. 19—Bobby coming from house—through gate and up street.

31—Front of Sadie's—as in No. 20—Bobby runs in—tells Sadie—shows John was giving ring—Sadie sore—starts in direction of Nellie's.

32—Street—Sadie hurrying along—stops—sees large stone—picks up—regards intently—hurries on, carrying stone.

33—Nellie's gate—Sadie enters—still carrying stone—enters gate—goes toward house.

34—Parlor as in No. 25.—John admires ring on Nellie's finger—speaks—

Cut-in—"Too bad Harry is not here to give it to you himself."

Back to scene—Nellie nods—takes photo frame from table—regards it lovingly—John stands very close to her.

35—Side of house as in No. 23—Sadie enters—looks in window—still has rock.

36—Back to No. 34—John and Nellie close together—she smiles into his face.

37—Back to window—Sadie throws rock—cut to 38—Parlor—Rock comes in—strikes Nellie—she screams—falls into John's arms—Sadie appears at window—climbs through—John tries to explain—she will not have it—points to ring on Nellie's finger—catches up poker—beats him—he drops Nellie—runs—Sadie follows.

39—Front of Nellie's as in No. 21—John runs through—Sadie follows—

40—Gate as in No. 19—John runs through—Sadie follows.

Then a succession of chase scenes until John can explain he was his brother's proxy. It has taken 24 scenes to get this over naturally. It might be possible to cut perhaps ten scenes, but that would still leave fourteen. It looks like a hopeless case. It isn't. Look—

17—Back yard—Mother at washtubs—calls—Sadie enters—mother gives her money—speaks—

Cut-in—"Two cakes of soap."

Back to scene—Sadie takes money—exits.

18—Gate at Nellie's—John enters—goes to house.

19—Front of Sadie's—Sadie enters—hat on—exits.

20—Gate at Nellie's as in No. 18—John at front door—Sadie enters—sees them—stands watching.

21—Back to No. 19—Nellie to door—smiles—asks John in—he enters.

22—Back to gate—Sadie angry—starts through gate—sees rock—picks up—passes on.

23—Parlor—Nellie ushers John in—he speaks—takes small box from pocket—speaks—

Cut-in—"Harry sent you this."

Back to scene—Nellie smiles—John unwraps box—takes out ring—Nellie admires—

24—Side of house with window—Sadie enters—still has rock—looks in window—

25—Parlor—John slipping ring on—Sadie appears at window—throws rock—hits Nellie, who faints in John's arms—Sadie climbs in—John starts to explain—Sadie catches up poker—beats him—John drops Nellie and runs—Sadie follows—

26—Front as in No. 19—John run out, followed by Sadie—both exit.

27—Gate—John and Sadie run through.

This is a saving of thirteen scenes and a quickening of action as well through the simple expedient of dropping Bobby, sending Sadie where she can see, and letting her act. She gets the stone in a running scene instead of a special set up, and not a particle of the real story has been lost.

It is not enough to be able to write your story in proper action. You must pursue your study to the point where you can make the action do all sorts of tricks. Even eleven scenes may be too long to let all of the story into length. In that case play scenes seventeen to twenty as written in the second form, but in No. 20 bring Nellie on and let her get the ring right there. Then—

21—Gate—Sadie picks up rock—throws—cut to

22—Front—Nellie hit—faints in John's arms—Sadie charges in—he tries to explain—she will not have it—beats him with fists—he drops Nellie and runs—Sadie follows.

In the next scene we have the gate. This makes only seven scenes. A further reduction could be made by having Sadie start off from the back yard without her hat, just running down to "the corner." This would eliminate the front of Sadie's home, and give six scenes, just one-fourth of the original layout. It can always be done if you plan properly.

Diffidence.

We know a man who can write good comedies, only he thinks he cannot, and so he doesn't. That is different from the many who think they can and really cannot, but it is just as bad, if not worse.

Two Angles.

Lately we ran a paragraph on using the Boss' stamp. One very young man wrote in it was none of our blamed business if he did use stamped envelopes with the business card cut out. They were his own property. He was very indignant and wrote with vigor. We laughed and basketed the letter. We didn't care whether the stamps were his or the boss'. We said that it looked bad. It still does. He can take the envelopes to the post office and get face value for them. He should.

What we did like was a letter from a different sort of chap who wrote: "Thanks for the article on the boss' stamps. I never looked at it in that light."

Punch Finishes.

"And so they were married and lived happily ever after," still does well enough for fairy stories, but fiction form demands a better punch to the ending. Long years ago it was considered clever to end the story with the title. "And so, safe in her husband's arms were ended forever A WIFE'S PERILS." Today the fiction reader wants to have the story wind up with a short arm jolt to the ribs.

It is the same way with the film stories. Work up the climax and have that the ending of the film as well as the real end of the story. It can be done in most cases and the exceptions are so few that they but prove the rule. Your film should be like a good prize fight and end with the knockout, only you should not even count ten after the drop.

Stating Facts.

The other day a brilliant young author who admits he cannot write in action, asked Marc Edmund Jones to suggest that he supply ideas for Jones to work out. He did not enclose a return cover but Jones sent him this reply:

> I return your enclosures to you unread, as your proposition is of no interest to me. To guard the manufacturer from plagiarism, conscious or unconscious, I do him the courtesy of evolving my plots from my own brains. Any other established photoplay writer will do likewise. Incidently, the "evolving" of a plot is the easiest part of photoplay writing and you will be apt to find the working up of the plot when "evolved" to be about seven-eighths of the actual work. And I can assure you that I like work as little as you do.

That is just about the proportion of things. It is the plot that sells the story, and a story without plot will not sell, but given the plot about seven-eighths of the hard work is doing the plot into action. That is why there are so many "literary loafers" who want to sell synopses only.

That Short and Ugly Word.

When your friends tell you that your script is better than what they see on the screen and still the editors will not buy, be loyal to your friends, but pity their poor judgment.

Technique of the Photoplay

(Second Edition)

By EPES W. SARGENT

Not a line reprinted from the first edition, but an entirely new and exhaustive treatise of the Photoplay in its every aspect, together with a dictionary of technical terms and several sample scripts.

One hundred and seventy-six pages of actual text.

Special chapters on Developing the "Punch," Condensing the Script, Writing the Synopsis, Multiple Reel Stories, Talking Pictures, Copyrights, etc.

In cloth, two dollars. Full leather, three dollars.

By mail postpaid. Add ten cents if registration is desired.

Operators' Union Directory, I. A. T. S. E.

NOTICE: Each union is entitled to have its roster of officers, meeting nights, etc., listed here once per year, free of cost. Preserve this list as it will not be republished. The mail address of the secretary should be included, and the address of regular meeting place, if any.

Local No. 154, Seattle, Washington.

W. W. Ladd, president; George Smith, vice-president; Arthur L. Bohnert, secretary, Labor Temple; E. W. Jones, financial secretary; Vance Bartlett, treasurer; Earl Cram, business agent.

Local No. 164, Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

George Harris, president; Arthur Weaver, vice-president; Burton Grote, secretary, 551 Jackson street; John Black, financial secretary; C. A. Colter, treasurer; Edward Medower, business agent; Charles Hoover, sergeant-at-arms. Meetings held in the Alhambra Building, Room 214, every Friday morning.

Manufacturers' Notice.

It is an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles have been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second sets of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either Booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 86.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high-class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

Ought your projection machine, including the mechanism, lamp-house, and table to be grounded to the operating room metal? Ought the metal of the operating room too be grounded? Explain, in detail, the reasons for your answers.

Roll of Honor on Question No. 80.

The Roll of Honor was a reasonably difficult proposition since there were a number of replies that were essentially correct, and moreover accompanied by very good sketches.

I have, after considerable hesitation, selected the reply of Montreal, Canada, as best suited for publication, though no more correct than a number of other Roll of Honor replies.

The Roll of Honor on Question 80 is as follows: Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Tex.; W. C. Crawford, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Clarence E. Lawson, Cleveland, Tenn.; M. W. Lamour, Waco, Tex.; J. H. Hanson, Lubec, Me.; Baltimore, Md.; Chicago, Ill., two; Rufus R. Bliss, Park Falls, Wis.; A. T. Weiss, New Orleans, La.; John Solar, Watertown, N. Y.; Vernon Kidd, Victoria, British Columbia; P. Reg. Dey, Brandon, Manitoba; F. H. Williard, Marshalltown, Ia.; Montreal, Can., and G. R. Cameron, Tacoma, Wash.

I might mention incidentally that there are several on the roll of Honor who overlooked one point, viz: the fact that with two 110-v. rheostats connected in series on 220 volts there will be an overload on the rheostats. I might also say the replies in general brought forth a rather weird collection of ideas concerning resistance. For instance, one man, and an old operator, too, had two 25-ampere rheostats connected in multiple, with one single 25-ampere rheostat on either side of the multiple; that is to say, the first 25-ampere rheostat connected to the line from one of its binding posts, then from its other binding post to a multiple of two, and from the other side of the multiple to one binding post of the fourth rheostat, and from the other binding post of the fourth to the line—some connection. And that is only one of the quite some several remarkable ideas submitted. However, I honor these men for having at least made the attempt. When the right answer is published they will see wherein they failed, and they will remember it, too. I might say that many of these replies came from men whom I personally know are members of unions, and I am mighty glad to know that they are studying. It is never too late to learn, nor is it any disgrace to show your lack of knowledge if by so doing you can learn. I would cordially shake the hands of these men who sent in the replies I speak of. They may lack knowledge now, but they are studying, and in course of time they will overcome that defect, whereas the self-satisfied boob who goes around with his nose in the air, sustained by an ingrowing idea he knows it all, is not likely to get ahead very far.

Answer to Question No. 80.

By Montreal, Canada.

The Question: Show, in detail, how you would connect four 110-volt, 25-ampere, fixed rheostats so as to get approximately 60 amperes at the arc from a 110-volt D.C. supply. How would you connect two of them on 220-volts, and how many amperes would you get? Suppose you connected all four in series on 220 volts, how many amperes would you get? How would you connect all four on 220 volts so as to get about 25 amperes? Suppose you connected all four in series on 110 volts, what would you get? Illustrate the various connections with sketches.

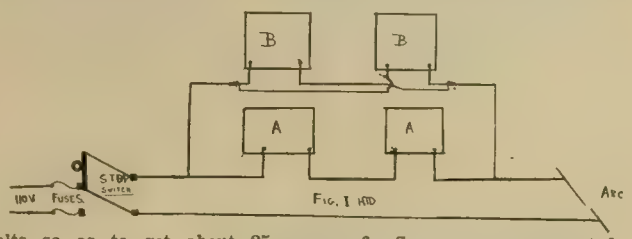

FIG. 1 HTD

The Answer: Considering question 80, as consisting of a series of questions, I will answer each separately.

(A) We would be obliged to connect our four rheostats in what is known as a series-multiple connection, as per Fig. 1. Following the rules for figuring rheostats in series we have, for a 25-ampere, 110-volt rheostat, as follows: Arc voltage 48, therefore (110-40) ÷ 25 = 2½ ohms, which is the resistance each rheostat offers. The arc resistance can only be approximated, since we would have to know the exact amperage which would flow in order to figure it, but, taking the amperage at 25, the capacity of one of the rheostats, we have 48 ÷ 25 = 2 ohms; therefore the total resistance of two of the rheostats in series with the arc would be 2½ + 2½ + 2 = 7 ohms, and 110 ÷ 7 = 15.7 amperes, which is the current delivery of the series connection. In addition to this we have the combined capacity of the two rheostats, viz: 25 + 25 = 50 amperes, so that the total would be 50 + 15.7 = 65.7

amperes at the arc, which is as close as one could get to 60 by using four of the rheostats. (You made one error here, Montreal. You knew the multiple would deliver 50 amperes at the arc, and, since the series would be working in conjunction with the multiple, you should, in figuring the resistance, have approximated your arc amperage at 50, plus about half of the normal capacity of one of the rheostats, or, say 63 amperes in all, which you will observe brings the arc resistance down to less than one ohm.—Ed.).

(B) Two rheostats should be connected in series as per Figure 2, and we would thus have 110 — 48 ÷ 25 = 2½ ohms in each rheostat, and 48 ÷ 25 = 2 ohms (approximately) in the arc, therefore the total resistance is 2½+ 2½ + 2 = 7 ohms, and 220 ÷ 7 = 31.4 amperes (approximately), which would be a heavier overload than it would be advisable to carry, but is as near to a working condition as we can get with two of the rheostats on 220.

(C) At B, Fig. 2, we have four rheostats connected in series on 220, therefore, having 2½ ohms resistance in one rheostat, we would, for the four, have 4 × 2½ = 10 ohms, plus the approximate 2 ohms in the arc, or a total of 12 ohms, and we would therefore have 220 ÷ 12 = 18.25 amperes at the arc.

(D) There would be no way of connecting all four in series to get 25 amperes: two in series gives us 31 and four approximately 19 amperes. You can, of course, cut out a part of the coils in one of the rheostats and by connecting the three and a portion of the fourth in series get the 25, but we must remember that such figures as have been given in this answer will vary in practice, since voltage itself is seldom constant.

(E) With four in series, as per Fig. 3, we would get 110 ÷ 12 = approximately 9 amperes.

Another Claimant.

C. B. Rubens & Brother, Joliet, Ill., says:

> Was surprised to see your article in Feb. 27 issue with regard to border projector attachment invented by A. J. Stone. We would call your attention to the fact that an identical at> tachment was invented by us, and was in actual use in local theater here (The Tavern, Joliet, Ill.), and in the Fox theater, Aurora, Ill., beginning March 17, 1911. Patent was applied for shortly thereafter. The border was used on St. Patrick's Day of that year, and was made up of a green background with shamrocks and harps. Enclosed find photograph showing attachment and method of adjustment, also blue print of illustration used in applying for patent. As patent is still pending we wish you would call Mr. Stone's attention to this matter, as our attorneys seem to be sure a patent will be granted, which would entail great and unnecessary expense to all concerned.

Well, this whole matter is up to your folks to fight out between you. According to the blue print, your method seems to be somewhat different from that of Stone's, but the difference consists mainly in the relative position of the mirror, slide carrier and condenser. The result would be essentially the same, and is accomplished by means of the same things, placed in different positions with relation to each other. I would publish the blue print, but a cut cannot be made from a blue print. I am not a patent attorney, and, therefore, don't know whether your device, neighbor Stone's and Schneider's overlap, from the patent point of view, or not.

Comes Back at Laemmle.

Brooklyn, N. Y. comes back at Laemmle with the following:

> Just read the article put forth by Carl Laemmle of the Universal. Before rapping the operators too hard they should first investigate their own exchanges, and see that only metal reels in good condition are sent out. I am not the only one who has had, and is having trouble with reels received from the exchanges. In fact some of them are in such bad shape that they cause the film to run off the upper sprocket. At times the film will be pulled tight by the crooked reel forming a brake, and then, being suddenly released, a large loop will form between the upper magazine and the large top roller of the Powers Six, then the reel will rub against the door again and stop, and when the loop is taken up the jerk is so heavy that at times the film will snap in two if it happens to occur where there is a patch. Other reels have screws so loose you can pick them out with the fingers. There is not a day I do not repair one or more reels of this kind. To sum this matter up, many of the metal reels from the Universal Exchange are in very bad shape—very bad indeed. Therefore it seems to me there is something for Brother Laemmle himself to get busy on, right in his own door-yard. I bought one of your first Handbooks and loaned it to another operator who liked it so well that I have never seen it since, so I purchased one of the new ones and am guarding it, metaphorically speaking, with two shot guns and a cannon. That is the way I feel about the Handbook. My employer is going to open one of the largest airdomes in the city at 61st Street and 5th Avenue, Brooklyn, using a Powers Six A with all improvements.

I am publishing this letter, not to take a slap at the Universal—by no means—but to call pointed attention to the fact that while what Pres. Laemmle said about the operator is unfortunately all too true, still, there are two sides to this proposition. Give the operator a chance to do perfect work, then if he don't do it I am with Laemmle to the finish in the application of drastic methods. I do know that it is the desire of all the heads of our large film concerns to co-operate towards improving conditions that are wrong and it undoubtedly is a case of incompetent help most of the time.

Film Patcher.

The Film Repair Company, Los Angeles, Cal., have forwarded a sample of their patcher with the following letter:

> We are admirers of the Moving Picture World and expect to be patrons in the future. A company in New York asked whether or not the "Beissel's Ideal Film Patcher" has been approved by the projection department. This patcher has just been placed on the market and we hasten to send complimentary sample by parcel post, which we believe you will consider cheap at the retail price of $2.50. We have mailed you a copy of the American Globe, oldest financial magazine in Los Angeles, which has investigated the repairer and the company. It goes without saying that we will appreciate anything you can do for us.

Now, what we would like to have this company explain is, what the American Globe, a financial magazine, knows about patching film. This part of the communication caused us a broad smile. We have carefully examined the device, and this is what it consists of: a little piece of poplar board, 4¼ inches wide by 8¼ inches long, neatly champered on its edges, with a 2-inch hole near its center, which can probably be had, in quantities, for, say, 3 cents each, but let us be liberal and put it at 5 cents. On top of this plate is the following: a nickel plated piece of metal about 1/32 of an inch thick and 3½x¾ in size, fastened to the block with four screws. On the underside of this plate is a flat steel spring, ⅝ inch wide by probably 2¾ inches long—I cannot see all of it. On top of the plate and hinged thereto is a little pressed metal tongue having two holes which fit down over two pegs placed in the aforesaid metal plate. Now, this metal part is every bit of it stamped work, and, after two or three simple dies are made, they can be turned out in quantities for very, very little.

The point I am getting at is this. This company proposes to sell to theater managers a device which, in the opinion of the editor of this department, ought to sell for not to exceed $1.50, and that would be, I should think, at least, six times its cost to manufacture in quantities.

But this is not the real meat of the kernel. I would not object so much to the $2.50 end of it, if the thing were well made, which it is not. The hinged part of the sample I have, which comes down on the plate and is presumed to supply pressure in making a patch, rests on the plate at one end and is mighty near 1/32 of an inch away at the other end. Now what earthly good would that be in making a patch? It would result in a good, tight patch on one side of the film, and a mighty loose one at the other. This little device is not a bad one, if it were properly constructed. It furnishes one thing that is badly needed, in that by placing the film in the second sprocket hole from the end, it supplies a perfectly straight edge to scrape against. That part is fine. Now if the Film Repair Company wants the approval of this department at a $2.50 selling price, they will have to add a pressure equalizer so that exactly the same amount of pressure will be supplied clear across the film. Apparently the makers of this article don't understand the proposition, that, in order to make a good film patch, considerable pressure must be supplied while the cement is drying or setting. If this company will change their device in such manner that a considerable and even amount of pressure will be supplied to the patch all the way across, we will then approve the thing and advise its purchase, even at $2.50, but we will not approve the device as it is now, at any selling price, because, while it would tend to improve one phase of splice making it would make matters worse in another direction, than they are at present.

Lacks Ingenuity.

Canada says:

> I have your Handbook, but it does not explain matters in full. Is there any set of books on sale to study before taking an examination for license to operate? In one place your book instructs how to set star and cam shafts when you have them parallel to start with, but how do you get them right when they are out of line?

My dear sir, the method of lining the cam shaft differs with different machines, and if you have not sufficient ingenuity and mechanical ability to do as simple a thing as that, then I am afraid you will never make a good operator. My Handbook is not intended as a book the novice can use to cram himself full of answers to questions for an examination, nor do I know of a book that can be used for that purpose; if I did I would not tell you of it. And there you are. You can get what you need out of the Handbook if you study and dig deep enough, and combine that study with practical experience, but when you do get it it will be in the shape of real information and knowledge, and not merely the parrot-like answer to a question.

A Kick on Carbons.

V. A. Barton, Baltimore, Maryland, says:

> I wish to register a complaint on our domestic carbons, the "National." I use ⅝ inch National on top and Bio on bottom, with 30 amperes from a G. E. mercury arc rectifier; Simplex machines. The first trouble is the light is more yellow than with the imported carbons; second, the spot has a very noticeable lack of definition; third, the binder does not consume at all, but peels off and drops away in large pieces, making considerable dirt in lamphouse, and whenever the binder peels off the arc will run around in a circle on the top carbon. You certainly must have some correspondence to look over in the course of a week, so I will not lengthen your work by writing more.

Yes, I do get a letter occasionally, that is a fact, but, nevertheless, that is what I am here for, and I manage to wade through it. I have had some very good reports on the National, and some not so good. Why use anything that does not give the very best results? It is immaterial whether domestic or imported, everything, in the long run, will have to stand on its own merit.

A Pleasant Time.

In response to an invitation from the editor the following New York operators gathered at his home at 1 A. M. Saturday, April 3rd, to witness a demonstration of light ray action through the optical system of a projector. I would like to have invited more, but unfortunately my home has its limits in the item of space, and believe me when twenty-one of us sat down to luncheon at 1.30 in the morning my dining room was almost full. As a matter of fact we had to chuck Fred Stoffragen, Joe Basson and one or two others under the table, or was it off in one corner? Anyway after putting the shoe stretcher in the table Mrs. R— could only seat eighteen, and Joe, Fred, and one or two others got put in a corner, like bad boys, and were supplied with such things as those at the main table did not happen to want.

The boys left at 4 A. M., expressing themselves as exceedingly well satisfied with what they had seen, and I think they went home with the idea that perhaps there were more things to be learned about the optical system of a projector than they had imagined. Here is a list of guests.

Joseph D. Basson, Standard Motion Picture Machine Company; Walter Pickert, Strand Theater; Fred Nordstrom, chief operator New York Hippodrome; Leslie Reed, New York Hippodrome; Ivan W. Bowen, Astor Theater; Lester W. Bowen, chief operator Strand Theater; William D. Burroughs, Renfax Musical Pictures; Jack Carlin, Halsey Theater, Brooklyn; I. C. Conway, Star Theater, Broklyn; Joseph A. Crehan, Liberty Theater; Gus. Herschoff, Crescent Theater; J. C. Kroesen, Renfax M. P. Company; Arthur A. Lewis, "Cabiria" Road Show; Alfred Myers, Cumberland Theater, Brooklyn; Frank E. Nealy, Kinemacolor Company; Albert Nieter, Crescent Theater; Fred M. Stoffragen, Sec.-Treas. Local 306, I. A. T. S. E.; Phil Glaser, Duffield Theater, Brooklyn; Robert Millstein, Fifth Avenue Theater, Brooklyn, and John Griffiths, Pastime Theater, Ansonia, Conn.

It Is Not.

W. L. Keyser, Iowa City, Iowa, says:—

> Will you kindly inform me, through the department, whether it is the duty of the operator to inspect and repair the day's run of film? I contend it is not. As I understand it, it is only up to the operator as a matter of pride in doing his work well. I have inspected films from fifteen minutes to five hours, and always do inspect my day's run. The other fellow contends that any old film that comes to the house, even those put out by big concerns to advertise their line of goods, should be inspected and repaired by the operator without extra pay. Now one more question. What is the reason for the condition of the sprocket holes of the enclosed samples? We run Mutual program, and in the last three weeks have bumped into this same thing in four different brands of film, viz: American, Princess, Thanhouser, and Domino, the larger piece of the two is the Domino, and the smaller the Thanhouser. By-the-way, I have both editions of your Handbook, and they certainly are fine.

Most emphatically by no stretch of the imagination, can it be called the duty of the operator to inspect and repair films. Under present conditions, however, due to the failure of theater managers to demand films in good condition and refuse to pay for those in poor condition, the operator who has any pride at all in his work is compelled to do the work of the film exchange inspector, but it is nothing more or less than an outrage and an imposition. I believe that operators' unions will do well to include in their agreement clause taking care of this particular proposition, and stipulating that if the operator finds it necessary to inspect his films in order to put on high class projection he shall be paid over-time for the time thus expended.

As to the film samples, it is the fault of the perforator. I have sent the samples to the Mutual, with a suggestion that it might be well to examine into their perforator's performance.

New Office.

The National Waterproof Film Company desires to announce, through the department, to the trade in general, that they have opened a new office at 19 South La Salle Street, in the center of Chicago's business district. New officers have been elected as follows: Benjamin W. Beadell, president; Ray Palmer, vice-president, and Charles W. Carroll, secretary and treasurer. Comment unnecessary. The National Waterproof people have been doing business for a matter of five years and ought by this time to be fairly well known.

It Is Funny How Things Happen.

G. M. Miller, Fernie, British Columbia, writes:

> Noticed some time ago in the department—yes, of course I read it—someone wanted information regarding extinguishers for film fires. Here is a stunt I have had fixed up, though yet untried, for four years. I keep a pyrene gun hanging right by my machine, and in the top magazine have made a hole just the size of the nozzle of the gun. In case of fire, which generally happens in the top magazine, the nozzle can be inserted and the fire extinguished without opening the magazine door. This hole is located in the top back side.
> Have you ever noticed that in threading a Powers SixA; when the cross line between pictures on the film is exactly level with the top mechanism, the film will be in frame at the aperture? After I put on a loop setter I had a little trouble with the film running off the lower sprocket, and found it was due to the idler spring being too weak, so that when the loop setter got busy it pulled the idler up enough to let the film run off. Here is hoping you will get that condenser problem worked out satisfactorily.

Now is it not strange! This is the first time an operator or exhibitor has mentioned pyrene, yet only two days ago I dictated an article in which I recommended identically the same scheme Brother Miller has described, except that I proposed a hole ⅝ of an inch in diameter be made in the door of the magazine, so that it would be on the operating side, and that it be covered with a sliding metal shield. Great minds certainly do run in the same direction! The article in question will probably be published before this is, though maybe not.

As to the weak spring, that is a good point for operators to take note of when they are using a loop setter. That matter of threading the six in frame in the manner suggested has been up before, though not for quite a while. It simplifies threading in frame if the operator, regardless of what machine he has, will note exactly where the dividing line of the picture comes in order to bring the picture in frame at the aperture and mark that point,—always assuming he has sufficient light to see the dividing line in a dark film, which is not always the case.

Nope. Guess I Don't.

Burt Martin, Castle Gate, Utah, arises to make the following remarks:

> Yes, I read the department, and have noticed where you used to be on the road. I wonder whether or not you and I have the honor of each other's acquaintance. I was proprietor and manager of the Eden Musee, St. Joe, Mo., up to 1898. I believe I am about the oldest operator now working at the crank. (Fireworks from Brother Reed.—Ed.). Bought my first machine, an Edison Exhibition 703, November 1899, and am still at it.

Brother Martin then goes on to say that the Utah Fuel Company, which has many large coal camps, wants information concerning educational films and that he has referred them to this department as the proper source of information. No, I don't believe I had the pleasure, Friend Martin, though I have been in St. Joe quite some several times, and I have been in that old musee too, but I was at that time busily engaged heaving coal into the fire box of a locomotive on the then Hannibal and St. Joe, which has since become a part and parcel of the Burlington Route. I have referred your inquiry regarding the Handbook you paid for and have not received to the proper department, and we will see that you get it. I will be glad to supply the needed information concerning educational film as soon as I hear from your company.

Wants Advice.

R. A. Osborne, Lumberton, North Carolina, writes:

> I want some advice. This, the "Star Theater," is situated in a one-horse town, naturally, therefore, we cannot call it a first class house. The juice is 220 D. C., and I am using two Powers 110 volt rheostats in series, with fairly good results, though the current bill runs very high. When I have the first rheostat cut out, and the second one half way, I get a good light, but beyond this it will not burn steadily. We have a 100 foot throw with a Powers Six machine and an old style lamp and lamphouse. If I set the top carbon back, as the Handbook says, I cannot get a steady light, although the carbon arms are in perfect line. I have been in the profession now for three years. Am a member of Local 614, and was its president before I came here. Have just read Kansas City's letter. Think I can beat him on the size of operating room. The last eighteen months I have been operating two Powers SixA motor driven machines, single handed, ten hours a day. The owner of the show also runs a vaudeville house and the chief works there. In this operating room (?) there was just space for two machines and a rewind; it was barely deep enough to allow me to squeeze back of the lamphouse and get to the front machine. It was situated right inside the theater and there was no ventilation. The heat in summer varied from 110 to 115 degrees every day. If Kansas City can beat that I feel sorry for him.

Say, man, what are you talking about? You say you have two 110 V. rheostats working in series on 220 volts, and that when you have the first rheostat cut out and half of the second one cut out you get a good light. Mother of Moses! my dear boy, I should think you would! but the remaining half of that rheostat would last about as long as a small snow ball in the center of the dominions of his Satanic Majesty. It would get considerably hotter than that misnamed operating room you are talking about. It would last possibly about one minute, and then the whole thing would go blooey. Something wrong with that dope. The thing, as you set it forth, is impossible. Yes, the juice bill will run mighty high, because you are using approximately watts equal to amperes times 48 at the arc, and wasting in resistance ampere times 220—48. You had better get a D. C. compens-arc. Send me the marking, if any, on your rheostat and sketch how you have them connected. Later: He has two adjustable rheostats and meant "when I have one cut clear down and the other half way."

Handbook Rules Correct.

Montreal, Canada, says:

> Certain experiments made recently with rheostats have proven conclusively that the rules laid down in the Handbook are correct. For instance: with two coil rheostats in series, we got, on the low notch 15 amperes, and on the high notch 22 amperes. By rules on Page 124 of the Handbook we should get 15 and 21.6 amperes.

Much obliged for the corroborative evidence. Of course, we already knew the rules were correct. Sure we did! huh! (business of swelling up). But we are glad to have it proven over again.

A Streak of Canary.

G. D. Bullock, Gallup, New Mexico, says:

Here are two bits for the new question book. I also want to get a little weight off my chest as follows: Referring to remarks of T. E. Anderson, I. C. S. E. E., N. Y. U. E. E., etc., etc., of St. Paul, Minn., February 20th issue, if that gentleman has not recovered from the effects of that degree in thirteen years, discovered that looking forward, alive to everything new in the game, aiming at achievement and serving the public to the best of his ability, and not a college degree, is the royal road to success, it is high time he wound the alarm clock, set it to go off in thirty seconds, and let it ring, for he sure needs waking up. Four of my acquaintances were graduated from Purdue, which is, I think, the finest electrical school in the United States. Each wrote his thesis and received his degree of E. E. This is where they stood the last I heard of them. (1) Superintendent of construction, Panama Canal; (2) Locomotive fireman, Pennsylvania Company; (3) substation operator, Gary, Ind.; (4) Idle; discharged by an automobile company in Detroit where he had been employed in wiring cars. I merely cite this in proof that a degree does not necessarily make a Steinmetz of a man. And now a word direct with the wiseone: I notice, Mr. Anderson, you are an I. C. S. graduate. If you have completed that course, shake, I admire you for it. There is another I would like to advise you to take, which I guarantee will give you your money's worth. It is Sheldon's Business Building, the best antidote for an enlarged cranium I have ever had the pleasure of taking a dose of. If you are influenced by my recommendation, when you get to the book on "Thinking," and the topic "Judgment," look back at your letter in the department and roast yourself for the number of important factors you failed to consider in that incomplete, prejudiced judgment of yours. The Handbook and the projection department are written for progressive men, who are giving the public their best efforts on the screen; aiming always to better their results, and glad at all times to co-operate with their fellows, swapping ideas, instead of keeping their discoveries secret, in the fear that somebody will beat them to their job. And that is the idea that spells progress. Each of us is receiving the other fellow's experience without having to grind it all out in the hard mill of experience; also that is exactly what you got in college, and it is the idea on which the institution of electrical engineers is based. You and I, who gloat over some fine spun theory for an hour or so, dissecting it into the minutest details, are inclined to pick the Handbook to pieces for minor errors, and when Mr. Richardson says the current "flows," whereas we are convinced that it is propagated by molecular induction, we throw the book aside, instead of giving it our thorough interested attention, and write him it is not worth the paper it is written on, but the lad who wants to put a picture on the screen that will make the manager break the world's record in the standard broad grin: the kind our friend from Peoria says makes the audience forget there is a man behind the observation port, will seize that current-flows idea (and you will admit, I am sure, that it is the easiest theory for the average man to understand) and make good. And that was what the book was written for.

The greatest teachers in the world are those who can strip a technical subject of its fine technicalities and bring out the facts in such way that the novice can understand it. Mr. Richardson was broad enough to get that viewpoint, and that book was not written for you alone, Mr. Technical Man, but for the lad rewinding films somewhere in a hot, ill-ventilated coop, working and sweating with an ambition to some day achieve a trade or profession, and become an operator. And it was written so that that poor boy could understand it if he applied himself to study, as well as the oldest man who ever cussed the lower loop. And he, not you, is the one who is most likely to pay interest on the investment with a good, live suggestion. And now, Mr. Anderson, I am going to pull a bluff on you, and if you don't call it you have got a streak of yellow down your back as wide as an admiral's bar. Answer the next fifteen questions published, one each week, in the projection department, and we will see how many times your answer is published. A wise man like you ought to get his article published every week, and you can be certain of a square deal from Mr. Richardson, who is simply looking for the best he can get to help us poor mutts along.

Referring to Mr. C. A. Borgon's question regarding mercury vapor tubes: in 1913 there was a company which bought old tubes and remodeled them. I do not remember the name, nor do I know if they are still in business, but I believe he can find out by writing C. B. Gallagher, of Illinois Central R. R., Memphis, Tenn.

I am building a new take-up, which I believe will at least take up 5,000 feet of film with uniform tension at all times. I am not going to let the department fans in on it until I have given it a thorough trial, whereupon I will throw it on their tender mercies and let them write my epitaph.

Well! I really don't feel it is up to me to comment on Brother Bullock's letter, but I know this: I have been writing for a good many years. I sold one story to the Frank H. Munsey Company for $980, and a great many stories for a less sum. I have something of a reputation as an off-hand roaster, and some reputation in other departments of literature, but I don't believe I could set forth more good, hard, rock-bottom facts in less words than Friend Bullock has in his letter. Anderson did not give his street address. I don't know whether or not he gave his right name, but anyhow I think after reading Brother Bullock's letter he would feel inclined to sit down and hold a little heart to heart communion with himself, and arise with a fixed idea that he came pretty close to making an ass of himself. I second Friend Bullock's invitation to the gentlemen to answer the next fifteen questions, and if he fears he won't get a fair deal I am willing to submit my selection for publication and the Roll of Honor, together with all the answers, to any one in New York City he may select.

As to the tube matter, I don't think I would advise the remodeling of tubes. Mind you, I don't know but what it would work out all right, but I am skeptical. If any one knows of a company who does this sort of work I would be glad to have their address.

Good Projection.

O. E. Wilson, writes from Indianapolis, Indiana, as follows:

I am at present a salesman, but have been an operator, consequently am a follower of the department. My spare time is usually taken up with visits to picture shows. Some days since, while in Terre Haute, Indiana, I visited several theaters. Naturally, being a stranger, I was attracted by the best "front," and that was the "American," showing Paramount features; a beautiful house both inside and out. The operator maintained a fair light, but on one machine the picture was out of focus in the center, the screen was badly wrinkled on one side, and the entire show was run at the rate of twelve minutes per reel, which of course, utterly ruined it. At the "Varieties," using General Service, there was plenty of room for better projection. This house shows four reels for five cents. Further down the street I was attracted by the display of the Kriterion posters, and, being desirous of seeing this new brand of pictures. I visited the "Fountain." Three reels for five cents was the programme, and it was here I saw the best exhibition of the operator's art I have ever witnessed, and I have seen some, too, let me tell you. The entire three reels were exceptionally bright and clear. The speed of the machine was in absolute synchronism with the action of the film, which I hold is necessary to good projection. The operator was handicapped by only having one machine, but by the use of large reels he only had one "Just a Moment" (which by-the-way should have read just a fraction of a minute for he certainly was a lightning change artist) slide on the screen. I did not see the operator, but learned his name was Steinhouser, and I am a firm believer in the old adage: "Place credit where credit is due." I am one who is willing to pay for good pictures well projected, and I hope this department will continue its fight to that end.

My compliments to you my good Irish friend, Brother Steinhouser. May his tribe increase. That is the kind of report that pleases yours truly. I would suggest that the operators at the "American" and the "Varieties" take a lesson from Friend Steinhouser's performances, and mend their ways.

New Scheme.

C. A. Emme, Masontown, West Virginia, says:

Here is where I break the ice and get into the limelight—or the waste basket. To my way of thinking, the department, its editor and his Handbooks, have done more for moving picture people, operators especially, than all other sources of information put together. I have had a good many years' experience as operator, and a few as owner and manager, (am manager of the Empress Theater now) and have discovered that when a man's head becomes swelled so much that he cannot learn anything from the above named sources, his case is hopeless and he has no business in an operating room. And now here is a mighty good screen for little money. Take plain white oil cloth and stretch it on wall, or other similar support of sufficient size for screen. Then take ⅝ x 3 or 4 inch soft wood strips, and lay them flat all the way around the oil cloth; nail them, of course. Next get the finest white muslin obtainable and have it sewed into a sheet large enough so that you can stretch and tack the same over the oil cloth to make the surface of the screen, the same to be tacked to the wood supports. You can either tack the oilcloth or paste it to the wall. Do the job right and it will take a mirror screen to beat it.

Well, I am not at all certain but there is considerable in this particular scheme. It strikes me one might get fairly good results by such a plan, and still better results by coating plaster or cloth with aluminum paint polished as highly as possible, and then stretching very thin, fine, high-grade muslin over it, removing say one quarter from the surface. I am not quite certain how this thing would work, but for small town houses, which cannot afford to buy one of the high-grade projection surfaces, it might be worth a tryout.

OPERATORS Are you perfectly satisfied with the results you get on the screen?

Comments on the Films

General Film Company

A MUCH NEEDED LESSON (Biograph), May 10.—Rea Martin, Irma Dawkins, Gus Pixley and Jack Mulhall are the quartet of players utilized in this one-reel comedy. The subject is a domestic one, a young wife being taught the folly of unreasoning jealousy. An average good photoplay, very well acted.

HOME COMING (Essanay), May 10.—Another pleasant little romance, the author of it being I. A. R. Wylie. The famous German tenor, who finds his boyhood sweetheart poor and ill in America and keeps faith with her, is well played by Bryant Washburn. Nell Craig is an attractive Gretchen. One reel.

THE STRENGTH OF LOVE ("Road o' Strife" Series, No. 6) (Lubin), May 10.—The death of Abner Gray is the big dramatic happening in this number of the Emmett Campbell Hall serial. Other exciting incidents take place at the old mill, where Alene and Robert Dane nearly lose their lives, and Clara Delane is shown to be one of the most desperate women that ever furnished strong scenes for a photoplay.

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL No. 37, 1915 (Selig), May 10.—The launching of Alexander Smith Cochran's yacht at Neponset, Mass., is the first picture shown. Germans honoring Bismarck at Berlin, Suffragette parade in Philadelphia, Wellesley College girls rowing, "Uncle" Joe Cannon at the Panama-Pacific Exposition, Lord Wimborne, the new Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, at Dublin Castle; Girl Pioneers at Kissena Lake, N. Y.; war pictures and the latest styles are also shown.

THE JARRS VISIT ARCADIA (The Jarr Family Series, No. 6) (Vitagraph), May 10.—The perils of night life in a small town are set forth in all their alluring and reckless abandon, when Mr. and Mrs. Jarr accept the invitation of a suburbanite to visit his home. A one-reeler, filled with fun. Harry Davenport and Rose Tapley still contribute their clever impersonations of the Jarrs.

AN INNOCENT THIEF (Edison), May 11.—Olive B. Harms has made a pleasant little romance of this one-reel comedy. The pretty young girl from the country, her haughty rival and the discerning millionaire are all in the story, which comes out just right. Bessie Learn makes a most engaging country mouse, and Olive Templeton and Augustus Phillips are excellent as the remaining sides of the triangle.

RUSHING THE LUNCH COUNTER (Kalem), May 11.—The joys of dining at a railroad lunch counter are broadly burlesqued in this one-reel "Ham" comedy. Lloyd Hamilton and Bud Duncan obtain jobs as waiters and the finish of the film is a large sized and enthusiastic riot. A good "rough house" comedy.

WHO STOLE THE DOGGIES (Lubin), May 11.—A "hot" sausage farce in which all the characters get on the trail of a string of stolen weiners and follow the scent until the culprit is caught. Will be found amusing by many people. Frances NeMoyer, Babe Hardy and Harry Loraine have the leading roles. Half reel.

A HOT TIME IN PUNKVILLE (Lubin), May 11.—A very funny cartoon comedy by Stewart Whitman. On the same reel with "Who Stole the Doggies."

NEARLY A SCANDAL (Edison), May 12.—This one-reel "comic" has one of the best plots ever seen in a photofarce. It is absolutely unforced and admits of no end of fun. J. E. Hungerford deserves honorable mention for his authorship and has been ably aided and abetted by William Wadsworth, Arthur Housman, Jessie Stevens and Caroline Rankin.

THE FABLE OF "THE HIGHROLLER AND THE BUZZING BLONDINE" (Essanay), May 12.—That eminent moralist and shrewd observer, George Ade, has told the experience of many a gay young spender in this one-reel of wise comedy. As usual, the sub-titles are more than half of the enjoyment. Bryant Washburn, Leota Chrider and Ruth Stonehouse realize perfectly their respective types.

THE LAST OF THE STILLS (Selig), May 12.—Moonshine whiskey, revenue officers and love all assist in making this one-reel drama interesting. The moonshiner's pretty daughter and the chap from the city are the central figures of the romance, and are nicely played by Virginia Kirtley and Robyn Adair.

WHEN A FELLER'S NOSE IS OUT OF JOINT (Vitagraph), May 12.—This juvenile drama, with Bobby Connelly in the leading part, is wholly delightful. It's all so "just like a boy," and Bobby is so natural and lovable that it will be hugely relished by big folk and little.

THE SHERIFF'S STORY (Biograph), May 13.—The climax of this one-reel drama is of great power, and is made doubly effective by the acting of Walter Coyle. The story will touch the heart of every audience. Joseph McDermott, Ivan Christy and Mary Malatesta are also in the cast.

SWEEDIE IN VAUDEVILLE (Essanay), May 13.—Sweedie's attempt to break into vaudeville results in a generous display of the Wallace Beery brand of broad humor. Arthur Bates and Edmund Thompson are prominent in the ex-scrublady's support.

THE TROUBLE MAKER (MinA), May 13.—Harry La Pearl is the principal fun-maker in this half-reel farce. The offering follows the MinA policy of careful production, and is good for any number of laughs.

DOCTOR MONKO (MinA),— May 13.—A cartoon comedy that fairly bulges at the sides with humor. Ladies will laugh at it, children roar, and the men grin. On the same reel with "The Trouble Maker."

HEARST-SELIG NEWS PICTORIAL No. 38, 1915 (Selig), May 13.—Launching the Destroyer Tucker, at Quincy, Mass., leads the news items. The arrival of the Maharajah of Kaperthala; planting mines in San Francisco harbor, parade of the Veteran Artillery Corps in New York, sailing of School Ship Newport on 15,507-mile cruise, May Day frolic at the Panama-Pacific Exposition, war pictures, views of the Lusitania, and the arrival at New York of the U. S. fleet, led by the Wyoming, are other important events.

TO SAVE HIM FOR HIS WIFE (Vitagraph), May 13.—L. G. White's one-reel comedy is capital. It has an air of freshness and sincerity that makes it very enjoyable. Lillian Walker is charming in the star role, and Evart Overton, Billy Bletcher and Lillian Burns ably second her efforts.

THE LITTLE SCAPEGOAT (Biograph), May 14.—Another version of the always diverting Cinderella story is found in this one-reel drama. The characters are all our fellow countrymen, but the heroine marries her prince—an American Money Prince, and that's the best kind. Irma Dawkins makes a pretty princess, Gus Pixley a faithful retainer and Jack Mulhall a manly prince.

THE OTHER GIRL (Essanay), May 14.—G. M. Anderson makes it clear in this one-reel drama that an artist's occupation may be more dangerous than that of a cowboy. The big situation, where he is struck by a falling tree, is uncommonly realistic. "The Other Girl" makes an interesting little drama, and is well played by Mr. Anderson, Marguerite Clayton, Ethel Wallace and Lee Willard.

WHAT MONEY WILL DO (Lubin), May 14.—Will M. Ritchey's one-reel drama has genuine power. It does not paint humanity in anything like flattering colors, but there is no doubt of the truth that pervades its theme. Marvin Mayo, Dolly Larkin, Webster Campbell and the rest of the cast give an effective performance.

A MATRIMONIAL BOOMERANG (Selig), May 14.—This one-reel drama never has happened and never will happen, but it's entertaining romance, for all that. Tom Mix, as a cowboy hero, and Louella Maxam, as a pretty schoolmarm, take good care of the love interest, and there's plenty of excitement besides.

THE PROFESSOR'S PAINLESS CURE (Vitagraph), May 14.—This one-reel comedy by William Addison Lathrop is vastly amusing and has a sharp dig at the dancing craze, as an "added attraction." Sidney Drew's characterization of the absent-minded professor is among his best efforts, and he is followed closely by Mrs. Sidney Drew as his wife in the play.

THE ORIENTAL RUBY (Biograph), May 15.—A vigorous little melodrama in one reel, which will please those who relish a mystery and plenty of sensation. Chas. Perley and Augusta Anderson have the leading roles.

HIS PEASANT PRINCESS (Edison), May 15.—An echo of "The Prisoner of Zenda" school of drama is found in this one-reel photoplay by William B. Pearson. The heir to the throne of Rodenkurst is a most democratic young chap, who packs his own bag, treats a waitress with amazing condescension and permits members of his father's court to stride out of a room ahead of him. However, he marries his Peasant Princess at the finish. Thomas MacEvoy and Margaret Prussing are the high contracting parties of the romance.

A FIEND AT THE THROTTLE (Kalem), May 15.—A real red-blooded thrill takes place in this railroad drama, when the handcar upon which the heroine is riding is run down by a locomotive. The story is an exciting one all through, and Elsie McLeod is an excellent substitute for Helen Holmes as the heroine.

THE SUBSTITUTE (Lubin), May 15.—This is the photoplay in which Billy Reeves, well known in vaudeville as "The Drunk" of "A Night in a Music Hall," makes his moving picture debut. Mr. Reeves' method will become better adapted to his new line of work as time goes on and he learns to make the most of his undoubted comic gifts. The prize fight finish is by far the best thing on the present film.

General Film Company Specials.

HER PROPER PLACE (Edison), May 10.—Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison on page 741, issue of May 1.

A SISTER'S BURDEN (Kalem), May 10.—Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson on page 916, issue of May 8.

THE INGRATITUDE OF LIZ TAYLOR (Selig), May 10.—Maibelle Heikes Justice has injected a deal of honest and appealing human nature into her two-reel comedy-drama. Jimmie, the newsboy, and Liz Taylor are very real characters, and the serious side of the story is relieved by a rich vein of humor. Vivian Reed is an earnest and attractive Liz, and Roland Sharp does Jimmie to the life. Guy Oliver, Eugenie Besserer and Roy Clark are well cast.

MEANS AND MORALS (Essanay), May 11.—The low wage question is given forcible illustration in this two-reel drama by H. S. Sheldon. The story takes a firm hold on the attention, and is among the things that have happened more than once in all large cities. Edna Mayo and Bryant Washburn have the leading roles, and Peggy Sweeney is also a member of the cast. High grade acting is the result.

THE GIRL WHO MIGHT HAVE BEEN (Vitagraph), May 11.—Reviewed by Lynde Denig on page 928, issue of May 8.

SCOTTY WEED'S ALIBI (Episode No. 12 of "The Girl Detective" Series) (Kalem), May 12.—A masque ball furnishes a brilliant background for the main incidents in this two-reel contribution to the crime hunts of the Girl Detective. The recovery of a diamond tiara is accomplished in an ingenious manner and the usual lively action and thrills keep the interest at the proper pitch. Cleo Ridgeley is retained as Jean and fully merits the position.

WHO BEARS MALICE (Lubin), May 12.—Primitive passions and men and women of the backwoods are dealt with in this two-reel drama by Elizabeth R. Carpenter. There is vigor of action all through the play, the hero and the "heavy" indulging in not less than three desperate battles. It is all honest, clean-minded melodrama, however. Edgar Jones, as usual, has shown marked ability, both as producer and actor. Justina Huff and Louis Mortelle are also excellently cast.

THE GRAY HORROR (Lubin), May 13.—There is one situation in Shannon Fife's three-reel drama that is sheer nonsense: the manner in which Parr, at the transom, spys upon the expert criminal. The play will prove interesting to those who love a mystery, and, after the opening episode, is skillfully developed. Joseph W. Smiley does a convincing piece of character work as the fear-haunted Ellis. John Smiley and Lilie Leslie are well cast.

THE BLACK RING (Kalem), May 14.—Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson on page 1092, issue of May 15.

THE STRUGGLE UPWARD (Edison), May 14.—Several of the situations in this two-reel drama by Harold G. Files put a severe strain upon a spectator's credulity, and the character of Philip Atwood, the arch-crook who poses as a mission worker, seems a creation of a dramatist bent solely on manufacturing thrills. There is no denying theatric value and continuous action to the photoplay, however. Margaret Prussing lends her fine womanliness and convincing art to the character of Helen Turner. Herbert Prior carries out the author's conception of Atwood, and Pat O'Malley is an equally good Jack Morton.

THE AWAKENING HOUR (Essanay), May 15.—A three-reel drama based upon a young girl's struggles before she realizes her ambition to become a famous actress. The story is well-told, and gives a reasonably truthful picture of life "behind the curtain." Joseph Byron Totten, as an eminent star, and Nell Craig, as the aspiring young girl, are a credit to the actor's profession.

THE VALLEY OF HUMILIATION (Vitagraph), May 15.—A human, self-respecting two-reel drama that goes beneath the surface of things, and tells of a woman's fight for love and happiness, with earnestness and truth. Josephine Lawrence is to be congratulated and, it is hoped, asked to keep on writing more such dramas. Eleanor Blevens does justice to the title role, and Alfred Vosburg realizes fully the character of Jim Aberdeen. Producer Ulysses Davis has been equally successful with his portion of the work.

Mutual Film Corporation.

A HUMAN HOUND'S TRIUMPH (Keystone), May 8.—Ambrose, Sly Fritz and others disport themselves in this number, the latter being a man detective disguised as a woman. The opening scenes are guite slow, but the finish is a rousing one and sure to bring much laughter.

CROSSED LOVE AND SWORDS (Keystone), May 10.—A social dance breaks up in a rough house, the rivals quarreling over Louise and her dog. One of them sets it adrift on the lake. This starts things moving. A low comedy number containing a lot of laughable nonsense.

FERDIE FINK'S FLIRTATIONS (Falstaff), May 14.—This yarn, in which Riley Chamberlain appears as an old flirt trying to find a wife after years of trifling, has a good idea in it. Some of the latter scenes suffer from padding and the story should have had more incidents or have been told in shorter space. It seems drawn out as it stands.

MIKE'S ELOPEMENT (Reliance), May 14.—A juvenile comedy number, with Harold Gordon and Violet Wilkie playing the parts of two runaway children. They meet with some gypsies and numerous adventures before returning home. The photography is very good and the yarn contains a fair amount of entertainment.

ETHEL'S ROMANCE (Komic), May 16.—No. 23 of the "Bill" Series. Ethel's beau assists a lady autoist in mending her car. She becomes jealous and Bill dreams that he has won her heart. The number is characteristic and pleasing. The photography is very good.

WHEN CAMERON PASSED BY (Reliance), May 17.—An adventure yarn, well pictured and nicely put on with William Williams and Gladdie McDonald in the leads. The young men, riding casually past an old house, sees a girl in danger of a forced marriage. He impersonates a minister and rescues her. This holds the interest well.

NAUGHTY HENRIETTA (Beauty), May 18.—This is an exceptionally pretty little comedy in which Henrietta, through her persistence in sending each month for six months a calendar with her picture pasted on it to a bachelor man whom she intends shall fall in love with her and all in spite of the fact that she has never been formally introduced to him.

THE ELECTRIC ALARM (Majestic), May 18.—An interesting one-reel drama wherein a young electrical engineer completes the circuit on an electric fire alarm with his own body to save the train on which his sweetheart and her mother are travelling from being wrecked from the menace of a burning bridge. The picture has been effectively produced, although it is possible that the idea is rather far-fetched.

AT THE EDGE OF THINGS (American), May 19.—This is a drama that will please the average audience. It contains the story of a man who invested all his money in the stock market and is threatened with financial ruin, and his wife, who, learning the circumstances, endeavors in vain to get help for him from her father. The man is about to end his life, in the belief that his wife has deserted him in his hour of need, is deterred by a safe robber in the shape of his own butler, who, also having money invested in the apparently worthless stock, has decided to steal from his master to make good his own financial position. Vivian Rich and David Lythgoe play the leads.

GRIGLEY'S WIFE (Reliance), May 19.—A Western story of considerable interest, which treats of how a wife in the absence of her husband foolishly allows another man to pay her attention. She receives an insult from him, and surprises us by holding him up at the point of a revolver when he dares to enter her home at midnight. Her husband, apprised of the dangerous position in which his wife has placed herself, has returned home and in hiding is a witness to his wife's virtuous act.

THE HOUSE THAT JACK MOVED (Falstaff), May 21.—The plot of this is unique and fresh, though light in subject matter. A young candidate for mayor foils a plan to declare his home outside corporate limits by moving the house. The girl holds the conspirators while the house is being moved. Arthur Ashley and Mignon Anderson play the lovers. A good little yarn.

THE REFUGEE (Thanhouser), May 21.—A pretty little story of a Belgian refugee, with a touch of pathos in it. An American girl, returning home, discovers a stowaway in her cabin. It turns out to be a Belgian boy, whom she then takes in her own charge. This makes a nice appeal.

DAUGHTERS OF KINGS (Thanhouser), May 23.—A delicate comedy plot, with Marguerite Snow, Harry Benham and others in the cast. The characterizations are not entirely convincing, but the yarn is pleasing. An American girl exchanges places with a princess and palms herself off on an English fortune-hunter, as a joke.

OH, BABY! (Royal), May 29.—This is rather a good comedy based on a subject that has been picturized many times. An accidental exchange of babies is the theme that has been worked into a quite enjoyable one-reel comedy.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials.

ADDED FUEL (Reliance), May 15.—A sensational story into which has been drawn the newspaper and the detective element. The production has been made in two reels and is thoroughly interesting and well-staged. Irene Hunt plays the feminine lead in the role of a reporter. At the murder of her father by the butler, her brother is arrested for the crime, but through her persistent efforts the butler is caught and tricked into confessing.

AT THE STROKE OF THE ANGELUS (Majestic), May 16.—Francelia Billington and Charles Clary are featured in this two-reel production, which is moderately interesting. It is the story of a child, the only remaining one of the occupants of a prairie schooner crossing the desert and who was rescued by a Mexican bandit. Later the girl, grown to womanhood, falls in love with a man whom she learns is falsely her father. The truth learned, the marriage ceremony is performed. The story has been artistically developed in many ways.

THE GREATER STRENGTH (American), May 17.—Edward Coxen and Winnifred Greenwood are the leading players in this two-reel production, with George Field as the heavy. The picture is well made and holds the interest every inch of the way. The story is of a young doctor, who, having crippled his friend unintentionally in a wrestling match, goes West in answer to an advertisement for a doctor at a mining camp. Here he carries out his resolve to use his strength to save life rather than to destroy it.

THE HURON CONVERTS (Reliance), May 22.—A two-reel Indian picture, demonstrating how the Jesuit missionaries brought the Christian faith to the redskins in America's early history. The cast includes Joseph Henabery, Bessie Buskirk, H. Moody and Dark Cloud. The scenes are picturesque and pleasing and the incidents adhere to Indian traditions and superstitions. The most exciting scene is that in which the priest and his Indian assistant escape burning at the stake. This is an entertaining production of its type.

SHORTY'S TROUBLE SLEEP (Broncho), May 26.—Another number in two reels featuring Jack Hamilton as the cowboy, Shorty. This is a worthy successor of other numbers featuring this character. It abounds in humor and thrills. The pool room scene is very funny and Shorty's gun fight with the bandits later is also very good. He holds them off till the girl gets the gold bullion to safety. A very successful Western offering.

HOSTAGE OF THE NORTH (Domino), May 27.—A strong two-reel number, featuring Walter Edwards, Leona Hutton and others. Mr. Edwards plays the part of old Dan, an Alaska miner, who gives up his hoarded gold so the widow and her child may come back to the states and live happily. This action is taken after the widow stole the gold and then replaced it in a fit of remorse. The atmosphere of the production suggests Alaska very strongly and the story works up to a very effective close. A good offering of its type.

HER EASTER HAT (Kaybee), May 28.—A two-reel number, telling a pathetic story of a girl's effort to buy an Easter hat. Her father will not let her keep it. Later she defends the house from robbery at the risk of her life. She is injured and the father buys her the hat because of her brave deed. Her lover, who has been flirting with another, also returns to her. A simple story, but one that works up to a good close. Estelle Allen, George Fisher, Margaret Thompson and others appear in the cast.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

FANCHON, THE CRICKET (Famous Players), May 10.—Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush on page 1276, issue of May 22.

The Pathe Exchange Inc.

PATHE NEWS NO. 36, 1915 (Released week May 3).—Of the items of this issue perhaps the most interesting are the launching of the revenue cutter "Talapoosa," at Newport News, the Woman Suffrage parade in Philadelphia and the parade of 50,000 Socialists on May Day on the East Side of New York City.

BABY'S TRUMPET (May).—This is a short comedy on the same reel with "How Swedish Troops Cross a River." It is a good comedy, showing how a slight situation can be worked into something that is entertaining, principally because it has been carefully handled. The story is of a little boy who, to revenge the pricking of his finger on a pin in his mother's clothing, resorts to various childish methods of torture, the last of which ends quite gloriously for him when, as a trumpet is being bought for him, the purse which he has filled with fleas is stolen, and by the inconvenience caused by the fleas on the thief, the boy is able to identify him and cause his arrest and the recovery of the purse.

HOW SWEDISH TROOPS CROSS A RIVER (May).—Consisting of interesting views of the Swedish troops crossing a river on a rope slung from bank to bank.

A STONE AGE INVENTION (May).—On the same reel with "How Building Stone Is Quarried," this is one of the cleverest of the Bray animated cartoons, and is good for a laugh any time.

HOW BUILDING STONE IS QUARRIED (France), May.—These views of different quarries and their methods of cutting stone, loading it onto cars for transportation, etc., is not alone interesting, but thoroughly instructive.

THE RUINS OF ANCIENT ROME (May).—An exceptionally interesting series of views taken in the most ancient portions of the city of Rome, encompassing nearly all of the places of historic interest. On the same reel with the following:

MICROSCOPIC MARVELS OF FRESH WATER (May).—This interesting treatise on the minute organisms of fresh water includes the Ranatra, the Gordius, the Chironome, the Daphnia, the Velvox and the Turbellais. On the same reel with the above.

Pathe Exchanges, Inc., Specials.

THE NEW EXPLOITS OF ELAINE, Episode 6 (May).—"Spontaneous Combustion" is the title of this episode. In it Wu Fang succeeds in making another attempt to end Elaine's life through a plan which is worked out on the principle of spontaneous combustion. He selects a young woman as his accomplice. A fake attack on the woman before the house of Elaine is arranged, she is taken into the house, and out of sympathy is employed as a maid. With her aid a peculiarly devised chair is brought into the house and placed in the room of Elaine, who sits in it and is embraced firmly by an iron contrivance, comes near to being burned to death. She is again rescued by Kenneay. This is an interesting episode and, as usual, well worked out.

HOUSES OF GLASS (No. 6 of the "Who Pays" Series) (Released week of May 17).—Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald on page 1275, issue of May 22.

United Film Service.

IN HER DADDY'S FOOTSTEPS (Grandin) May 12.—Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald on page 1095, issue of May 15.

THE POOR FIXER (Lariat), May 20.—A quarrel with a lover and a well-meant but clumsy attempt at fixing it, on the part of the young woman's brother, is the source of the comedy of this production which features Dot Farley. This comedy would no doubt be acceptable to most audiences.

CAN A JEALOUS WIFE BE CURED (Cameo), May 23.—Although this is not quite up to the Cameo standard, still the comedy is fairly good, and often above the ordinary. Jack Kelly as "Dudley" (for this is one of the "Dudley" series) is, as usual, very funny. He has also some splendid companions in comedy to help him out.

BUMPED FOR FAIR (Superba), May 25.—This is rather a good comedy. In it two tramps facing the eternal problem of how to get enough to eat have an exciting experience. In a chase by the police one of them, getting separated from his pal, has the good fortune to drop unhurt in front of an automobile. He succeeds in keeping up a deception through several days in the home of the owner of the machine, where he is nursed and treated to all good things. His pal tries to work the same game, but is discovered and both end in jail.

WAR AT HOME (Grandin), May 26.—An excellent two-reel comedy with a simple situation, artistically developed. Ethel Grandin, as the wife, who insists on loving a little dog more than anything else in the world, is prettily amusing. The husband and the butler, in their joint efforts to get rid of the little animal, are also intensely funny. The affair almost ends in the divorce courts, but instead a happy reconciliation is decided on.

SHE COULDN'T GET AWAY FROM IT (Luna) May 27.—Dot Farley plays the lead in this film, which is moderately amusing. The story is based on the effort of a rich old maid to get away from the singing of "It's a Long, Long Way to Tipperary." In the end, brought to a different frame of mind by a little child, she starts singing it herself.

THE SMUGGLER'S DAUGHTER (Premier), May 28.—A rather interesting story has been utilized in the making of this two-reel production. It is not a particularly strong story, but has been developed in an interesting manner. It is the story of how the daughter of a smuggler, who at last gets in trouble and is killed, meets in her flight a man whom she played with when they both were children. The love story of childhood is renewed.

Universal Film Mfg. Co.

ANIMATED WEEKLY, No. 166 (Universal), May 12.—An unusually pleasing number containing views of the Knight Templars in San Francisco, an excellent night view of the exposition, Long Island races, war views and numerous others.

HIRAM'S INHERITANCE (Joker), May 24.—A farm comedy with May Asher, Gale Henry, William Franey and Lillian Peacock in the cast. The fun is of a rather coarse, burlesque type, quite amusing in its way, though not unusual in plot.

WHEN HER IDOL FELL (Nestor), May 25.—A little comedy number by Ben Cohn, featuring Lee Moran, Eddie Lyons and Victoria Forde. The young bride becomes infatuated with a professional violinist and the husband and his friends rub axle grease on the violin and bow. Later his wife and ten children come. A pleasing light comedy.

BROKEN HEARTS AND PLEDGES (L-KO), May 26.—A knockabout comedy number with Hank Mann, Neal Burns, Gertrude Selby and Peggy Pearce in the cast. There is no particular plot; an average offering of the kind.

THE MEMORY TREE (Big U), May 27.—A story of two old veterans of the Civil War, written by Raymond L. Shrock, with Charles Ogle, Fred Sullivan and Elsie MacLeod in the cast. The men served on opposing sides, were rivals in love and carried their enmity late into life. When the Northern veteran decides to make up, he finds the Confederate soldier dead. The sentiment in this is good and it is fairly strong in treatment.

LADY RAFFLES AND DETECTIVE DUCK, in "The Great Egg Robbery" (Powers), May 27.—Episode No. 1 of a new series, with William Franey, Max Asher and Gale Henry in the cast. This is a burlesque detective story of the low comedy order. The action is quite amusing in places, but not very strong in plot. The photography is good and some interesting tricks are performed by the camera.

WITH FATHER'S HELP (Nestor), May 28.—A light comedy subject, with Jack Dillon, Billie Rhodes and a good supporting cast. The girl's parents each have a lover for her, but she evades them and elopes with Jack. This is well photographed and pleasing.

THE NIGHTMARE OF A MOVIE FAN (Victor), May 28.—A number featuring Beatrice Van as a young wife very fond of the movies. She goes to Universal City in a dream and after seeing how hard the actors and directors work, goes back to her home and husband. This introduces many of the Universal actors and managers and gives an interesting side-light on the mechanical side of the work.

NO SOUP (Joker), May 29.—Picturing Ernie Shields as an American Consul in a country where the natives live on dog soup. He saves the American girl's canine from the pot and wins her love. This is quite amusing and makes a very fair comedy offering.

FUN AMONG THE PHARAOHS (Joker), May 29.—An educational subject on the same reel.

Universal Film Mfg. Co., Specials.

'NEATH IRON WHEELS (Universal Special), May 23.—Episode No. 12 of the "Black Box" series. Craig is brought to San Francisco by Quest and his party, then sent East in charge of an inspector. The train is wrecked in New Mexico and Craig escapes, becoming cook for some cowboys. Quest and his friends visit the Exposition and later again take up the trail of Craig. The number is full of entertaining incidents and closes with Anna Little falling through a bridge on horseback into a stream.

A WITCH OF SALEM TOWN (Victor), May 24.—A two-reel number by Margaret Hovey, with Mary Fuller, Curtis Benton and others in the cast. The French orphan, Desire, is brought up by an old woman skilled in the use of herbs as medicines. Later Desire is accused of witchcraft because of her knowledge of these things. She is finally burned at the stake. This is well photographed and entertaining in plot, but is not very strong in dramatic quality. The settings and atmosphere of Colonial days is good.

THE TRAIL OF THE UPPER YUKON (Rex), May 27.—A two-reel Alaska story of about average interest, featuring Ben Wilson, Dorothy Phillips, Arthur Ritchie, Joseph Girard and others. Dog trains and snow scenes suggest the great north fairly well, but there are numerous breaks in the continuity of the story. The characterizations are not very clearly cut and their relationship is a little vague. The plot has to do with the rivalry of three men over a girl in a dance hall.

PURSUIT ETERNAL (Imp), May 29.—Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald on page 398, issue of April 17.

World Film Corporation.

WHEN IT STRIKES HOME (Harris), May 17.—Reviewed by Lynde Denig on page 1274, issue of May 22.

Miscellaneous.

THE SHOOTING OF DAN M'GREW (Metro Popular Players), May 2.—Reviewed by Lynde Denig on page 1271, issue of May 22.

PRO PATRIA (Great Northern), May.—Reviewed by Lynde Denig on page 1275, issue of May 22.

Selig's Spoilers for Panama Exposition.

By an arrangement with Sol L. Lesser, President of the All Star Features Distributors, Inc., Selig's "Spoilers" has been booked to play indefinitely at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition.

Picture Situation in Germany

Consul Harry G. Seltzer, Breslau, Says Germany Is Good Country for American Films and Projectors—Neither Is Listed as Contraband—American Pictures Well Received, and Exhibitors Want More—Declares Our Manufacturers Neglecting German Field—Demands for Big American Productions.

SINCE the larger places of amusement are open irregularly, due to a lack of talent caused by the present European hostilities, the motion picture theaters offer the principal source of entertainment and instruction for the people of Breslau. Some of these theaters are equipped with the most modern furniture and conveniences; others would seem to offer some chance for improvement. Each has its regular class of patrons, who are apparently satisfied with the accommodations. The best places have wardrobe service, for which a small charge is made. No beer or other liquids are sold, and smoking is prohibited by police regulations. Very few children are seen in these places.

There are eight principal motion picture theaters in Breslau, but this is not the limit of business that may be expected in this district. The Breslau consular district includes about 40 cities with a population of over 10,000, most of which have one or more of these popular places of amusement.

Seating capacity ranges from about 300 to 1,200 in the Breslau theaters. The seats are arranged by classes, and in about the following order from the screen: Third class, second class, first class, first parquet, second parquet, balcony, and reserved. Not all theaters have a balcony. The price of admission for each of these classes varies with the theaters from about 30 pfennig (7 cents) to 1.70 marks (40 cents). First class and first parquet seem to be the most popular, but it is not unusual for every seat in the house to be occupied. Police regulations are very strict and the aisles and exits are always kept clear. No tickets are sold beyond the seating capacity. Soldiers are admitted at half price.

War Pictures, Patriotic Dramas, and Scenes from Nature.

Every theater publishes a printed program. War pictures seem to have a monopoly, inasmuch as they are the same in all theaters for one week. They consist of scenes from the various battle fields, captured cities, incidents in camp and on the march, sea fights, warship and submarine maneuvers, airship and balloon movements, hospital work, etc. They are always followed by slides of the Emperor, the Crown Prince, the Prime Minister, and the various war heroes. The music during these scenes is of a patriotic nature, and the audience frequently joins in singing these songs.

Patriotic dramas are not unlike those American pictures that depict incidents of the Civil War. The brave father, loving mother, and sweet sister, together with her lover, the villain or traitor, are the principal characters. The scenes are all from German life. Scenes from nature include beautifully colored landscapes and marines, birds, beast and plant life. The films are principally of Italian, Austrian, Swiss and Norwegian origin. Many industrial films, such as the Carrara marble quarries, might also be included in this classification. There are no American films of this nature on exhibition, but they would undoubtedly prove popular.

Romance and Comedy—Text in German.

Romance and drama include the typical love story, which is the same in all countries and in all languages. The most thrilling are possibly of Austrian origin, although it is not unusual to see American films of this class. The one characteristic of these scenes which appears most prominently is their length. Five-reel subjects are not uncommon. In one theater there is a lecturer who explains the whole picture. Comedies are mostly of American origin; likewise, Wild West films. Scenes from the desert are always interesting. The American cowboy and soldier seem to have a peculiar fascination, and good detective stories are well received. On the other hand, plots and villainous intrigues are not acceptable to the German public.

Advertising Slides—Special Features.

One of the Breslau theaters (the Tauentzien) displays several advertising slides at the end of each program. They are, in the main, the advertisements of local dealers, but it should be possible for American exporters to secure the same privilege to advertise their goods in Germany. The text should be in German. These slides are left upon the screen long enough to be read from beginning to end and are well received. Upon one occasion 27 of these advertisements were projected and upon another occasion 31. They must be a paying investment.

The length of each performance is two to two and one-half hours. Theaters are open every day from 3 to 11 p. m. On account of this long program very few people remain to see a show more than once. Special features consist of music and songs. The Palast has a male quartette and the best music throughout; the Ring has the lecturer previously mentioned; the Tauentzien is most handsomely furnished; the Kammer has the reputation of having the best pictures. Vaudeville is unknown in the motion picture theaters in Breslau and would be a questionable financial venture.

Advertising by billboards and by showing scenes from the principal plays is practiced here. The daily newspapers also carry regular advertisements. Change of program varies from two days to one week.

Opening for American Apparatus.

Most of the machines in use here were made by Pathe Freres, with some German machines. There never was a better time to introduce and push American motion picture apparatus than now. Germany is in the right spirit to receive anything American; this apparatus is not contraband, and there are no burdensome restrictions upon importations. On the other hand, importations from the countries at war with Germany are prohibited altogether.

The largest houses in Breslau secure their films and apparatus from two agents in Berlin. Proprietors of motion picture houses from all parts of Germany visit Berlin to see the films and make their selections. Films are rented by the week. The price paid varies according to their popularity in Berlin. There is no fixed price per foot or per meter. Films used in Breslau cost from 300 to 5,000 marks ($71 to $1,190) per week. There was a recent attempt to form a film trust in Berlin, but this movement has not yet succeeded. American dealers have not pushed this business as hard as they should. It is believed that other cities could well be made distributing centers and that Breslau should be one of them.

Subjects That Would Prove Popular.

American comedies will always be appreciated, but an attempt to introduce higher-class pictures will be well received. Among those recently seen was "Judith of Bethulia"; others of the same character occasionally appear. Proprietors here complain that there are not enough American subjects from which to choose. They want more, and they want the best America can produce. Scenes from nature and American industrial scenes will be welcomed. Colored pictures are especially in demand.

American dealers and manufacturers should give more time to German business. Complaint is made that they send agents who stay but a short time and seldom carry the high class of films desired. This is clearly the time to build up a more extensive business, as well as a business of higher character.

"YOU NEVER CAN TELL" SAYS LEWIS.

Edgar Lewis is not that kind of a big man who looks down upon those of lowly position under him. "You never can tell," says Lewis, "when the office boy of the screen, the extra, will break out in some form of genius and show himself to possess the making of a first-rate actor. It is unfortunate, both from the standpoint of the extra himself and the moving picture business, that so many directors give such scant attention to their extra people. Contrary to general opinion, many an ambitious but poor person takes a position with a film concern as an extra in order to break into the moving picture field of acting. Unless the producer takes the pains to watch his extras carefully and give them the benefit of proper training, there is a loss of talent to moving pictures; and the poor extra finds that he has entered but a poor wedge.

"I can give instances in my own experience of big actors who first only took part in the mob scenes. Irene Hunt first came to my notice when she was playing an extra part in a mob scene for me, when I was under the Reliance management. I recognized that she showed promise of something better and tried to give her more attention. Now she only plays big roles. George Siegman, who is now one of the biggest actors of the Reliance-Majestic Company, once worked as an extra under me. These are only two instances of rapid rises from the extra roles to big parts. I have no doubt other directors could give many other instances as remarkable.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week at the New York Motion Picture Houses.

Vitagraph Theater Bill.

"A PRICE FOR FOLLY," a five-part drama, written by George Dillenback, is one of the main attractions at the Vitagraph Theater this week, the Third Chapter of "The Goddess" being the other star picture. The story of "A Price for Folly" is a powerful one, most of the scenes taking place in the house of a wealthy French Duke and in the interior of a theater. Edith Story has the leading female role, a popular dancer, and other prominent players in the cast are Harry Morey, Charles Kent, Louise Beaudet, and Arthur Cozine. Two clever comedies complete the program. In "Mrs. Jarr and the Beauty Treatment," No. 10 of Roy L. McCardell's famous series, featuring Harry Davenport and Rose Tapley, further amusing trials and tribulations befall the Jarr Family. "Mr. Blink of Bohemia," in which Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew appear, tells an amusing story of love by proxy that disrupts an alliance of art and Bohemia, and is the means of a timid man winning a suffragette bride.

Blanche Sweet at the Strand.

"Stolen Goods," a dramatic photodrama based on the play of the same name by Margaret Turnbull, is the leading event at the Strand Theater this week, Blanche Sweet appearing in the principal role. The theme of the play is timely, several of the scenes being laid in Belgium, where Miss Sweet becomes a hospital nurse. The character of the heroine is well suited to Miss Sweet's method and personality, and she is given excellent support by House Peters, Cleo Ridgley, Sydney Deane, H. B. Carpenter and Theodore Roberts. The Strand is also showing an extremely interesting collection of foreign travel and educational pictures, a new comedy, and the Strand Topical Review. New vocal and instrumental soloists are also on the bill.

Double Bill at the Broadway Theater.

"Bootle's Baby" and "The Man on the Case" are sharing honors as feature pictures at the Broadway Theater this week. "Bootle's Baby" is a film version of John Strange Winter's well known story, and retains all the charm and humor of this delightful tale of army life. "The Man on the Case," is credited to Grace Livingston Furniss, and is another smartly constructed photoplay, filled with laughable situations. Paramount South American Travel Pictures, and the Broadway Animated News, are also on the program.

William Farnum at the Hippodrome.

"The Plunderer," a five-reel Western drama made from Roy Norton's vigorous and entertaining story, with William Farnum in the chief role, is the feature picture at the Hippodrome this week. "The Plunderer" is melodrama from start to finish, but melodrama of the very best sort. It also has a rich thread of humor running through it, and is splendidly played by the entire cast. The second installment of "Where Cowboy is King" showing thrilling feats of horsemanship at the Pendleton Round Up; the Mutual Weekly; a Charles Chaplin comedy; the Hippodrome Singers, chorus and orchestra in new musical numbers, and the Hippodrome Models in a new series of poses, make up the rest of the program.

MILLER TO MAKE SPECIAL FEATURES.

Ashley Miller, for several years one of the principal producers for the Edison Company, has decided to devote his time to the production of pictures of special character. Mr. Miller will write and direct his own productions. He has in preparation a large American subject showing the awakening of a people, and a comedy series of novel character which he may put out himself. For the immediate present it is Mr. Miller's intention to take a vacation and enjoy the opening of the motor boat season.

DRASTIC LEGISLATION IN ILLINOIS.

On May 18, by a vote of 111 to 2, the lower house of the Illinois legislature passed the Jackson bill drafted for the purpose of barring from the state all pictures calculated to inspire race hatred. Jackson, the father of the bill, is a Chicago negro and aimed the bill at pictures of the "Clansman" type, but the opponents contend that it will eliminate all films raising the race issue, even to the prohibition of such pictures as "From the Manger to the Cross" and the "Passion Play." The measure has still to pass the senate.

Dorothy Donnelly

DOROTHY DONNELLY, best remembered from her present excellent work in one of the star parts in "The Song of Songs" at the Eltinge Theater, has been engaged by the Metro Pictures Corporation in one of the forthcoming productions of the Dyreda Art Film Company, under the direction of J. Searle Dawley.

Dorothy Donnelly.

Dorothy Donnelly, during the past six years, has been before the public in the principal roles in such famous successes as "The Lion and the Mouse," "Madame X," "Maria-Rosa" and "The Song of Songs," and is now to appear in her first big picture production under the direction of the new, ambitious corporation mentioned above.

Miss Donnelly, whose name in real life is Dorothy Agnes Donnelly, is a daughter of the late Thomas Lester Donnelly, former manager of the Grand Opera House, and made her first appearance on the stage at the Murray Hill Theater in 1898. Her first big role was in Richard Harding Davis' "The Soldiers of Fortune," in 1910, but her greatest successes were registered in the role of Shirley Rossmore in "The Lion and the Mouse" and as Jacqueline in "Madame X," and her most recent touring engagement was in the "Garden of Allah."

Few greater dramatic actresses ever graced the American stage today than Dorothy Donnelly and that her coming forth in a big picture such as characterizes the work of the newly formed Metro Corporation should be the cause for keen anticipation on the part of picture patrons and exhibitors through the country.

Work will begin on "The Iron Woman" within a few weeks and it will characterize the Metro program about August 1st.

HORSLEY AND POWERS BURY HATCHET.

The object of David Horsley's flying trip from Los Angeles to New York, last week, was made apparent today by the announcement that an amicable adjustment of the differences existing between Mr. Horsley and P. A. Powers had been made, and that their former business relations, dating back to the genesis of the film industry, had been re-established.

Thus is ended a dispute that originated in the early days of the Universal, and was for months bitterly fought.

Now that the object of his trip has been accomplished, Mr. Horsley will return at once to Los Angeles.

ELSIE JANIS IN SECOND PHOTOPLAY.

Following the initial appearance of the well-known Elsie Janis in motion pictures in "The Caprices of Kitty," which has exceeded even the expectations of the producers as a money maker, Bosworth, Inc., announces the second screen production of this little star, in "Betty in Search of a Thrill," as its next release.

Playing opposite Elsie Janis, is the well-known screen favorite, Owen Moore, as Jim Denning, her sweetheart. Other important characters are portrayed by Juanita Hanson, Herbert Standing, Vera Lewis, Harry Ham and Roberta Hickman. This production was released on the Paramount Program, May 17th.

MORE KALEM FEATURES.

Beginning Monday, July 12, the Kalem Company will issue on alternate Mondays a four-reel feature production.

The possible first four-reeler will be "Midnight at Maxim's," the big cabaret show Kalem is now putting on at their enlarged eastern studio at Cliffside, New Jersey.

Kalem has an international reputation for novelties, and they promise to outdo past performances in their coming big four-reel headliners.

Billie Reeves in "Out for a Stroll"

THE recent debut of Billie Reeves, the English international comedian and pantomimist, as a Lubin star, created a great deal of interest throughout the entire country, and in "The Substitute," his first comedy, the droll acrobat had an opportunity to show at his best his ability as a funster. Reeves, who created the famous role of the drunk in "A Night in an English Music Hall," played in all parts of the world, is even funnier on the screen than he was in vaudeville.

Billie Reeves.

For some weeks past Reeves and his own company of acrobatic comedians have been in Jacksonville, Fla., making a series of one reel comedies for the Lubin Company. These comedies are released each Saturday, and Ira M. Lowry, general manager of the Lubin Company, says he intends to spare neither brains nor money in making them the funniest of funny pictures.

In his first comedy, "The Substitute," Reeves does his famous burlesque boxing match with Billy Potter and his demonstration of a skating exhibition in a fashionable cabaret restaurant is one of the funniest things Reeves ever did.

"The Clubman" follows "The Substitute" on Saturday, May 22, and then in order come "Out for a Stroll," "The New Butler," "Nearly a Prize Fighter," "A Safe Investment," and "Just Like Kids." In all of these Reeves will be featured with his own company, under the direction of Arthur D. Hotaling.

W. Eugene Moore

W. EUGENE MOORE, Thanhouser's premiere director, might well be called "a man of a thousand roles." During his connection with the drama Mr. Moore has appeared in over one thousand different parts. Back in 1912 Mr. Moore became connected with the Thanhouser Studio in New Rochelle, N. Y., bringing with him thirty years of experience in the legitimate drama.

W. Eugene Moore.

During his connection with Thanhouser he has visualized such noted features as "Joseph in the Land of Egypt," "Cardinal Richelieu's Ward," "Pamala Congrieve," "A Legend of Provence," "The Children's Hour," an adaptation from Longfellow's famous poem. This picture made such a hit at the Strand Theater in New York City that Manager Rothapfel recalled it for a two weeks' run. Among his latest productions is "God's Witness," a four-reel feature, selected as a Mutual Master-Picture for release during the latter part of May. In this picture Miss Florence LaBadie and Harris Gordon appear in the leading roles.

At present Mr. Moore is directing another Mutual Master Picture, "The Four Seasons." In this four-reel feature Harris Gordon, who has been associated with Mr. Moore for some time, is playing the leading role.

Mr. Moore was born in Annapolis Valley, Nova Scotia, but spent most of his early life in Boston, Mass., preparing for the divinity school at Harvard University, his parents having decided upon a pulpit career for him. But he early developed a liking for the drama, and gave up his theology for the stage. He received his first training under the late Thomas W. Keene, later serving with such men as Edwin Booth, John McCullough, Frederick Warde, Louis James and Stuart Robson. After that excellent training he was starred in a number of productions.

Kane off to Close Contracts

WITH offers for every important section of the United States and Canada in his possession, Robert T. Kane, president of the Prohibition Film Corporation, 220 West Forty-second street, New York City, will leave New York within the next few days on an extended western tour for the purpose of completing the sale of territorial rights on the company's big feature photoplay, "Prohibition."

Robert T. Kane.

"Prohibition" has been handled in an admirable way in every detail. In promoting the company Mr. Kane first of all secured the financial backing of a number of big business men, among them Henry Brock, Frank Neuman and George W. Neugass, the latter constituting the law firm of Neuman & Neugass. With the feature ready, an aggressive advertising campaign was begun, until options on all the territory for sale had been taken. The equipment of paper, heralds, etc., was prepared and, finally, Mr. Kane is going on the road to close the contracts which have been practically agreed upon.

It is claimed that there has been somewhat of a departure from usual methods in the manner in which rights for the picture are being sold. Payments to the Prohibition Film Corporation are being made solely for the right to show the feature in a given territory and the right to purchase as many prints of the picture as are desired, and as much paper as is needed, etc., at the cost price—the price paid does not include a single print. Mr. Kane says that this plan has innumerable advantages, most important being that the territorial right buyer is perfectly free to use his own judgment as to the number of prints he can handle to best advantage, making it possible for the buyer to get his purchase money back and his profit at the psychological moment and in a short space of time.

BERST VISITS NEW YORK.

J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of the Selig Polyscope Company, recently returned to Chicago from a business sojourn in New York City. Mr. Berst is enthusiastic over the outlook for business through the new V. L. S. E., Inc. "That the exhibitors are appreciating the high class productions being released through V. L. S. E., Inc., is putting it mildly," asserted Mr. Berst in an interview. "The first Selig Red Seal play released through the new incorporation, 'The Carpet from Bagdad,' may ultimately reach the popularity attained by 'The Spoilers'," said Mr. Berst. "Opinions from public, press and exhibitors are highly complimentary. The second Selig Red Seal play, 'The Millionaire Baby,' dramatized by Gilson Willets from Anna Katherine Green's wonderful novel, will, according to present indications, also attain the high tide of popularity. You may say that the Selig Company is hesitating at nothing to make its Red Seal plays, its Diamond specials in three reels, released in the General Film Company's regular service, and the Selig productions in one and two reels."

Frank Reicher to be Lasky Director

THE JESSE L. LASKY Feature Play Company has entered into a contract with Frank Reicher, whereby he is to become associated with Cecil B. De Mille, director-general for the Lasky Company, and to become one of the leading directors of Lasky productions.

Frank Reicher.

Though Mr. Reicher was born in Germany, being a member of a most distinguished theatrical family, and won his first fame as an actor there, he speaks flawless English and has been in New York so long that he is regarded as an American artist.

His note, as a stage director, is largely due to his work in this capacity for the late Henry B. Harris, by whom he was put in chief command of all his producing. It was under his supervision that the most notable of the Harris dramatic offerings — especially those of the "modern" dramatic school—were presented to the public.

Mr. Reicher's first engagement as an actor in this country was with Mrs. Fiske in her first production of "Becky Sharp." From that time to the present day he has been associated always with offerings of the finest artistic and intellectual grade. One of his most notable achievements was his interpretation of the title role in Percy Mackaye's "The Scare Crow." Some of his other recent important engagements as an actor have been with Frances Starr in "The Secret," under the management of David Belasco; as the Frenchman in Winthrop Ames' production of "The Pidgeon" and as Benedik in Annie Russell's production of "Much Ado About Nothing."

Before leaving New York for his trip to the Lasky studios in Hollywood. Mr. Reicher said:

"I expect to act for the camera as well as direct. In fact, the very first thing I mean to do is to act. If I can do only a brief role myself, then have the film projected again and again for my benefit, I will learn more about directing others than I could learn in far more time by any other method. I know just what I do to obtain every effect, and if I can see in my own instance just how well I get the effect I had in mind or how far I missed it, I feel I shall have the key to the entire situation.

"At the present time I must confess that I have never produced a moving picture or acted in one. However, I have for some months become more and more interested in the ambitious feature offerings and have seen most productions of note released during the current season. This has naturally lead me to some rather close investigation. I will be given ample time to learn the rudiments of camera effects before I direct a picture myself.

"It is my belief that there is a great artistic future in the field of photodrama and that fact alone accounts for my entrance into this new and extraordinary art."

BERT ENNIS OUT OF ECLAIR.

The American Eclair Company has reduced its forces temporarily and Bert Ennis, manager of publicity and sales, is now at liberty. Mr. Ennis is a competent and very likable man with a host of friends among the film trade and newspaper men. There is little doubt of his soon connecting up with some other concern in need of a live wire. The first film job he held was with the Vitagraph Company in Sam Spedon's office, where he remained two years. He was two years with the Keystone Company and two years ago went to the Eclair people. His more recent experience has been broad; for besides handling the publicity and sales of that company, he has done executive work, securing rights from scenario writers and general supervision of the scenario department. He is still a young man of about twenty-six or seven, affable and a good mixer but at the same time level headed.

W. C. Brandon

"WAY down South in the land of cotton," V. L. S. E. is represented by W. C. Brandon, a man of wide experience, who counts as his friends all of the exhibitors in Dixie Land. Mr. Brandon was formerly a representative of the General Film Company and later handled the bookings for feature films throughout the Southern states. He is thoroughly familiar with local conditions in the South, and in his personal make-up embodies all of those characteristics that form so charming and inseparable a part of Southern life and business.

W. C. Brandon.

He is enthusiastic over the manner in which the exhibitors in his territory have welcomed the V. L. S. E. program and says that the system of direct booking is fully appreciated by Southern theater owners, and with such men back of the program as the heads of the four companies in whom exhibitors have implicit confidence, the success of the program in the South is assured.

"I believe without doubt," said Mr. Brandon. "that the V. L. S. E. program has the greatest features of any feature concern in the business, and with the vast resources and unequaled facilities, backed by the policy of co-operation with exhibitors, politeness and fair dealing, as outlined by General Manager Walter W. Irwin, the motion picture business as a whole, and the feature end of it in particular, has been placed on a higher plane than has ever been attempted."

FIGHT FILMS IN LITIGATION.

The Canadian courts have been called upon to adjudicate differences which have arisen over two sets of Willard-Johnson fight pictures which are being offered exhibitors in the Dominion.

J. Parker Reid, Jr., of New York City, controls the rights to a set of what are said to be authentic action-views of the championship encounter and is handling them in Canada through the Picture Playhouse Film Co., Inc., with branch offices in Montreal, Toronto, and other important Canadian cities. Mr. Reid's right to exhibit the pictures has been questioned by other interests and some days ago the Reid films were seized during a performance in Montreal. The court has ordered their return because of an irregularity in the method through which they were seized and Mr. Reid is confident that he will speedily establish his right to market the pictures, at least in Canada and those other countries where there is no prohibition against fight pictures.

The Picture Playhouse Film Co., Inc., was chosen by Mr. Reid as the medium for the distribution throughout Canada because of the position the company has established in the Dominion and the efficiency of the distributing organization would seem to be indicated by the fact that the fight pictures were booked for sixty consecutive days' showing at a minimum price of $100 per day within forty-eight hours after the contract with Mr. Reid had been executed.

SELZNICK ON TOUR.

Lewis J. Selznick, vice-president and general manager of the World Film Corporation, has left town on a tour of the principal World Film offices in the East and Middle West. First visiting Pitsburgh, he will find there a condition of things which require important action. Pittsburgh business in World Film has grown so enormously that new and larger offices must be at once installed.

From Pittsburgh Mr. Selznick proceeds to Cleveland and after dealing with important matters there makes his next stop at Chicago, where he meets the various branch managers and will dispose of many matters demanding his personal attention.

Reviews of Current Productions

"The Wives of Men"

A Melodrama in Two Reels with a Struggle Between Motherhood and Gratitude—Heroine Lets Her Baby Be Substituted for Dead Child of Friend.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

WHILE not a notably artistic offering, this two-reel picture by the Biograph Company has a melodramatic story and makes use, though in a most stock-in-trade way, of a very human and appealing situation. The heroine of it, a poor woman, wife of a drunken brute foreman of a mine, gives up her newly born baby that her friend, wife of the mine superintendent, may not know that hers was born dead.

The picture will go, but it will not stir enthusiasm nor will spectators compare it favorably with the good pictures. It will go acceptably, for it is full of the "sure fire" kind of interest and such always-open doors to sympathy as the lame boy son of the brutal foreman, who has to carry water and is knocked about by his father. The new superintendent comes and his wife sympathizes with the wife of the drunkard and she takes the boy to the hospital and has him cured.

The players are able and do their parts well enough, though the roles seemed hardly to win their respect. As a production it is passable, though one can see plainly that it was hurriedly done and without too much regard for those small things that make one believe in a story—it fails to convince that what it shows is a probable happening.

The backgrounds are western and it was taken around some big mining work or excavation. The scenes show heaps of refuse rock and cuts where blasting is going on. The interiors are cabins, the village gin mill and the rich house of the superintendent. The photography is clear.

"The Haunting Fear"

Three-Reel Kalem Picture, with Alice Hollister Doing Splendid Work as High-Spirited Girl Enticed to City—Many Big Situations Give Her Ample Scope.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

ALICE HOLLISTER'S remarkable ability to act is being demonstrated by her again and again these days. She proves herself amply able to fill all the requirements of her playwrights and directors. Her good work in this picture, "The Haunting Fear," a three-reel offering written by C. Doty Hobart and produced by Robert Vignola, tempts a comparison with the best this reviewer knows. If the impression that she makes does not amount to the dignity and human profundity of the spoken stage's best, one feels that the situations she has to portray lack the inevitable simplicity of those that some really human and great writer sets before us. Hampered by the lack of explanation afforded by the speaking voice, and setting forth experiences human enough and deep enough taken by themselves (as she acts them) but artificial and only partially convincing in the author's string of incidents, she none the less holds our interest and at times touches a deeper emotional sympathy.

This heroine, Katherine, that she plays, is a country girl and is enticed to come to the city by an adventuress (Anna Nilsson) who calls her "little one." The scenes shift to the "White Light" district and the cabarets. Mace (Harry Millard) makes love to her (in the atmosphere of the story, this love-making borders on the suggestive for a moment only). She falls deeply in love with Mace and learns that he is merely a roue. She stabs him and thinks she has killed him. The Scene from "The Haunting Fear" (Kalem).

"haunting fear" chases her from one boarding house to another until she confesses to a priest (Henry Hallam), who orders her to tell the authorities. She does so, but can't be convicted on her own story, because the murdered body isn't found. Mace is in the hands of a crazy doctor (Robert D. Walker), whose daughter he once ruined.

She becomes a nun and prays all the time. The man escapes and seeks with a revolver to kill her. He climbs into the church and is about to shoot her, standing unnoticed, when he overhears her prayer and is subdued. The whole train of happenings is out of the ordinary and sensational. The acting keeps it keyed to a high level and the offering's mechanical work makes the artistic effort effective on the screen. It is a pretty safe picture to choose. One can call it a strong offering.

"The Unbroken Road"

A Production in Five Reels Made by the Life Photo Film Company, with Mary Nash in the Leading Part.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THIS is a long and tearful tale with the talented Mary Nash in the role of the weeping heroine. Her multifarious and complicated wrongs begin almost in childhood and then continue thick and fast through five solid reels. The young lady is in love with her guardian, who neglects her. This makes her quite sad and when a plausible young man approaches her she gives him considerable encouragement. The young man is a scoundrel. He is the son of a wicked political boss, and induces Constance, the heroine, to elope with him. They go to a hotel where the young man registers and takes a room. Pending the arrival of a minister the tricky youth explains Constance had better wait in his room. Constance, a guileless heroine, enters the room and presently the seducer follows without the minister. Constance now sees through the villainous scheme of the bad young man and runs away. She runs into a bad rainstorm and falls into a brooklet. When she returns to the home of her guardian the latter assumes that she has done wrong and casts her out. Later she meets the villain again and again listens to him. He resolves to get her in his power by a mock marriage. When the young woman finds out that she has been betrayed she tells her story to her betrayer's father, the wicked political boss. The latter wants to settle the whole thing with money, but Constance scorns the thought. Thereupon he opens his safe, throws its contents about the floor and accuses Constance of being a burglaress. Constance is duly taken into custody, convicted and imprisoned. Her guardian has in the meantime become Governor, and the case of Constance, whose identity is concealed by a fictitious name, is brought before him by a prison reformer who believes in the innocence of the girl. The Governor recognizes his old ward and pardons her. Just about this time clouds appear on the political horizon; there has been "an eruption" between the boss and the Governor. A rival political leader appears who sees Constance faint in the Governor's anteroom. Like the other man who is attracted by her, he dearly loves her company but is totally averse to marrying her. Constance repulses him, but later to help her guardian politically and to revenge herself on the boss accepts the new leader's attentions. The latter then throws his support to the Governor, who is renominated in spite of the old boss. Here matters become more and more complicated. The son of the boss returns from a temporary exile and happens to come into a room of the convention hall where Constance is watching the political developments. The young libertine forces his attentions on Constance for the third and last time. Constance fights him off, there is a prolonged fight in the course of which a red-hot stove is upset. The convention hall is set on fire, Constance escapes, but the villain is burnt very badly, dying soon afterward in the hospital. The political boss makes a horrible and impenitent end. He has a revolver ready to shoot himself, but apparently chokes to death or is attacked by apoplexy and dies. The new political leader is made to see the impropriety of his bargain and realizing that Constance really loves him he marries her. The logic of the title is not as obvious as it might be. The acting of Mary Nash is good, her support is capable and the photography entirely acceptable. The route which the characters travel is a bit circuitous, the play will be improved by a little pruning. There are some strong situations in the play.

"The Campbells Are Coming"

Four-Reel Gold Seal Production Which Sets a New Pace in Film Stories Dealing with the Indian Mutiny.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

GRACE CUNARD and Francis Ford have appeared in numerous stories of the great Indian mutiny, but this four-reel production, written by Miss Cunard, is a step in advance of anything they have so far done in this line. The offering is remarkable for its splendid scenic effects and admirable settings throughout. The number of participants reaches into the hundreds and battle scenes of intense vigor are the result. The costuming has also been well looked after and the production is one that takes rank with the great war spectacles of filmdom.

The opening scenes depict the Scottish Highlands and introduce Miss Cunard as Mary McLean, the pride of Colin Campbell's regiment. The part of her lover is played by Harry Schumm. These scenes give the story a very appealing opening, and after the bloody conflict in India they are again brought on at the close of the last reel, making an equally attractive ending

The girl's father is a missionary in India and sends for her to come and take charge of a school there. This is in the year 1857, the time of the great Sepoy uprising, when the natives refused to use cartridges greased with the fat of the sacred cow and the despised pig. The first outbreak is brought on swiftly, and before he knows it the observer finds himself witnessing scenes of tremendous tumult. This company excels in action, but it has not quite learned the full value of suspense in the incidents leading up to it. A splendid example of this suspense is found in "The Drums of Oude," a well known vaudeville sketch dealing with the Sepoy rebellion.

The first outbreak depicts the terrible massacre of Cāwnpore, from whence the survivors flee to Lucknow. Men and women are seen fighting valiantly against the natives from trenches. Instances of individual daring are frequently noted in all of the battle scenes, giving them a strong sense of reality.

The girl and other members of the garrison are made captives by Nana Sahib, the treacherous leader of the rebels. The girl is placed in his harem at Rithoor Palace. It is during the storming of Lucknow by the natives that the Campbells arrive and relieve the situation at a crucial moment. Suspense is more evident here and the first sight of the oncoming troops, led by the bagpipers, is a most inspiring one. It needs only the accompaniment of an orchestra, playing the song from which this production is named, to give this a strongly romantic effect. After the relief of Lucknow, the palace is stormed. The girl meanwhile finds a way to bring about the death of Nana Sahib by drowning him in a pool. The photography is excellent.

"Ghosts"

Five-Reel Mutual Masterpicture Adapted from Ibsen's Drama by Russell E. Smith, with Walthall in the Leading Role.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

REMARKABLE for construction, settings and the acting of Henry Walthall, "Ghosts" will be of unusual interest to students of the drama. The stage version, superb in technique, let loose a torrent of abuse in continental Europe and was so censored in Great Britain that even today it is a forbidden production. It is generally conceded to be a drama of great power, and some critics claim that it is Ibsen's greatest achievement. Possibly because the scientific truth, or the lack of it, involved has given rise to discussions is it brought into marked prominence.

That the sins of the father shall be visited on the children is an old idea, well ingrained in many individuals, but rarely entertained by men who depend upon scientific data rather than upon tradition. Cold and exact science tends more and more to support the views of Luther Burbank, who said in relation to children, "There is no such thing in the world, there has never been such a thing, as a predestined child. Heredity means much, but it is not some hideous ancestral specter forever crossing the path of a human being. Heredity is not merciless and unchangeable, the embodiment of Fate itself. This belief, which tinges even literature of today, comes from a general lack of knowledge of the laws governing the interaction of heredity and environment."

Odin, Cadelle, John Stuart Mill, Huxley, Lester Ward, and a long list of careful observers, with the noted exception of Francis Galton, recognize the power of circumstances, the force of environment, the influence of opportunity, as opposed to domination of heredity in no unmistakable terms, and the most exact scientists are dispelling what Burbank designates "the dark specter" used by writers of superficial information in a manner calculated to disseminate error.

Be that as it may, "Ghosts" offers tremendous opportunity in the screen version for acting and Walthall uses his opportunity to the utmost, even straining at times. His impersonations are, however, so far above the average that he must be commended for the tremendous effort he makes. The constructive methods of Russell E. Smith are not wholly in accord with what we know of the best methods, but he has accomplished wonders in handling a subject of unusual difficulty.

A high compliment must be paid also to the settings of this "master-picture." They are admirably chosen in exteriors and are the result of fine taste, together with infinite pains, where interiors are shown. The atmosphere thus intensified is preserved in the types and costumes. The high signs of craftsmanship and artistry are everywhere visible, but the gloomy and morbid subject, taken in conjunction with the doubt of Ibsen's premises, is not to be so highly commended. That adapting directors and interpreters have done so much and done it so well is full of promise for the new art, all this energy and talent will eventually be concentrated upon themes in closer harmony with vital truth.

"In the Days of Famine"

An Approved Three-Reel Vitagraph, by James Oliver Curwood—Produced by Theodore Marston.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

COMPLETENESS, a professional skill of finish, seems to characterize recent Vitagraph productions. If they do not always rise to the highest class, there is a delightful absence of incongruities and crudities in their pictured stories. "In the Days of Famine" has an added charm of treatment at the hands of Director Theodore Marston, that of appealing to the mind through that widely-distributed human attribute "sense of the beautiful." Without intruding on the story with his backgrounds, he has given it force by his taste of selection. The scenes are in reality wisely chosen, but they give the impression of being accidentally striking.

The story is one that never seems to grow old, that of

"Guardie" and the girl he brings up at the cost of much personal sacrifice, only to feel in the end that he must give her up to a man nearer her age, and, in the end, to meet the just reward of her entire devotion. It occurs in that region known as the "Far Northland," even though adequate backgrounds be found in the Adirondacks, and the action is almost entirely given to depicting the suffering and hardships of those who manage, for reasons best known to themselves, to live in those regions. The characters of Jan and Jean, interpreted by James Morrison and Dorothy Kelly, are made interesting through personality of the actors. People in the audience liked the play and gave unmistakable evidences of their approval in close attention and applause.

"The Diamond from the Sky"

Chapters Four and Five of the Big American Serial Sustain the Interest Created by Preceding Chapters.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

IT will be remembered in my review of the first three chapters of "The Diamond From the Sky" that the closing scene showed Arthur Stanley drifting down the river into which his automobile had plunged, half consciously holding on to the gasoline tank of the wrecked machine. In the fourth and fifth chapters we find none of the thrills that marked chapter three; but we do find a well connected story, with interest at all times that prevents the mind from slumbering.

It chanced that the river into which Arthur plunged swept past the gypsy encampment where Hagar and Esther and Luke Lovell lived, and it was Esther who first spied the still live body of Arthur, where it lay washed up among the rocks. Hagar, believing him guilty of the murder of Dr. Lee, reveals to him that he is not heir to Stanley Hall and the wonderful diamond, but that he is her own son. Arthur sets out for Richmond to make his fortune and takes the diamond with him, unknown to Hagar. There he is forced to pawn the stone, and meets his cousin, Blair Stanley, later. Hagar, Esther and Luke also travel to Richmond, where Hagar hopes to regain possession of the diamond.

At a fashionable ball given at the home of a prominent society matron, the great diamond is worn by one Vivian Marston (Charlotte Burton), who had, through the influence of a friend of the broker with whom Arthur had pawned the stone, secured it for the occasion. Arthur Stanley, his cousin Blair, Hagar, Esther and Luke all contrive to be present at this ball, and each in turn gaze in wonder at the gem worn by the strange woman. When the Marston woman is resting in an alcove, screened by portieres in the rear, a hand is seen gliding between the curtains and snatching the gem and its chain from the wearer. Luke, it turns out, was the thief and he rushes from the house just as the alarm is raised over the robbery. Hard pressed by the police, who suspect him, he drops the diamond into a United States mail box, on a street corner. It is collected by the postman and taken to the postoffice among the mail without being discovered, and at the postoffice the gem gets fastened to the inside of the mail bag which, in turn, is marked for repairing. Then we see this bag with many others carted off to the repair shop, and watch it topple from the wagon into the street, when a sharp turn is made by the driver.

Quabba, an organ grinder, with his performing monkey is resting nearby, and calls after the driver to notify him of his loss; but the man drives on, and Quabba giving the bag a shake hears the clink of something inside. He searches the bag and secures the diamond from the sky. He and his monkey companion are seen trudging over a country pathway until he seeks rest under the gnarled limbs of a big tree. He brings from its hiding place the great stone with its dazzling sparkle and dangles it before the eyes of the inquisitive monkey. Then he falls asleep after placing the gem in his bosom. The last scene in chapter five shows the monkey up in the branches of the tree, with the diamond from the sky flashing as it hangs from the massive chain, which the little creature wears around its neck.

The story in the meantime follows the fortunes of Arthur Stanley, who flees from the ballroom to escape arrest at the hands of the sheriff, who has learned of his whereabouts, for the murder of aged Dr. Lee. It will be seen, therefore, that interest is strongly preserved, and that those who are following the screening of the successive chapters will be anxious to learn of the next changes and chances in the history of the wonderful stone. The reels of chapters four and five are finely tinted, and the photography is excellent.

"Sallie Castleton, Southerner"

Three-Reel Edison Story of the Civil War, by Crittenden Marriott.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THERE is an ingenious plot in the story "Sally Castleton," one which brings the heroine of that name into a peculiar relation with the man she loves, and there is certainly need of some new situations in love stories shown on the screen. Sally Castleton of the story is not given much opportunity in the screen version to exhibit any striking individual characteristics, and the role would be absolutely colorless but for the interesting personality given it by Miriam Nesbitt. Whether this is the fault of the director, or is a bit of stupidity reflected from the author, is not a matter to be helped at this stage, but it might be a good idea to remember in future visualizations that the title role is supposed to stand out by reason of opportunity for action and for self-revelation.

Inasmuch as she is given comparatively little to do, Miss Nesbitt, by way of compensation, proceeds to do that little comparatively well, using all the grace and skill of her art to enliven a dull part, but it is only a grey background for the brilliancy of Marc MacDermott as an officer of the United States Secret Service. That this officer is not so utterly inane as most of those shown on the screen, that he is permitted to use common sense and display real intelligence in his acts, affords MacDermott a chance to hold attention throughout the story. He makes a very fascinating adventurer, his grace of movement and impressive attitudes holding the eye, while he engages the minds of an audience with clear revelation of his own mental states.

As Captain Radcliffe, MacDermott is permitted to use some common sense, though he is forced by the author to reveal important government secrets in a room where there is a stove big enough to hide an eavesdropper, and it is known to him and the Union General that a Confederate soldier is hiding in the Castleton house. With the weight of national affairs on their shoulders they talk loud enough for a man in the stove to hear them, but it never occurs to these highly intelligent officers to look into that stove. Too much for human credulity and not a particularly high compliment to the intelligence of our army officers. A sliding panel, or some other veritable hiding place, such as there were in old houses, would be more interesting and within the limits of human belief. Captain Radcliffe's mission, that of penetrating Richmond for the Confederate defense plans, is revealed, and, from then on, he is a marked man.

Sallie Castleton also goes to Richmond, having meanwhile fallen in love with the fascinating Captain. She is ordered by a Confederate general to watch the Captain, now disguised as a civilian, and thus is set up a fine situation. We are not given a powerful portrayal of Sallie's mental condition, her struggle between loyalty to the South and natural tenderness toward the man she loves. She yields to the dictates of her heart because she fears for him and a splendid opportunity for the lead, for the woman playing the title role, vanishes in thin air. The Captain has several close calls and exhibits skill in evading capture, all of which is made very interesting by MacDermott, but the story is not plausible enough to be convincing, and it falls down hard at its highest point.

Two Savoia Features

"The Heart of India" in Five Reels and "The Mirror of Life," a Four-Part Production, Ready for Release.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

AMONG the first of the pictures to be released by the Savoia Company of America are "The Heart of India" and "The Mirror of Life," two subjects characteristically foreign in subject matter and manner of treatment. Easily the better of the two in point of production and the spectacular quality of the settings is "The Heart of India," which introduces scenes in a mammoth temple frequented by throngs of native worshippers. The handling of the crowd reveals expert direction and the temple, built especially for this picture, it is said, appears massive and real. Photography varies, but for the most part it does justice to the splendor of the backgrounds.

In its essentials the story is rather too familiar to excite particular interest, relating, as it does, the adventures of an English army officer who steals a priceless jewel from the temple, escapes to England and presents the stolen stone to his fiancee. Three mysterious men in frock coats and high hats follow him, run off with the young woman and are about to offer her as a sacrifice to their god when the officer effects a rescue. Primarily the picture is a spectacle and in that capacity does very well.

In an announcement on the opening title, "The Mirror of Life" is correctly termed a melodrama. The picture does not, however, mirror life in any of its known phases. The story is extravagant and not very impressive, despite a quite clever handling of some of the more important scenes. The central character is a miser who after a time becomes a monomaniac, thinking of nothing save the precious bags of gold hidden in a secret chest. For fear some one will come near his estate, he envelopes himself in a sheet and makes nightly pilgrimages around his castle, thereby creating a belief that it is haunted. The daughter of a woman whom he deserted long years before wanders into the danger zone and shoots him, but he recovers and is persuaded to live a more generous life in the future. Exhibitors looking for obvious sensationalism should find this production satisfactory.

THERE is a personality behind this picture and its author, John Quinn, once a gambler but now an anti-gambling missionary, has made it his life work and wants to have it perfect and effective as an expose and leave it behind him to correct, through the accumulative numbers to whom it will show the wrongs of gambling and above all its foolishness, the wrong that he himself did in the days before his conversion. It tells his life story in a very interesting way and only becomes a showing up of the crooked means of a gambler's gains, toward the end. He has designed it to be a good film for churches and schools—there is no attempt to make it melodramatic or sensational. The humanity of its story is true and rings with sincerity.

The picture is still in a rather rough state. Scenes must be added and scenes must be cut shorter. Mr. Quinn, who owns it, is looking for sufficient backing to have it made what he wants it to be finally and is willing to make very fair terms with any responsible company, individual or society so that, as this reviewer understood him, the value of the lesson will be given to the world, even though he himself makes but little by its exploitation. The heart of its lesson and its story are already clearly on the screen. It should not be an expensive undertaking to make it an acceptable offering. Mr. John Quinn's address in New York City is the Lyric Apartments, 215 West 42d street.

movements of Kennedy, Elaine, and their associates. The dictagraph is, however, discovered by Kennedy, and communications between him and his friends are written and not spoken, and again Wu Fang is frustrated in an attempt to gain the upper hand.

There are also some thrilling scenes of battle between Kennedy and the accomplices of Wu Fang, during which one of them is shot and badly wounded. The episode is, as usual, provocative of admiration for the players and director especially.

"Doctor Cupid"

The First Release of the Momus Producing Company Is a High Grade One-Reel Comedy.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

DOCTOR CUPID," the one-reel comedy which marks the entrance of the Momus Producing Company into the moving picture field, is a commendable example of photoplay-making, and should encourage the new firm to put in a bold bid for recognition. The story has to do with the love affair of a young college chap, who objects to being separated from the girl of his choice, and so simulates a serious illness. A confederate, disguised as a doctor, helps on the plot, and the patient continues to grow worse until a nurse, in the person of his sweetheart, is brought into the case. The sufferer at once regains his health and happiness. This is told with humor, spirited action, and due regard to the demands of real comedy as distinguished from horseplay. The characters are mostly taken from the more refined walks of life, and the actors in the cast are called upon to impersonate ladies and gentlemen. Marie Baxter, Eddie Gunung, Margaret Baxter, John Burns, Julia Calhoune, H. E. Keller have no difficulty in accomplishing this result, and F. J. Boyle makes an amusing gardener. Walter Morton's photography is thoroughly artistic, and the production of the picture has been effected by an intelligent expenditure of time and money.

"Where Cowboy is King"

A Lifeograph Picture of the Annual Round-Up, 1914, at Pendleton, Oregon—It's About as Exciting as Anything Can Be.

THIS offering of sensational riding on outlaw horses and wild bulls by cowboys and cowgirls very plainly got hold of a large audience at the New York Hippodrome this week. It is a half hour show and is offered by the U. B. O. Company of New York.

This annual round-up, held at Pendleton, Oregon, is a show that must attract the great crowds, plainly shown in the film, from far and near. The picture of the events is so exciting that we long for a glimpse of the real thing; the feeling is that where much is shown, something must have been missed. It opens with riding of bucking horses and, believe this reviewer, none of these bunch grass snorters are rocking chairs, and riding them is no beside the kitchen fire business—the truth is that very few of them were ridden long. The camera caught some of the would-be riders going up and caught many of them coming down.

Then there is bull dogging and bull riding and fancy races. One of the best shows is a stage coach race. If the wild horses threw their riders, one of these fours effectively disposed of a whole wagon full of cowboys and took the coach to the post partly in the air like a balloon—it ended with the coach righting itself and a group of riders catching the run-aways till the crew could climb aboard once more and try to win what was left of the race. The photography, while very jerky at moments, as was necessary, it seems, is clear and well done mechanically.

"The Boss"

Holbrook Blinn and Alice Brady Are the Stars in the World Film Corporation's Adaptation of Stage Play.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

UNQUESTIONABLY, this five-part William A. Brady drama is one of the strongest World Film productions released in some time. Edward Sheldon's play furnished likely material for a screen story that was used to excellent purpose by Director Emile Chautard, barring a lack of definiteness in establishing some of the characters in the opening reel. At times the action would gain in force were its purpose more clearly shown; but in so far as the plot concerns Michael Regan, the man who uses brute strength to fight his way to the top, and Emily Griswold, the girl he marries, the sequence of dramatic scenes is clear and interesting.

In the role of "The Boss," Holbrook Blinn makes his first photo-play appearance. The power that he knows so well how to suggest on the stage is equally evident in the portrayal in question. He is forceful in the extreme and expert in conveying changes in emotional feeling by shifting facial expressions. Early in the picture he convincingly establishes the vulgarity, the strength and the ambition of the domineering Irishman, who sees no reason why he should not make a fortune and at the same time marry the daughter of the man he sets out to ruin. Emily marries him to save her father and then, having paid the price, as she reckoned it, there comes the inevitable conflict between husband and wife, separated by all the instincts of breeding and caste. Mr. Blinn is quite at his best in scenes serving to reveal the emotional crises met by these two. There is no sudden transition from the character of a saloon keeper to that of a gentleman, rather gradual compromises and eventually a victory for the finer elements of his nature appealed to by the girl.

Alice Brady looks entirely charming on the screen, acts with intelligence and restraint and altogether makes a fitting companion for Mr. Blinn in interpreting the author's most important characters. Charles F. Abbe, William Marion and Fred C. Truesdell should be mentioned for efficient performances. Director Chautard succeeded in getting spirit into the mob scenes at the time of a strike and staged with fine effect a spectacular reception following the marriage of Regan and Emily. A sub-title stating that a man is arrested for murder should be changed, for it is contradicted by another sub-title a little later on, and at all events the victim of the assault does not die.

The picture, which has Norbert Myles and Edna Payne in its chief characters, opens with a court room scene at the point where the defendant who has committed a murder confesses to having killed a man, but at the same time insists that he is not guilty of murder, which it is afterward made clear was committed because of an irreparable wrong done his sister. The jury shortly afterward leaves the room to discuss the case, and by means of numerous flash-backs are shown to be deterred from entering a unanimous verdict of "Guilty" by one of its members, who stubbornly refuses to be moved from his opinion that the defendant is guiltless. Then comes the recital by the juryman of his reason for taking this stand, which involves the story of a period of his own life in which a similar instance has occurred, when he had been restrained from killing the man who has ruined his sister's honor and happiness by the intervention of a passing train which saved him the trouble.

The story within a story has been prettily as well as tragically produced; there is much that is artistic, and more that is human about the picture. It has been well cast, and the types chosen for the various minor parts are worthy of mention. The photography is also clear and good, and the production reflects credit on all connected with its making.

"The Climbers"

A Film Adaptation of Clyde Fitch's Play Directed by Barry O'Neil and Released Through the V. L. S. E.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

HAVING seen two film adaptations of Clyde Fitch plays, both of them done by clever directors, I am almost convinced that Clyde Fitch is the least filmable of all the authors whose products have been transferred to the screen. The Lubin Company is lavish in the expenditure of money, tireless in its efforts to produce good features, but the greatest skill finds plays of this type baffling from the filmer's point of view. The strength and substance of the Fitch plays lies mostly in the dialogue. In this play long before it was filmed critics had detected a tendency to anti-climax, and a tendency to drag. It was not in human skill to blot these faults from a film production. That he has in a measure at least covered these faults in the original structure entitles the director to considerable credit.

The plot, like most Fitch plots, has a strong society flavor, which at times dulls the purely human interest. With these limitations much good can be said of the picture. The acting is praiseworthy throughout. Gladys Hanson had a most difficult part, which she performed with great conscientiousness. George Soule Spencer made the most of his part; indeed, the acting and the cast leave nothing to be desired. It goes almost without saying that the settings in a Lubin play of this sort are rich and correct, that the social functions look like the real thing, that the photography is superb and all the outdoor scenes are particularly good.

If the dramatic thread does at times get lost in long drawn out scenes, there are compensations, scenes of great intensity and pathos.

"The Road o' Strife"

Part 6.—The Strength of Love.—The Lubin Serial Keeps Up Interest and Creates New Suspense.

THE ROAD O' STRIFE" keeps up the interest of the spectator. In the sixth instalment the spectator feels as if he were in the middle of a Sherlock Holmes story, thoroughly absorbed and intensely curious to see how it will end. It is said that President Wilson beguiles the cares of state by reading just the kind of detective story which the clever Lubin serial has visualized. The element of mystery is present, it stimulates speculation and seems to lead up to an apparently inevitable conclusion when suddenly the skill of the story teller comes into play and the climax turns out quite different, bringing with it a most unexpected sensation.

The "Road o' Strife" has so far in every chapter shown a most facile and experienced hand, both in direction and scenario. The sensation of this chapter, No. 6, consists in the adventure of the lonely mill and the hidden pool, in which Crane Wilbur, John E. Ince, Jack Standing, Mary Charleson and Florence Hackett show to great advantage.

"The Slim Princess"

Essanay Produces George Ade's Comedy for V-L-S-E Program—Ruth Stonehouse in the Title Role.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

WHEN one recalls the plot in the musical comedy "Slim Princess," as acted by Elsie Janis several years ago, it is not easy to see where the author of the scenario for this picture found the incidents on which to build four reels. George Ade, as everybody knows, wrote the original story, perhaps he had a hand in preparing the scenario; but whether the credit belongs to him or to someone else, the picture is here as a V-L-S-E offering and for at least three-quarters of the way it makes distinctly pleasing entertainment with a fair amount of polite comedy. It might have been condensed into three reels without the sacrifice of anything vital in the action; but probably this will never occur to an audience, so it does not really matter.

Surely Francis X. Bushman as Alexander Pike, Ruth Stonehouse as Princess Kalora and Wallace Beery as Popova will be very well liked, for they give finely judged performances in a true comedy vein. In the garb of a Turkish princess, too slender to fill the beauty requirements of her countrymen, but exactly in line with American fashions, Miss Stonehouse is an alluring picture and her acting is marked by charm and vivacity. Mr. Bushman is just the type for the very wealthy and fearlessly outspoken young American, whereas Mr. Beery is the comedy hit of the production in his characterization of the princess's tutor, who resents being called a Christian dog and proceeds to retaliate by joining in an unholy triple alliance with his pupil and her American admirer.

Settings in a picture of this description are of vital importance, as the director apparently realized. Scenes in the palace of Count Selim are sumptuously staged and when the princess journeys to America and finds temporary quarters in Washington she is not forced to forego luxuries. She is introduced to society at an embassy ball and in a handsome equipage she makes a tour, a rather prolonged tour, of the city, before meeting the redoubtable Alexander Pike. Called back to Turkey, Pike soon follows and Count Selim is overjoyed at marrying off his slim daughter to the American, who claims royalty because he is a Knight Templar and King of the Hoos Hoo. Brightly worded sub-titles in liberal quantity account for a number of laughs in this enjoyable production.

"The Sphinx"

Three-Reel Victor, Featuring Mary Fuller as an Adventurous Oriental Type.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

WITH our inherent love of sensationalism we seem never to tire of exploiting the character of the (usually beautiful) female adventuress; the more heartless she is the more fascinated we become, and so it goes.

"The Sphinx" presents a woman of Egyptian nationality, who at the time of the opening of the story is using for her plaything a man evidently of Russian extraction, and as it later transpires, of vicious tendencies. The story of the picture has been written by Elaine Stern. It has been produced by Lucius Henderson and bears the hall marks of the quality usually exhibited in the Henderson productions.

Mary Fuller has seldom been seen to better advantage than in this production; and during her splendid portrayal of the character of the Egyptian, one is more than ever impressed with the versatile powers of this talented young woman. Apart from having played the part intelligently, she has dressed with good taste, danced an Egyptian dance with a grace and ease that suggests considerable experience in the art, and handled one of the serpent kind in a manner that causes a distinct thrill that could hardly be called pleasant, although complimentary to the actress.

Matt Moore plays opposite Mary Fuller, and acquits himself well. He plays the role of a young man who has just been accepted in the diplomatic service. For the adventuress he forgets his own sweetheart; but with the meeting of the Egyptian with the young diplomat we become aware for the first time that she really has a heart, for after the manner of her life, living it as she pleases, she ceases to live when she pleases.

At the death of the Russian in her rooms following a quarrel between the two men, and the too free use of a knife, she kisses, then burns the card of the man she loves, and swallows a poison potion she has had hidden away in a bracelet which she wears on her wrist.

The production is an exceedingly attractive one and does not present any serious points for adverse criticism.

Putting in the "Punches"

Metro Producing Companies Getting Some Startling Effects in Their Productions.

NO STONE has been left unturned by Rolfe, Popular Plays and Players, Dyreda, Tiffany and the newly formed Quality Pictures Corporation to achieve the ultimate of scenic beauty, artistic detail, environment, atmospheric surroundings and the faithfulness to type that sugars ambition. An excellent illustration of the attempts to procure the proper detail is given in the Popular Plays and Players production of "The Shooting of Dan McGrew," most of which was staged at Good Lake, Canada, far above the frozen lake region where the snow and air conditions were conducive to just the atmosphere Mr. Service conveys in his stirring poem.

In "Cora," B. A. Rolfe demolished a high powered, two year old Locomobile, which, in the scene where the prima donna is supposed to be killed, dashed over a high cliff and rolled to the abyss below, a shattered wreck. The engine was left in the car and this, when the bottom was reached, exploded giving a highly vivid effect and assisted in constructing a powerful climax to an exciting scene.

Lawrence B. McGill, one of the Metro directors recently returned from Rome, Georgia, whither he went to purchase a river steamer which will be used in the production of "Sealed Valley," a forthcoming Metro release. The steamer procured by McGill was the Alabama, a fifteen hundred ton affair, now in dry dock at Rome, Georgia, and which upon completion of repairs, will be turned over to Metro for use and demolition.

In "Fighting Bob," most of which was staged at the Rolfe Hollywood studios, Director Jack Noble and eighteen principals journeyed from Los Angeles to Nogales, Mexico, to stage the big battle scenes which will characterize that picture when complete. Several hundred Mexican Rancheros were engaged, a number of Senoras, Senoritas and the poetic dress of the Mexican peasant will feature the Mexican scenes. The battle scenes were vividly realistic and when the time came for destroying the ranch house, Mr. Rolfe purchased an abandoned adobe villa, occupying half an acre, and this was sapped and detonated. The effect is startling and realistic.

Demolishing an Auto for "Cora."

For the next Rolfe picture, "Marse Covington," in which Edward Connelly will star, Mr. Rolfe and his entire company will journey down the Mississippi River from Saint Louis, Missouri, to Bay St. Louis, Louisiana, at the end of the New Orleans Delta. "Marse Covington" is a Mississippi River story and in order to get the proper detail and locale, the concern will charter a boat, float down the river and while travelling will select the spots required to properly stage the picture. George Ade, author of "Marse Covington," will accompany the players on the journey down the river.

"Everything that can be done within reason," says General Manager Richard A. Rowland, "to get the picture the exhibitor demands, is being done and I think the readers who have seen "The Shooting of Dan McGrew," "Cora," "The Heart of A Painted Woman" and "Four Feathers" will agree with me that we are making the efforts required to produce good pictures."

Thanhouserites Capture U. S. S. Wyoming.

With the big fleet anchored in the North River, the word went round in New Rochelle that a naval picture was in order. So the regular "location finder" went out to make arrangements for some scenes aboard one of the battleships. But when he got there he discovered that cameras are taboo on the big sea-fighters, and all kinds of arguments did not avail. So he returned in failure. .

Florence La Badie and Peggy Burke had been looking forward to the trip, however, and when the location expert returned they were keenly disappointed, to say the least. So they hatched up a little plan and the next morning found them aboard the big Wyoming. First thing the studio knew, a message came in: "We have met the enemy and they are lovely," signed by Flo and Peggy. Director Sullivan and a crew packed into a car, still mystified, and dashed to the river front. There were Flo and Peggy, brave as you please, to welcome them into a government tender, with Lieut. Jack London, U. S. N., of the Wyoming, as a gracious host. Aboard ship the officers did honor to the film folk in gallant style, and Lieut. London came as near to being a picture hero in fact as his vexing modesty would allow him to. Harry Benham and Lloyd Lonergan thought that Peggy and Flo had bought the Wyoming, so cordial and accommodating was every man Jack on the big battler. The scenes they took are for one of the regular Thanhouser releases, to be scheduled soon.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"ON BITTER CREEK" (Lubin).

Feud stories though unfortunate are always dramatic and interesting. Feuds are very common in the mountains, especially of Kentucky where man is a law unto himself and a moderate offense is recognized as the right to kill, not only by the contending parties but all who take sides with them, in short the servant of one house constitutes himself the enemy of the opposite faction. The "Bitter Creek" feud which runs for years is a wonderful example of the many mistakes that cause ill feeling and fearful bloodshed. As in this case love matches are a potent factor, causing tragedies too terrible to realize. Two families had been at outs for years, but had quieted down when the smouldering fire was fanned into a flame by the refusal of a playful kiss. More lives are sacrificed and the tense situation comes nigh to extermination, when a letter is found which for a time had remained hidden, but would have saved the unfortunate warfare. The scenario is one of Emmett Campbell Hall's best, produced by Edgar Jones with all of the advantages of atmosphere and convincing interpretation.

Scene from "On Bitter Creek" (Lubin).

"THE MOONSTONE" (World).

World Film Corporation will present the five-part photoplay, "The Moonstone," based upon Wilkie Collins' famous novel of the same name. Mystery is the keynote, and let it be said the dominant theme of this offering, which was very popular in stage form, and is so characteristic of the author's style of arousing and sustaining the interest of his readers. Collins was a master story teller. At devising a plot which held your interest from cover to cover he was without a peer; at originality of characterization he was unique. His writing style was [illegible] effortless, inspirational, thrilling; he kept you awake at night by preventing you from going to sleep.

Frank Crane directed the picture and has cast it powerfully. Eugene O'Brien makes his debut in motion pictures in the offering, which also has a part for Elaine Hammerstein, the grand-daughter of Oscar Hammerstein, New York's very [illegible] and versatile impresario, opera manager and man of affairs.

"THE STAY AT HOMES" (Beauty).

"The Stay at Homes," which was produced for the Mutual program, is a clever comedy founded upon an occurrence best described as love's intrusion on the seclusion of two home-staying, book-loving people who have renounced the gayeties of live to devote themselves to literature. The leading roles are well played. Both Miss Neva Gerber and Webster Campbell get a maximum of humorous delineation out of the characters of Helen Howard and Arthur Baldwin, the two stay-at-homes. A large cast appears in support of the two principals.

"The Stay at Homes" was produced for the Mutual program under the direction of Frank Cooley at the Flying "A" studios in Santa Barbara, and will prove a valuable addition to any ex Editor - program.

"FATHER AND SON" (Mutual).

"Father and Son," a human three-reel drama by Russell E. Smith, is announced as a coming Mutual release with a cast which includes Francelia Billington, Ralph Lewis, Henry Barton and Edward Warren, the last two exceptionally able actors, but newcomers to the Mutual ranks. The story is worked out under the direction of F. J. Grandon, who produced the Mutual Masterpicture "Strathmore."

Kendrick, a self-made man, plans to make his son his successor. The boy rebels at this, having acquired a taste for another line of work. The father determines to separate his son from some unknown girl whom he loves, and by sheer will power succeeds in all his purposes. The son goes into the factory and takes full charge. Imbued with his father's spirit he becomes hard and brutal, a slave driver, and abuses even the little mill girl from whom his father had separated him.

The father returns, disguises himself and obtains work in his own factory and boards with the family of the little mill girl. What he learns astonishes him, and, in turn, changes his character. He becomes the girl's chum and champion and in the end is wounded in her defence. This nearly fatal climax works a good effect on all concerned.

Scene from "The Smuggler's Daughter" (Premier).

It is due to the fearlessness of the charming little leading lady of the Premier company, Lillian Hamilton, that "The Smuggler's Daughter," an unusually well produced and thrilling western drama which will be released on the United Program May 28th, is filled with a number of tensely thrilling situations. For one, Miss Hamilton drives a runaway team of horses dragging a lurching prairie schooner over a perilous road overhanging a mountain torrent, and jumps, only after the lines have snapped and the terrified horses are beyond control, into the arms of a horseman who overtakes the van from the rear. Miss Hamilton proves her versatility as a motion picture actress in the quieter scenes, when she pleaded with her father to abandon the gang of opium smugglers, and again in the later love scenes where she discovers in her rescuer, a childhood sweetheart. Combining as it does an interesting story interest, with an extraordinary picturesque ground and excellent acting "The Smuggler's Daughter" promises to be one of the most popular western releases of the United Program.

"HOW CALLAHAN CLEANED UP LITTLE HELL". (Selig).

"How Callahan Cleaned Up Little Hell" is a Selig Diamond Special in three reels to be released in the regular service of the General Film Company, Thursday, June 3. It's a gripping story of corrupt municipal politics, produced by Thomas Santschi, from the story written by I. K. Friedman. This is a tale that in the past has been applicable to political conditions in many of the leading cities; a drama of plot and counterplot, and how John Callahan, Captain of Police, kept in the straight and narrow way, and finally won his deserved reward.

Because Callahan is honest, he incurs the displeasuse of the Political Boss and is transferred to a district in a great city known by the unenviable name of "Little Hell." There, Captain Callahan, despite many temptations thrown his way, continues his work of reformation. He incurs the gratitude of Tom Gourley, a political henchman, who saves Callahan's life, and then says to him: "Hereafter you and me is pals. Say the word and you and me cleans up Little Hell." There is not a dull moment in this Diamond Special production, which embraces talented acting, beautiful photography and some wonderful ensembles. Thomas Santschi takes the role of John Callahan, Captain of Police, and is supported by an all-star cast.

"IN THE PURPLE HILLS" (American).

Vivian Rich, Harry Von Meter, Joseph Galbraith, Jack Richardson, Louise Lester and Reaves Eason comprise the cast of the two-reel drama "In the Purple Hills," offered in the Mutual program by the American company and released May 24. The story deals with a mining district terrorized by the bandit "Red Alec" Cantwell. While Katy Ogla and her father are riding to town to get machinery for their mine, which has turned out to be a bonanza, the old man is struck down by a bullet from the bandit's gun. Katy rides to a small hut in search of aid. Cantwell and his Mexican companion are hiding there and Katy only escapes after a struggle by climbing through the window.

The sheriff meanwhile descends on Cantwell and effects his capture. Informed by the doctor of old man Ogle's death, he takes the orphaned girl to his mother for protection. She and the sheriff marry and move out to work the mine.

The hands of time have turned four years, when the outlaw, Cantwell, escapes from the penitentiary and returns to his old habitat. He plans his vengeance cleverly and in a manner to produce the maximum of suspense in so far as an audience is concerned. He arrives at the cottage, finds Katy alone and ties her to a bench. Fastening a gun in a vise so that it points directly at her, he ties the trigger to the handle of the door. The sheriff, after an encounter with Cantwell, learns this and rides desperately homeward. Just as he comes in sight of the house he sees his baby girl open the door and enter. Luckily the mother is wounded only, and the sheriff avenges himself on Cantwell.

P. B. ELLIOTT, NEW BOSTON MANAGER.

P. B. Elliott lately connected with the New York exchange of the World Film Corporation, has been made manager of the Boston branch. Mr. Elliott's experience in the film business dates way back to the old "show days" when he was manager of theaters in western New York and Ontario, Canada, and worked in stock and repertoire. Realizing the great future in amusing the public with the silent drama he entered the fold of the World Film Corporation in its Indianapolis office. After being there for five months his ability was recognized and he was brought to the New York office, where after working only six weeks he has been promoted to the responsible position of manager of the Boston office.

EDNA MAYO IN ROLE OF SHOP GIRL.

Edna Mayo cleverly plays the role of a shop girl in Essanay's photoplay, "Means and Morals," a drama that brings out the temptation to working girls who are employed at a wage so meager as scarcely to keep body and soul together. Craving a substantial meal, she flirted with a stranger, who invites her to supper, when she finds out that he is a pickpocket. It is a part that requires exceptionally clever acting to bring out. This Miss Mayo does with a nicety that shows that it is not only her beauty but her finished acting that has made her such a success in photoplays. She is not constantly gesturing and contorting her features to register the various emotions. When there is nothing to do she does nothing but appear natural. As to portraying her feelings, she relies entirely on feeling her part, letting the expression of her face take care of itself. In this way she portrays no exaggerated emotion as so often seen, but expresses exactly what the part calls for, no more and no less.

"WIFE FOR WIFE" (Kalem).

Although Wilmuth Merkyl, the star of the legitimate stage who is featured in the three-act "Broadway Favorites" production, "Wife for Wife," is fond of dumb creatures, he draws the line at reptiles. Especially so since his experience with the rattlesnake which was used in the big scene of "Wife for Wife." This snake played an important role in this production. Inasmuch as it was the means of wreaking punishment upon a wrongdoer and thus aiding the cause of justice, the reptile might be said to have enacted the star part of the particular scene in which it figured.

Exhibitors who saw John A. Stevens' "Wife for Wife," during the years it appeared upon the boards, will remember the vengeance-seeking slave, George, and his master, Edward Walton. Mr. Merkyl was cast for the role of Walton in the Kalem production, while John E. Mackin appeared as George. As for the snake's role, that was filled by the largest and most vicious rattlesnake in all Florida.

It was apparent from the outset that his snakeship, like all stars, was given to eccentricities. Although treated with every consideration, the reptile showed a disposition to bite the hands which were stretched out to him in all friendliness, There was not the slightest doubt about the fact that he was not at all too proud to fight.

After cautioning Mackin to hold the snake firmly back of the head, the Kalem producing director waved his hands toward the camera operator and the scene commenced. Merkyl, bound in his chair, instinctively shrank back as Mackin advanced with the reptile. The movement undoubtedly saved the popular star's life because the rattlesnake darted its head forward like a streak of lightning and buried its fangs in the cushion against which Merkyl's head had rested a moment previous.

Jerked back by Mackin, the snake turned upon the Kalem actor and struck at him. Again it failed in its purpose. This time, its fangs tore through Mackin's shirtsleeve. A minute later, his snakeship was the deadest reptile in Florida.

Mackin, wiping the perspiration from his forehead, ventured the opinion that he didn't particularly care for such narrow escapes. Merkyl, examining the spot in the cushion which bore the marks of the snake's fangs, didn't say anything but it was quite apparent that he fully agreed with his fellow-player.

Later, another rattlesnake was obtained and although this one seemed to be of a gentle disposition, and mild and forebearing, the Kalem players took no chances but saw to it that the fangs were extracted. "Wife for Wife," like the "Broadway Favorites" features which preceded it, will be released by Kalem in regular service. The release date is Monday, May 31.

"SHATTERED MEMORIES" (Universal).

"Shattered Memories," a three-reel Memorial Day drama featuring Robert Leonard and Ella Hall of "Master Key" fame, will be released under the Gold Seal brand on May 25. One hundred veterans of the Civil War at the Old Soldiers' Home at Sawtelle, Los Angeles, witnessed the filming of "Shattered Memories," the Universal sending thirty automobiles to the Soldiers' Home to carry the veterans to Universal City.

The scenario of "Shattered Memories" is by Grant Carpenter and the play has been splendidly produced by Robert Leonard. Harry Carter, Betty Schade, C. Burton, Mr. Hickman and D. Vinard support the principals, Bob Leonard and Ella Hall.

Scene from "Shattered Memories" (Gold Seal).

Some of the battle scenes are of the most spectacular character. In many of the scenes more than 1,400 actors take part. The cost of costuming the actresses in crinoline dresses was no inconsiderable sum, while even the vast resources of the Universal wardrobe galleries were stretched to the limit to provide enough uniforms for the soldiers, Zouaves and officers of varying rank.

"Shattered Memories" relates the adventures of a Northern soldier who in a hand-to-hand fight with a Confederate spy loses his memory from his injuries. The soldier has various exciting adventures until years later the sight of his sweetheart's old home and marching troops restores his memory. He is finally reunited to his faithful fiancee, who waits beneath the old tryst tree for him.

"A CIGARETTE" TO BE FILMED BY LOIS WEBER.

Lois Weber is to make a special feature in probably three reels of a delightful story which was published in the Black Cat magazine some time ago and which was pronounced one of the most entertaining of the short stories printed in that publication in many moons. It is entitled "A Cigarette," and was written by Helena Grace Evans, whose short stories have been accorded high praise in literary circles.

The story of "A Cigarette" is told in fascinating style and Miss Weber says it will make a superb film play. She and Phillips Smalley will play the leads and Rupert Julien and Hobart Henley will be included in the cast.

IRVIN COBB AS A PICTURE ACTOR.

Irvin Cobb, the international humorist, war correspondent and general celebrity, is among the unannounced stars to make his first photodramatic appearance under the direction of the Lasky Feature Play Co. The name of his character is "The American Tourist" and he appears in the photodramatic version of "The Arab."

When Edgar Selwyn, the distinguished dramatic star and playwright, went to the Lasky studios in Hollywood to pose for the film version of his own hit, "The Arab," he was accompanied by a party of friends, including Mr. Cobb. Selwyn said that he took the friends along to root for him and supply the audience so that he might not feel too lonely working before the camera.

Long before the party reached Hollywood, California, the fact that Cobb was one of the guests became known to Cecil De Mille, director general of the Lasky forces, and he began many a dire plot to entrap him and register him on the film. The fact of the matter is that Mr. Cobb became so much interested in the process of taking "The Arab" that it required only a certain amount of genial urging to get him to try the effects upon himself.

The photograph printed herewith shows him doing a scene with Edgar Selwyn and with Cecil De Mille directing.

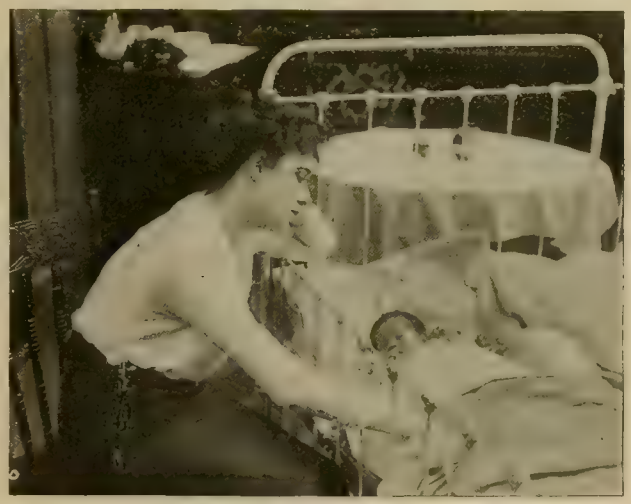
The picture of Mr. Cobb in this episode is said to be excellent and it will doubtless interest many people to see this famous author on the screen, for certainly every man, woman and child who can read has heard of him. The Lasky company feels that the section of "The Arab" film showing Mr. Cobb must have a special value always in the minds of those who participated and in the public mind also.

Old Irv Cobb as a Picture Actor.

"FAIRY FERN SEED" (Thanhouser).

One of the most charming comedies released in the Mutual program this year is offered by the Thanhouser company under the title of "Fairy Fern Seed." The Thanhouser Twins, Madeline and Marion Fairbanks, are starred in this production. Appearing with them are Ethel Jewett, Peggy Burke and James Cooley.

The story pictures Susanna Cross intriguing until Rosalie Wood, whose home she shares, finally elopes with James Porter. Unable to forgive her daughter, Mrs. Wood now lavishes all her affection on Susanna. For the Porters life grow harder, year by year. Finally Mrs. Porter dies, leaving her husband with two little daughters. When they are twelve their father also passes on, and the two girls are told they will be sent to an institution.



Scene from "Fairy Fern Seed" (Thanhouser).

Their hearts are full of fairy lore. They have been reading of the princess who put fern seed in her shoes that her spiritual self might be transported to the care of the fairy prince. The two girls decide to reach the grandmother they have never seen in just this way, and the result of their action is all their trusting hearts could desire.

"THE WILD GOOSE CHASE" (Lasky).

Ina Claire, the celebrated Broadway star, will make her first appearance in photodrama under the management of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company in "The Wild Goose Chase" which is to be released on May 27.

"The Wild Goose Chase" is based on the comedy of the same name by Wm. C. De Mille and is in line with their strictly high-class comedy productions recently made by the Lasky concern.

Ina Claire is generally acknowledged to be the most beautiful as well as the youngest Broadway musical star. Her last engagement was as the star in "Lady Luxury" at the Casino theater. She acquired extraordinary fame both here and in England when she made her first big hit in the title role of "The Quaker Girl."

Scene from "The Wild Goose Chase" (Lasky).

"The Wild Goose Chase" is a humorous romance of confused identities. The conclusion is of course a happy one. The cast of the "Wild Goose Chase" includes, in addition to Miss Claire, Tom Forman, Theodore Roberts and other favorite members of the Lasky Company.

"HER OWN WAY" (Popular).

In "Her Own Way," which the Popular Plays and Players are producing with Florence Reed, in the principal role, for the Metro Program, the producing company are going to extreme limits to obtain fitting surroundings for the picture.

Thirty principals and the supporting company traveled to Pinehurst, North Carolina, for several summer scenes, not obtainable here during the winter months. A number of the more important scenes, calling for surroundings of water, bird life and little intimate touches of villa existence, were made at the home of a prominent millionaire on the New York side of the Hudson River, just about Tarrytown.

Scene from "Her Own Way" (Popular Plays).

Herbert Blache attended to the staging of the production under the direct supervision of the directing heads of the Popular Plays and Players Company and the advisory board of the Metro Pictures Corporation, consisting of nine participating members.

"Her Own Way," with Florence Reed, will be released by Metro Monday, May 31, and be seen first at the various houses and circuits on the Metro roster. Miss Reed is now appearing in "The Celebrated Case" at the Empire theater and makes daily trips to Fort Lee, where the Metro studio is located.

NOTABLES IN "THE GOVERNOR'S BOSS."

Ex-Governor Sulzer, is not the only well known personage who appears in the forthcoming production of "The Governor's Boss," a screen version of a novel written by ex-State Senator Barcus of Indiana. In the cast is Pauline Hall; Baroness von Raven, formerly Dorothy Kingdon; Miss Anna Logan, daughter of Hon. John H. Landis of Pennsylvania, ex-Superintendent of the U. S. Mint at Philadelphia, and formerly member of the House of Representatives, and Senate of Pennsylvania.

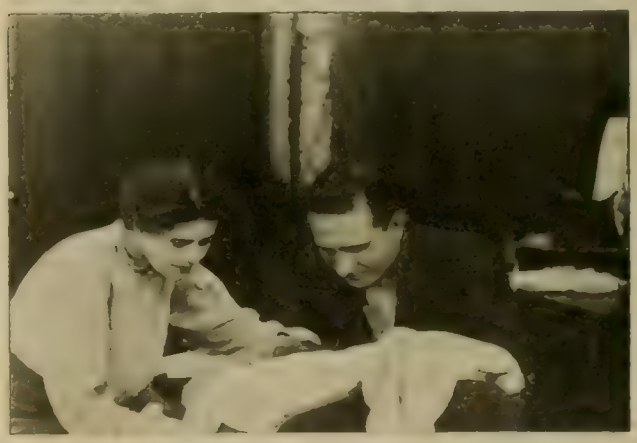
Another treat is coming to those who love to see celebrities in the films. Millions have laughed at funny Frank Tinney, the supreme ruler of all blackface comedians. In "The Governor's Boss," Frank does a small part and does it "straight," still the same old "stalling" methods are evident. You will hardly recognize the star of "Watch Your Step" until he starts to "talk with his arms."

PURE FOOD SHOW IN A PICTURE.

General Manager William Sherrill of the Frohman Amusement Corporation had planned on using the actual setting of the annual Pure Food show for the big scenes of the food exhibit of George Ade's "Just Out of College," but as there will be no show this year, an especially large set which will house the exhibit, is now being constructed over at Fort Lee. It will contain display booths of the various commodities that go to make up a modern food exhibit. It is in this set that the wealthy pickle manufacturer is driven out of business by the youthful collegian, who wins the hand of the beautiful daughter.

"ONE WHO SERVES" (Reliance).

"One Who Serves," a Reliance subject, is from the pen of Frank E. Woods, manager of production at the Reliance-Majestic coast studios. Mr. Woods knows his technical values well. Consequently he has provided situations which have striking dramatic values of the precise kind which best "get across" on the screen.



Scene from "One Who Serves" (Reliance).

Because of this quality "One Who Serves" requires an exceptional cast. Consequently W. E. Lowrey, Katherine Henry and Richard Cummings take principal roles.

The central dramatic situation is that of a burglar robbing the home of the physician who is about to attend the burglar's dying child. Eventually the father of the child is reclaimed. He had been driven into crime only by poverty.

"A BUNCH OF KEYS" (Essanay).

A company of Essanay players has gone to Dowagiac and other Michigan towns where Charles Hoyt's success, "A Bunch of Keys" is being produced by an all-star cast. Essanay has engaged three new stars to take leading roles in this rollicking four-reel comedy. June Keith takes the part of Miss Teddy Keys; William Buress that of Grimes, while Johnny Slavin will take the role of Snaggs. Other parts will be taken by prominent players already connected with the company. The towns in which scenes will be taken besides Dowagiac are Diamond Lake, Cassapolis, Pogagon and Eau Claire. The scenes of the comedy are laid in small towns and it is in line with Essanay's policy to secure realism in all its plays that it will employ these rural settings.

JACKIES VISIT PRECISION CO.

The Precision Machine Company's factory was the mecca during the past week for Uncle Sam's Sailor Boys. Simplex projectors, such as recently purchased by the War Department, are used in all branches of the Government and navy experts took especial delight in inspecting the details of Simplex machine construction.

"THE CONVERSION OF FROSTY BLAKE" (Broncho).

In "The Conversion of Frosty Blake," a two-reel drama released in the Mutual program under the Broncho brand, William C. Hart is ably supported by Louis Glaum and Charles Ray. The script is the work of J. G. Hawks and Thomas H. Ince and the production was made under Mr. Ince's personal direction. The story is concerned mostly with the adventures of a young Eastern clergyman in a Western camp.

The Reverend Horace Brightway, sent West for his health, starts in to convert the community. He meets with indifferent success and encounters the active opposition of "Frosty" Blake, the character interpreted by Mr. Hart. Any general revival would probably cut noticeably into the profits of the Legal Tender saloon, which is Frosty's property. When the clergyman persists in his efforts Frosty has him thrown bodily from the hotel. Brightway resents this and attacks Frosty, but faints from sheer physical weakness. Bubbles, a kind-hearted girl of the dance halls, befriends him and nurses him back to health.

Through her influence Frosty is prevailed upon to allow the pastor to hold services for an hour on Sunday in the local dance hall, and it is Frosty himself who jumps to the rescue when the Horned Toad, a noted desperado, attempts to break up the meeting. The outlaw rushes out and hides behind a tree, and when Frosty attempts to corner him, shoots. All that saves Frosty is the clergyman, who jumped in between and received the bullet in his own breast. The great scene of the drama shows this young clergyman dying happy as he unites Frosty and Bubbles in marriage. That night Frosty closes his saloon "By the order of God," so says the sign nailed to the door.

PICTURESQUE AND INDUSTRIOUS JAMAICA.

These Paramount releases have chiefly to do with the Island of Jamaica. It is one of the best one-reel scenics that has been put out up to date. Of greatest interest, perhaps, is the Roaring River Falls. This rushing, tumbling flood in its deep tropical setting is a veritable jewel in the forest. This release is arranged in the form of an automobile tour. Jamaica is a paradise for motorists. It's two thousand miles of fine macadamized roads and several bits of wonderful scenery glimpsed en route helps along this idea. The general impression given by this release is not only that the island is very beautiful from a scenic standpoint, but it is also very industrious.

Jamaica is an English possession and many of the queer old customs and pastimes still survive. Punting, for instance, on the Rio Cobre Canal is still much in vogue and enjoyed alike by tourists and native sons. This, with a glimpse or two of the beautiful flowers in the Castleton Gardens, near Kingston, finish up the tour in Jamaica covered in releases No. 6 and 7. These releases are exceptional in quality and interest.

FIRST ALL-CELTIC RELEASE JUNE 7TH.

The first release of the All-Celtic Films Inc., will be on June 7 instead of May 31, as heretofore announced. These films are being handled exclusively by the World Film Corporation in United States and Canada, and bid fair to become as popular as any now on the market.

FOX FILM OFFICE AT LOS ANGELES.

The Fox Film Corporation on Saturday, May 15, opened a Los Angeles office at 734 South Olive Street in the quarters formerly occupied by the Kriterion Exchange, taking over the fine fittings and furniture. Winfield R. Sheehan, General Manager of the company and Harry Leonhardt, western manager, were in town to close the deal.

NEW LINE OF PAPER FOR HYPOCRITES.

Because of the immense popularity of that startling production, "Hypocrites," Bosworth, Inc., has been forced to issue an entire new set of posters, to take care of the demands for paper on this release. This includes two style each of ones, threes and sixes and one twenty-four sheet. The subjects in each case have been changed, now giving four different styles of ones, threes and sixes. As the stock of twenty-fours was completely exhausted on the preliminary order, an entirely new one was designed.

"A PHYLLIS OF THE SIERRAS" (California).

"A Phyllis of the Sierras," the third Bret Harte photoplay to be produced by the California Motion Picture Corporation, will be released on June 28 through the World Film Corporation. The motion picture will be remarkable not only for the magnificence of its interior sets, but also for the grandeur of the redwood country, in which the exteriors are now being filmed. The California Motion Picture Corporation has earned an enviable reputation for the selection of charming exteriors, and the standard, already set up, will be raised in the forthcoming production.

"THE SMUGGLER'S LASS" (Universal).

Some remarkable sets were used in the filming of "The Smuggler's Lass," a Bison two-reel Irish sea-coast drama featuring Gene Gauntier and Jack Clark. The accompanying view shows a reproduction of an ancient Irish-Norman castle which was constructed by Jack Clark's west-coast company of masons.

Although "The Smuggler's Lass" is a feature production of magnitude it will be released on the regular Universal program on June 5. Albert MacQuarrie and Duke Worn support Miss Gauntier and Jack Clark in the other principal roles.

The scene reproduced on this page shows Bryan, a smuggler, who has been placed under arrest in the castle, escaping down the castle wall on a rope smuggled in to him by his sweetheart, Sheilla. Miss Gauntier has spent a great deal of her time in recent years in Ireland with a camera ever near at hand. The castle is an exact reproduction of a centuries-old fortress fronting on the Irish Sea not a hundred miles from Belfast.

One of the sensational features of the play is a leap of forty feet from a cliff into the sea which Miss Gauntier makes before the camera lens. There were wagers among the members of the company that Miss Gauntier would balk at the last moment on this leap but Miss Gauntier has performed every kind of a sensational "stunt," from jumping on a railroad train in motion to dropping from the roof of a burning building, and when the time came she proceeded with her "little scene," as she called it, as nonchalantly as if she were stepping into a bathtub, instead of the Pacific Ocean from a cliff forty feet high.

"THE COWARD" (Essanay).

The lights and depths of human nature are touched in "The Coward," a three-act photo-drama released June 1. The story deals with a young collector, a coward from birth, who in a vain effort to better his condition, steals money from his firm to gamble on the horses. He loses and is about to end his life when the girl across the hall saves him from his predicament by lending him money enough to pay the firm. They are married and a child is born. The child is taken sick and a famous specialist attends it out of charity. He falls in love with the mother. The attraction is mutual and he tells the husband that he will save the child's life and give the mother every luxury if he will release her. The husband divorces her. Eighteen years later, he is a rich man, while the specialist is reduced to poverty through scientific experiments. He dies, leaving the wife and daughter penniless. The daughter gets a position as stenographer in her father's office. He attacks her and she escapes through calling him a coward. Filled with remorse, he follows her to her home and finds out she is his child and is reunited with his wife. Sheldon Lewis and Nell Craig play the leading roles.

Scene from "The Coward" (Essanay).

"PILLARS OF SOCIETY," A MUTUAL MASTERPICTURE.

Ibsen's drama, "Pillars of Society," is being made into a motion picture by the Reliance Company for release as a Mutual Masterpicture.

Henry B. Walthall is playing Bernick. Mary Alden as Lona has visualized Ibsen's creation with unusual force and insight. As the leader of the hypocrites and a pillar of society, Ralph Lewis has been given just the sort of part he can make the most of. The scenario is the work of Mary H. O'Connor, and R. A. Walsh is responsible for the production.

"AT THE EDGE OF THINGS" (American).

Old favorites are seen in the leading roles in the one reel American release in the Mutual program, "At the Edge of Things." Here we have strong drama in short space and a cast including David Lythgoe, Vivian Rich, Jack Richardson and Louise Lester. They play together as only old associates, skilled in one another's methods, ever can and all the fine points in the action are adequately illustrated. The story deals with the stock market and a father's opposition to his son-in-law's gambling.

Scene from "At the Edge of Things" (American).

"INTO THE NIGHT" (Lubin).

This chapter continues to keep up the intense interest of the story and is admirably presented by the able players of the Lubin Studio. The arch villain Jerome and Clara, his unscrupulous ally, having done all the crime necessary to secure the fortune, leave the village, and, in a railroad accident, the woman is killed. Dane, seeking employment, leaves Alene in the care of the Duncans and both the Doctor and his wife suddenly die. The sheriff takes possession of the humble home and tells Alene that she must seek shelter at the poor farm. Dazed and helpless, her only refuge is Robert Dane, but he has gone to the city. She has no idea of where or how far it is, but learning that the highway from the village leads to the city, ignorant of the ways or dangers of the world, the poor girl with the heart of a child wanders forth into the night. Emmett Campbell Hall truly is telling a wonderful story.

WORLD FILM TO DO KENTUCKY DERBY.

Sam Mayer and three of the World Film camera men are taking pictures of the "Kentucky Derby" which is to be run off at Louisville, shortly. The World Film Corporation has secured exclusive permission to take scenes of this famous race and they are planning to use scenes in connection with some of the photoplays that are being made at their studio.

"THE CLIFF GIRL" (Reliance).

The Reliance drama, "The Cliff Girl," calls for very wild settings. A young geologist goes to a cliff country on a geological expedition. He meets Margot, a girl who lives in the shadow of the cliff. The country is miles from ordinary civilization.

"The Cliff Girl" was made from the Yonkers studio of the Reliance. Excellent locations which were in keeping with the demands of the story were found in the country about Yonkers.

Some very effective acting is done in "The Cliff Girl." Basil, the girl's father, played by Alfred Kranz, almost comes to violence with Walter Grant, the young geologist, played by Scene from "The Cliff Girl" (Reliance).

William Williams. Both are very efficient in their part.

Exceptionally favorable conditions for photography were encountered during the filming of this drama. The result is some very unusual pictures.

The fall of the cliff girl's father over a precipice is thrillingly shown on the film.

RUNAWAY JUNE CONTEST.

Final Instructions Given by Mutual in Booklet to Exhibitors.

FINAL instructions as to the "Runaway June" contest and many new details are contained in a booklet which was issued this week by the Reliance Motion Picture Corporation to exhibitors who are now running the serial and using the "Runaway June" contest as a bid for big business.

Every arrangement for taking the women winners in luxury to the Panama-Pacific Exposition in San Francisco and the San Diego Exposition has now been completed, the exhibitors are advised in the booklet. The arrangements aboard the Reliance special transcontinental train have been settled. Each of the forty-eight winners—one from each state in the Union—it to be provided with ample individual quarters aboard the train. The arrangements for the seven Canadian women—one from each province—are similar.

Each lucky winner of a free trip to California and return, together with a free stay in California, is to be attended by a host of trained servants. Maids in sufficient number to minister to the winners' wants will travel aboard the Reliance special. Manicures, dressmakers, hairdressers, etc., will also be provided during the entire trip of the special to California.

The booklet just issued by the Reliance calls the exhibitors' attention to the many publicity and advertising aids prepared for their use, and gives valuable hints as to their use. The booklet also contains a very valuable suggestion in respect to publicity which originated with exhibitors. Several of the live wire exhibitors who are running "Runaway June" contests wrote to the film corporation that when the Reliance train of winners passed through their cities on its way to the coast they would turn out their patrons en masse with brass bands and banners, as a tribute to the winners.

Exhibitors who do this, it is pointed out, are certain to reap great publicity rewards in their home towns and the vicinities.

"UNDER TWO FLAGS."

The Famous Play From the Book by Ouida to Be Released in Three Reels by Biograph July 21.

For the first three-reel production to be released in the regular service on alternate Wednesdays, beginning July 21, Biograph has slected the famous book, "Under Two Flags," by Ouida.

It is hardly necessary to go into the story of this book, as its popularity is widespread. "Under Two Flags" has been read by millions of people and is considered the best of the author's works. As a play, it will be long remembered by those who have seen Blanche Bates in the role of "Cigarette," a role in which this prominent stage star acquired fame. Aside from that, "Under Two Flags" has been playing in stock for years, it being one of the favorites of the stock companies. Taken all in all, this production will come to the motion picture theaters with the advantage of years of advertising, and should prove a popular drawing card.

Readers of the book will recall the many scenes on the battlefields as described by Ouida, but which have been impossible to reproduce on the stage. All this is possible before the camera; and if we may use Biograph's past achievements in the way of accurately reproducing battle scenes as a criterion, then this three-reel production should be a masterpiece.

ONE THRILL IN THE SKY DIAMOND.

An entire mountain side sliding in which a village is destroyed furnishes a thrill in one of the coming releases of "The Diamond from the Sky," the North American's $20,000 prize photoplay.

W. J. Tedmarsh as Quabba, the Italian hunchback is the immediate cause of the destruction of the village in which George Periolat, the Luke Lovell of the big picture novel has gathered his band of renegades to do battle with the Gypsy tribe of Hagar. Quabba in an effort to aid Hagar (Miss Forde), and Esther (Miss Pickford), loosens from its base a large rock, which is sent tumbling down the mountain side.

The turmoil in the village below prevents an early alarm, the rock carrying with it in its mad plunge, stones and dirt until the entire mountain side gives way sweeping down in its wrath and covering up the village in a cloud of dirt and debris. The taking of the scene was most realistic, artisans mining and tunneling for several days so that the earth when it slid would have all the force and weight of a real one of these dread calamities.

HEAVY BOOKINGS ON BIOGRAPH RE-ISSUES.

If we may be guided by the reports being received from the exchanges, as well as our own information gathered through interviews with several veteran exhibitors, the demand for bookings on the famous subjects announced for re-issue by Biograph will exceed that of the Biograph-Mary Pickford re-issues of last summer.

These subjects represent the pick of over 300 productions directed by D. W. Griffith while with the Biograph, and have for their casts a collection of actors and actresses whose salaries alone, were they assembled in a single picture under one director to-day, would reach such proportions that the renting cost for the production would be prohibitive. Incidentally, it is in these pictures that the majority of the now established stars and directors earned their reputation.

SELLING TICKET SELLERS.

The Automatic Ticket Selling and Cash Register Company's factory is very busy turning out machines both for theaters already constructed, and many new theaters. E. S. Bowman has just returned from the West and reports various agencies doing a good business.

Among the theaters which have recently installed the Automatic we are pleased to mention the Knickerbocker, Lakewood, Alhambra and Liberty Theaters, all in Cleveland, O., these being considered the finest residential theaters in that city.

H. C. Simeral attended the Moving Picture Convention at Minneapolis and reports a large number of sales with conditions very good in that section of the country.

The Bismarck Garden in Chicago has installed a machine to handle their rush of business during the May festival, occurring May 21st.

JOHN MASON IN "JIM THE PENMAN."

John Mason, the distinguished American star, and "Jim the Penman," the dramatic success of two continents by Sir Charles L. Young, are simultaneously introduced to the motion picture public in the Famous Players release of June 3rd. "Jim the Penman" is one of the most notable characterizations of the present dramatic era, and the role is forcefully suggested by the vigorous art of Mr. Mason. The two prominent members of Mr. Mason's screen support are Marguerite Leslie, leading woman of "Outcast," which recently played a triumphant engagement of several months at the Lyceum Theater, and Frank Perry, leading man of the dramatic sensation, "On Trial." The cast is further distinguished by the presence of those universally popular photoplayers, Harold Lockwood and Russell Bassett.

NEW PICTURE PLAYHOUSE BRANCH MANAGERS.

The following office changes have recently been announced by the Picture Playhouse Film Co., Inc., No. 71 West Twenty-third street: Walter J. Pratt has been appointed manager of the Toronto office of the company; A. G. Buck has been engaged to look after the company's interests in St. Louis and vicinity, operating from the company's headquarters in the Mound City.

Mr. Pratt had been employed in the New York office of the company for several months. Mr. Buck recently joined the concern after a long period of service with the Blinkhorn Photoplay Co. in Chicago.

TYPHOON FANS FOR GARDEN.

The turning of the Madison Square Garden into a gigantic Moving Picture Theater required the solving of many new problems. The great problem of cooling this immense hall was given to Ernst Glantzberg, Consulting Engineer, and the apparatus were especially manufactured by the Typhoon Fan Company, of New York.

It will require eight Mammoth Typhoon Blowers, the biggest sixteen feet in diameter, which will be the largest blowers in the world. The combined capacity of the Typhoons is about two million cubic feet of air per minute, and will keep the hall comfortable in the hottest weather. The blowers will handle every hour, as much air as is contained from street level to the top of the buildings, in all the streets of Manhattan from the Battery to Harlem.

PATHE'S "A STONE AGE ADVENTURE."

Pathe will release shortly an animated cartoon comedy by L. M. Glacken of the Bray Studios, which touches upon a new field of adventure, and is called "A Stone Age Adventure." Mr. Haddam Baad, one of our prehistoric ancestors, is shown leading a very strenuous life trying to dodge a monster "Punkosaurus" who designs making a lunch of him. Haddam Baad displays phenomenal agility and ingenuity and finally captures and slays his tormentor. This comedy is fully up to the standard of the well known Bray product.

BRINGING OVER RIVAL TO "CABIRIA."

The Picture Playhouse Film Co., Inc., American representatives for the Pasquali Company, of Turin, Italy, have just secured for distribution on the American continent the new spectacular production by the Pasquali Company entitled "The Challenge of Barletta" which critics abroad have said is in the same class with "Cabiria," "The Last Days of Pompeii," and "Sparticus," all of which have been enthusiastically received in this country. The negative has been shipped from Turin and the Picture Playhouse people have announced that they will handle the feature in an unusually big way, first installing it in a Broadway theater in New York City for an all-summer run.

TO MAKE "OLD JED PROUTY."

W. H. Rudolph, president and general manager of the Rural Photo-Play Corporation, has begun the task of engaging the cast for its first production, "Old Jed Prouty." It is the intention to secure as many of the original cast as possible, among whom will be Harry M. Morse, who played Zeb Hardy for eighteen years, and Robert Craig, who for many years played Zack Wilcot, the Grand Army Man, and understudied "Dick" Golden, who made "Old Jed Prouty" famous. It has not been decided upon who will fill the role of "Old Jed." Several prominent stars are under consideration. It is hoped to do the picture in June.

"THE SINS OF THE PARENTS" (Lubin).

"The Sins of the Parents" is the title of a powerful three-reel drama just completed by the Western Lubin Company at Los Angeles. A special company of Lubin players headed by Melvin Mayo and Velma Whitman went to San Diego to make this picture. In order to get the desired effect Director Melville "borrowed" the entire army and navy forces stationed there and his camera men secured some thrilling manoeuvres. Many of the scenes of this play are cast in the grounds of the Panama-California Exposition, which adds to the interest of the picture.

VIOLATES PRECEDENT IN MONTREAL.

The Imperial theater, Montreal, Can., has just finished a week's engagement with "The Bulldogs of the Trail," initial release of the Interstate Feature Film Co., through the Picture Playhouse Film Co., Inc. The Imperial is the leading Keith theater in Montreal and has been playing vaudeville and motion pictures for some time. Its general policy has been to change the picture program twice a week, but Manager Condon thought so well of "The Bulldogs of the Trail" when it was first shown that he arranged to violate a long established precedent and keep it for the entire week. "The Bulldogs of the Trail" is in four reels and much of its action has to do with life in the Canadian wilds.

V. L. S. E. SERVICE.

Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the V. L. S. E., announces that the Pittsburgh branch office, in charge of George Balsdon, is now permanently located at 115 Fourth avenue, in that city. From the Pittsburgh office, all the V. L. S. E. features will be booked to the exhibitors in Pennsylvania west of a line drawn north and south of the eastern boundary of Lock Haven, and those in Ohio east of and including Marietta on the south and Cleveland on the north. The territory of the Pittsburgh office also includes all theaters in West Virginia.

The opening of a V. L. S. E. branch in Pittsburgh relieves the pressure on both the Philadelphia and Chicago offices.

Exhibitors in Pennsylvania, Maryland, Virginia, District of Columbia, Delaware, North Carolina and New Jersey will be interested in learning that the new quarters of the Philadelphia branch of the V. L. S. E. at 229 North 12th street have been completed, and are now occupied by J. S. Hebrew and his staff.

POWER CORNERS AWARDS.

A search through the records of recent mechanical expositions by the Power Company officials, last week, uncovered the interesting fact that the Power Cameragraph has practically a corner on the medals and other awards for projection machines. Included in this list are the much-coveted prizes of the American Museum of Safety and the Efficiency Congress. In addition, the Power machine is on practically every battleship of the United States Navy possessing a projection machine, and is also seen at practically all the army posts, Y. M. C. A. buildings, churches and schools are other fields in which the Cameragraph holds almost uncontested sway.

HARRIS GORDON IN "THE FOUR SEASONS."

Harris Gordon appears in the leading role in "The Four Seasons," a Thanhouser Mutual Masterpicture, now being produced under the direction of W. Eugene Moore. The life of the leading character is portrayed from the time he is six years old until he reaches three score years. Master Leland Benham appears in the six-year-old characterization.

The Pennsylvania Railroad yards in Long Island City will be used in making several scenes in this picture.

Notes of the Trade

LELAND BENHAM, seven, is the leading figure in the Thanhouser drama, "The Refugee," a one-reel release in the Mutual program. The cast includes, besides young Master Benham, Mary Elizabeth Forbes, Ernest Warde and Arthur Bauer.

• • •

Harry Fowler has joined the Premier Company, at Santa Paula, Cal., as cameraman, coming from St. Louis, where for the past four years he was connected with the St. Louis Motion Picture Co.

• • •

Frank Lloyd and company are working on two single reelers entitled "Their Golden Wedding" and "Billy's Cupidity." The regular group of Laemmle stars appear in these pictures—Marc Robbins, Millard K. Wilson, Helen Leslie and Mr. Lloyd himself.

• • •

Director Thomas Ricketts is hard at work at the Santa Barbara plant of the American-Mutual company in Santa Barbara. Since he was assigned to the production of Mutual Masterpictures this able director has been more than busy.

Suzanne Willis, the well-known character woman of the United Program, makes a decided hit in the Superba picture "The Dime Novel Hero," which will be released June 1st, as the wife of a ferocious hero who finds himself bolstered up with all kinds of courage after reading the tales of the daredevil Wild West cowboy. Miss Willis makes out of her part a very clever bit of comedy.

• • •

Beautiful reproductions in oil of Kathlyn Williams' portrait have been prepared by the Selig Polyscope to accompany lobby displays of "The Carpet From Bagdad."

William C. Dowlan, latest of the Universal stars to be given a producing company, is working on a one-reel story of city life, written by himself and Mrs. Dowlan, and entitled "Out of the Night." Mr. Dowlan himself will play one of the leading roles.

• • •

The juvenile company at the Mutual's Hollywood studios are filming the one-reel "kid" comedy, "Little Dick's First Case." The story hinges around the presentation to Dick of a detective's costume, star and all. This so affects his imagination that he sends the police force off on a false alarm. The idea of having children play as children in a drama that would be tragic if it concerned grown-ups has made a great appeal to picture lovers. Violet Radcliffe, Carmen de Rue, George Stone and Charles Gorman are in the cast. The production was made under the direction of the Franklin brothers.

Between times Director Colin Campbell is putting on a two-reel picture of his own creation at the Selig mission studio. He has not conjured up a title as yet, but a hint of the play's spirit will be found in the poem, "The Bridge of Sighs."

• • •

"Rafferty at the Hotel De Rest" will be the next comedy released by the All Celtic Co. James A. Fitzgerald is directing the series which are being written by Charlie O'Hara. These films are released by the World Film.

• • •

Francis Ford is finishing the third chapter of "The Broken Coin," the next Universal serial, and is arranging for the construction of sets for the first scenes of the fourth installment. Mr. Ford, Grace Cunard, Eddie Polo, Harry Schumm, Harry Mann and Ernié Shields play the leading roles.

• • •

Director Guy Oliver has completed the fantasy, "The Angel of Spring." Jungle beasts at play with their young will be some of the feature portions of this Selig drama.

• • •

"Little Sunset," the baseball picture soon to be released by Bosworth, Inc., presents some stirring camp scenes. An especially good view is given of the difficult "hook slide," said to have been invented by Muggsy McGraw, the veteran manager of the New York Giants. A runner comes into the bag at full speed, and does a perfect fall-away directly in front of the camera.

Marvelle Spencer, ingenue, is a veritable water-nymph and may be seen any bright day at the Los Angeles beach, astonishing the "natives" with daring aquatic feats of high and fancy diving. A story is now in course of construction by the Ideal editor, Mary Murillo, which will feature the clever Miss Spencer and give her full opportunity to show her abilities as a "human fish."

• • •

Allen Curtis, director of the Joker comedy company, is finishing a one-reel scream entitled "The Bingo Boosters' Barbecue," written by Clarence Badger and Ben Cohn. Max Asher, Gale Henry, William Francy, Lillian Peacock and Milburn Morantl appear in the leading roles.

• • •

"The Journey's End" is the title of a new photoplay written by Wallace C. Clifton at the Selig Jungle-Zoo. Vivian Reed and her famous smile will be seen in the appealing story now in the hands of Director L. M. Chaudet.

Stelle Razeto is appealing as a mulatto girl in "The Blood Yoke," a role which calls for the full powers of this emotional Selig star.

At last they have reached it! Otis Turner and his company of special players are at work on the final chapter in "The Black Box." The entire company is working feverishly to get it finished so they may learn the solution of the mystery, which, up to the present time, has remained quite as much of a puzzle to them as it has been to the audiences who have seen the early episodes run. Herbert Rawlinson, Anna Little, William Worthington, Laura Oakley and Frank MacQuarrie appear as principals.

Sam de Grasse, who played the stellar part in "A Child of God," the Mutual Masterpicture, by Cyrus Townsend Brady, and also distinguished himself in "A Man and His Mate," the Masterpicture in which Harry Woodruff starred, has been cast for the detective in "11.30 P. M.," which is being produced for the Mutual under the direction of R. A. Walsh. De Grasse's work is winning critical praise all over the country.

* * *

The following changes have been made in the Chicago staff of the World Film Corporation: M. Levey, from roadman for the Chicago office, to branch manager of the Kansas City office; Paul Meltzer, from shipping department, to manager of the commercial department, in conjunction as special salesman on the Western Division in the City of Chicago; Al. Rosenthal, from city salesman to road salesman.

* * *

The Smalleys are still polishing some of the more elaborate scenes in "Scandal," the first allegorical feature they have attempted since their return to the Universal Company. The story is exceptionally gripping and bears a moral. Besides the Smalleys the cast includes some of the most able of the Universal's players.

* * *

In "The Living Death," a two-reel Mutual release, F. A. Turner, who created the part of the father in "The Escape," plays Dr. Farrell, who, embittered by the loss of wife and son, guards his remaining daughter, Nida, like a treasure. When she falls in love he tells her that the object of her affections is a leper. This leads to a dramatic denouement. Billie West and Edward J. Peil are also in the cast of this play which is being staged by Tod Browning.

Armored auto trucks are to be seen in battle, during the release of a Selig, one-reel picture as yet unnamed, in which Bessie Eyton will appear as "the beautiful princess."

Jack J. Clark and Gene Gauntier are working on three pictures at once, "The Smuggler's Lass," "The Ulster Lass" and "The Mate of the Primeval."

* * *

"The Baby," the Mutual's first "kid" release, has been booked so heavily that D. W. Griffith has formed a permanent stock company of children under ten years of age. They will be directed by the Franklin brothers. The second release is "The Rivals," by Russell E. Smith, with a cast including George Stone, Violet Radcliffe and Carmen de Rue.

* * *

Earle B. Tinker, salesman for Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont for the World Film Corporation under the administration of Mr. F. H. Vine, at Boston, has allied himself with the Boston Branch of the Picture Playhouse Company, and will handle the same territory for that concern.

* * *

The Indianapolis Film Exchange base ball league opened its season on May ninth with a game between the employees of the General Film Company, vs. the employees of the Kriterion Film Service.

The game resulted in a Kriterion victory, with a score of fifteen to nine.

Many Sunday Shows

Decision of Court of Appeals in Keiley vs. the City of Yonkers Followed by Many Openings of Picture Theaters Throughout New York.—Authorities in Several Cities Regard the Decision as Not Binding Them.

By Billy Bison, Buffalo (229 Oxford Ave.) Correspondent Moving Picture World.

SUNDAY shows continue to be a topic of greatest interest among New York State moving picture men. The Bijou, Grand, Royal and Majestic Theaters of Jamestown, N. Y., recently catered to Sunday crowds for the first time in the history of that city. The favorable ruling of the Court of Appeals on Sunday shows caused Jamestown and many other proprietors to open their doors on that day. Chief of Police Johnson of Jamestown said he would take no action against the Sunday performances.

In Watertown, N' Y., Harry Stowell, manager of the Strand Theater, said he would open on Sunday as soon as there was a general movement in that direction, and, of course, only pictures that were particularly appropriate for Sunday would be shown. Alex Papanyanakos, connected with the Wonderland and Lyric Theaters of that city, said he was not in favor of Sunday moving pictures.

Manager Kenneth T. Marvin, of the Strand Theater, White Plains, N. Y., is now running Sunday shows. He said: "The attendance on Sunday is increasing and my week-day business is also larger." Manager George A. Newell, of Newell's Theater of that city, said he would not open on Sunday.

F. F. Proctor, who has a vaudeville and moving picture house in Mount Vernon, N. Y., failed to get a permit from Mayor Fiske of that city to give Sunday shows. Justice Tompkins, of the Supreme Court, who denied Mr. Proctor's application for an injunction restraining Mayor Fiske from closing Mr. Proctor's show on Sunday, said: "The only license the plaintiff has, permitting it to give shows in the City of Mount Vernon, was issued by the Mayor, and not by the Common Council, and was issued with the understanding that no show was to be given on Sunday. It seems to me that in these circumstances the Mayor has power to revoke this license, if the condition respecting Sunday shows is violated."

A recent report from Oswego, N. Y., says: "No effort was made in Oswego, N. Y., to open the theaters on Sundays, each manager apparently waiting for the other to take the initial step.

"An agitation for Sunday shows was noted in Johnstown, N. Y. A report from Albany, N. Y., says that the moving picture proprietors there would not open their shows on Sunday. Their reason is that in securing their licenses they signed an agreement that they would not open on that day.

A protest against Sunday shows was read at some of the churches at Elmira, N. Y. W. E. Pease, manager of the Grand Theater in that city, is credited with this interview: "Of course, I would like to run on Sundays if the rest of the theaters are going to. Saturday and Sunday evenings are worth more than the other five nights of the week combined, from a cash standpoint, and if people are going to spend money for moving pictures on Sunday I would like the Grand to have its share. However, the Grand will not be one of the theaters to test out the law and we will remain closed until the managers have demonstrated their lawful right to run on Sundays."

The Batavia, N. Y., Business Men's Association adopted a resolution opposing Sunday shows. At a meeting of the association Chester C. Platt explained his silence during the discussion by saying that he belonged to a church which had been showing moving pictures on Sunday evenings. Manager Flaherty, of the Grand Theater, and Manager Harrington, of the Family Theater, Batavia, announced that they would have their theaters open on Sunday and that they had agreed to certain rules of conduct for Sunday opening. Both managers agreed to select for their programs pictures of an educational and scenic nature; not to have music of a trashy character; to open not earlier than 2 p. m.; not to advertise their Sunday shows and not to display advertising posters on the theater fronts or on the street. Both houses opened on Sunday and did a good business. The Batavia Board of Trade discussed Sunday shows but decided that any action on the subject would not be within the province of the board.

Henry Klinger, proprietor of the Oliver Theater, North Tonawanda, N. Y., recently had the first Sunday show in the history of that city. Mr. Klinger was armed with a temporary injunction restraining the police from interfering with his performances. The Dreamland Theater of North Tonawanda did not secure an injunction and was not permitted to give a Sunday show.

At a recent meeting of the Common Council of Yonkers, N. Y., an amendment to the city ordinances, aimed at Sunday shows, was introduced. Mayor Lennon of Yonkers recommended the amendment. The Yonkers' Clerical Association is keeping up its fight against Sunday shows.

Manager Dodds of the Liberty Theater, Poughkeepsie, said he would not open his house on Sunday unless he was sure the public was in favor of the move.

Mayor John McIntyre of Rensselaer, N. Y., says he will revoke the licenses of proprietors of moving picture theaters who attempt to operate Sundays. He directed Corporation Counsel Boothby to aid him in his crusade. Mayor Edwin W. Joslin of Watervliet, N. Y., threatened to revoke the licenses of houses giving Sunday shows.

Practically all the moving picture theaters of Rochester, N. Y., recently opened on Sunday for the first time. At several houses prices were advanced for the day. All posters and advertising had been removed from the lobbies and an effort was made to present pictures which could not afford any basis for criticism. Wild West features were eliminated, as well as any scenes showing crimes or violence. High class features were popular. Theaters in all parts of the city had a satisfactory attendance. Ragtime music was barred. Classic music by augmented orchestras was the rule. In connection with Sunday opening the Rochester Motion Picture Exhibitors' League issued a long statement of which this is a part: "The managers appeal for support on the question of Sunday shows, believing they are aiding in the general uplift of the community on Sunday, as they claim they have been doing on other days in the week. As purveyors of wholesale, clean and inexpensive relaxation for thousands of people of this city, the managers think they are exercising, not only their legal, but legitimate rights in taking this action."

The Ministerial Association of Rochester has issued an appeal to the people of Rochester not to patronize Sunday shows, not on the ground of their immorality, but on the ground of unnecessary traffic in labor for commercial gain and the commercializing of Sunday.

NEW YORK BRIEFS.

Manager S. V. Wallace of the Idle Hour Theater, Cambridge Springs, Pa., has arranged for the filming of important scenes of that place.

The moving picture theaters of East Aurora, N. Y., Closed for a time in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Elbert Hubbard, the famous Roycrofters of that place. Both were victims of the sinking of the steamer Lusitania.

In United States Court an involuntary bankruptcy petition has been filed against the Garden Theater Co., proprietors of the Garden Theater, Buffalo. While the Shea Amusement Co. played high class vaudeville and moving pictures at the Garden the house prospered for years. The theater later passed into other hands and has been used for burlesque and moving pictures.

The Ministers' Alliance of Jamestown, N. Y., wants the Common Council of that city to name a committee that will censor moving picture shows there.

Francis Ribble of Addison, N. Y., has bought an interest in the Hippodrome Theater at Painted Post, N. Y.

Charles J. DeZutter will build a moving picture theater at Williamson, N. Y.

Fire Marshal Wheeler of Rochester, N. Y., says the last moving picture operator test in that city before the rule goes into effect providing that those who take the tests must have had six months' experience with a licensed operator, will be held May 25. The applicants will also have to register with the Mayor.

The Orpheum Theater, Utica, has been extensively improved and reopened under the management of Owen & Donlon, Inc.

Nina Curtis, who will pose for moving pictures for the New York Central Railroad, recently visited Buffalo and Niagara Falls, where she arranged details for films in which she will appear as "the Niagara Girl." Miss Curtis has asked Mayor Fuhrmann of Buffalo and Mayor Laughlin of Niagara Falls to pose with her in the pictures.

The Shubert Theater, Utica, N. Y., which reopened recently under the management of Wilmer & Vincent, has been considerably improved.

ELMER S. DAVIS.

The accompanying picture is that of Elmer S. Davis, who, as announced in the Moving Picture World last week, has been appointed manager of the Elmwood moving picture theater of Buffalo, N. Y. The Elmwood is a beautiful house, only a year old, and is in the heart of the residential section. Mr. Davis successfully managed Keith's Theater, Buffalo, two years. He is aggressive and original and features high class pictures and orchestra music. He is a stickler for giving his patrons just what they want. He has followed the ideas of John Wannamaker, department store king, in making service a question of paramount importance. Years ago Mr. Davis was a vaudeville performer, but he says he has done his last stunt back of the footlights and will stick to moving pictures to the final curtain.

Elmer S. Davis.

A Salt Lake Studio?

Movement Has Been Started to Bring Picture Studio to Salt Lake City—Moving Picture Lyceum Bureau of Chicago Interested—Former Judge Willis Brown, Writer of Scenarios on Juvenile Problems, Said to Be Factor.

By H. W. Pickering, Salt Lake City Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

EFFORTS to establish a permanent studio in Salt Lake City for the manufacture of films have been revived and, according to motion picture dope artists in this city, "there is hope."

The latest move has been made by the Motion Picture Lyceum Bureau of Chicago and Fred Lincoln, head of the bureau. Fred C. Mintie, secretary, and Thomas J. Carrigan, producing director, are due to arrive in Salt Lake May 12 for the purpose of looking over the ground and reaching a final decision for or against the proposition.

The studio proposition is being engineered by Willis Brown, formerly Juvenile Court Judge of Salt Lake City, and one of the pioneer magistrates of such courts to sit in the west. Since leaving the bench, several years ago, Judge Brown has devoted his attention to furthering the interests of juvenile organizations throughout the country, and of late has turned his attention to motion pictures as the best medium through which to educate the public to the ins and outs of the juvenile problem.

Judge Brown has already written and produced several scenarios dealing with the boy and girl question, and his latest scenario is entitled "The Eye of the Law," which has to do with juvenile courts. Judge Brown arrived in Salt Lake the latter part of last week with the announcement that he had convinced officials of the Motion Picture Lyceum Bureau that Salt Lake furnished an ideal site for a studio and had all but completed arrangements for the production of "The Eye of the Law" in this city. The Judge estimates that the production will cost approximately $50,000.

It is likely that the decision regarding the establishment of a permanent studio in Salt Lake will be reached after the Judge's production is made, which will be in the nature of an experiment. It has been announced that the company selected to produce "The Eye of the Law" will be headed by a star of the legitimate stage. The name has been withheld, but the fact that Mabel Taliaferro is the wife of Thomas J. Carrigan, producing director, has furnished a slender clue for the professional "good guessers" hereabouts.

The studio question in Salt Lake has been agitated and reagitated time and again—so often, in fact, that most Salt Lakers have ceased to sit up and take any great amount of notice when a local promoter thunders out his declaration of intentions. Two concerns, the Arrowhead and the Satchwa companies, curled up and died a few months ago after creating considerable excitement and using several thousand dollars' worth of free newspaper space. Judge Brown, however, is regarded as "something else again" in the promotion line, for he did make several productions in and about this city last summer.

J. E. MADSEN MANAGING UNITED FILM.

J. E. Madsen has succeeded Nathan Offer as manager of the United Film Service office in Salt Lake. Incidentally it may be mentioned that the United put one over on the other houses on the local exchange row a few weeks ago by blossoming out with a big seven-passenger automobile labeled with the well known device of the United. This car is used for suburban film deliveries and occasionally has been pressed into service to carry representatives of the United on visiting jaunts into the outlying districts.

SALT LAKE BRIEFS.

George Mahan, formerly road man for the Universal in this territory, became manager of the Salt Lake exchange of that concern this week.

Arrangements are being made by the World Film Corporation to present their production of "Alias Jimmy Valentine," with Robert Warwick, at the Utah state prison. The showing will probably be held within the next few weeks.

A popularity contest that has stirred up motion picture patrons in this city to something near blood heat is being conducted by the American theater. The grand prize offered by the theater for the most popular man or woman—as decided by votes of patrons—is a Maxwell touring car.

For the reason, perhaps, that Hazel Dawn is Hazel Tout, of Ogden, Utah, the American theater had 'em lined up on the sidewalk for a block last Saturday night, when the Famous Players' film of "Niobe," with Hazel Dawn as the star, was being shown.

Earl F. Hall, manager of the Rex theater, in Salt Lake, went to the Cripple Creek district, Colorado, last week, to take charge of a theater owned by his brother, who is reported to be seriously ill. During Mr. Hall's absence the Rex is in charge of A. R. Wilson, of Grand Junction, Colo.

Beginning last Saturday night Manager John B. Ashton of the Columbia theater, Provo, Utah, presented the first of his amateur vaudeville bills in connection with his pictures. It is announced that the vaudeville performances are to be sure enough "try-outs" and winners will not only be awarded prizes by Mr. Ashton, but will get an opening on the professional stage.

WISCONSIN SENATE HAS HEIM SUNDAY OPENING BILL.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

THE Wisconsin State Senate referred to the committee on state affairs the Heim bill, which will legalize Sunday picture shows. An amendment offered by Senator Potts would authorize village boards and city councils to allow these amusements by passing special ordinances.

SLIDES FOR LECTURE AT LITTLE COST.

It costs a school principal in Wisconsin only 30 cents express charges to deliver a 100-slide illustrated lecture on almost any current educational or industrial topic if the exchange of the Bureau of Visual Instruction at the State University is used.

ITEMS FROM WISCONSIN.

The Elite, at Appleton, gave a five-reel show for the Fox River Valley Poultry and Pet Stock Association. The Dome, at La Crosse, conducted a baby show. "Creation," the International Bible Students' Association pictures, were shown at the Crystal, in Plymouth, for four days, at 5 and 10 cents. The Grand, at Oconto, gave that city its first home-made picture. B. C. Newman and A. N. Dietz did the camera work. Victrola recitals are given by the Alma theater at Alma. The school at Thorp has started a series of weekly picture shows.

Miss Laura Laybourne, a talented vocalist of Eau Claire, was engaged by the Empire, of Chippewa Falls, to sing the nights "The Black Box" was installed.

"Hypocrites" was shown at a gathering of prominent Milwaukeeans and the local censorship board before it began its week's run at the Orpheum in that city.

Ludlow & Halstead, of the Opera House, at Sturgeon Bay, had a return date of "My Official Wife" by request.

The three reels of the Dietz Cameron Dam pictures were shown at the Metropolitan at Prairie-du-Chien in addition to the regular program.

R. W. Grovesteen of the Unique, at Arcadia, has purchased the picture show equipment of George Weisenberger and Matt George.

Ludlow & Halstead have been remodeling and reseating the opera house at Sturgeon Bay. Later a new front will be installed.

Frank Manley has been preparing to open a picture show in a building he purchased at Frederic.

O. K. Freeman has moved his picture show to the Marsden building at Frederic.

A program of "Evangeline" and other films was shown by the South Side school at Chippewa Falls for five cents.

St. Norbert's College, at De Pere, has purchased a machine. Among the programs shown will be those furnished by the University of Wisconsin.

Frank Bonk, Jr., operating picture shows in Two Rivers and Milwaukee for the last seven years, has taken a lease on the Empire at Two Rivers. Souvenirs were given at the reopening May 9.

FROM THE DAKOTAS.

"Popular demand" is given as the reason why the city council at Watertown, S. D., passed an ordinance repealing its ban on Sunday theaters and ball games.

The editor of the Courier-News at Fargo, N. D., who recently attracted attention in his community by his censorship ideas, saw "Rule G" at the Bijou, in Fargo. It evoked this editorial:

"This particular film was as full of action as the movie fan could desire, possessing all those thrilling, fascinating climaxes and crises which seem to attract the crowd, but in addition it carried considerable actual history and a tremendous moral lesson.

"No temperance lecturer could possibly surpass this film in power to impress the economic loss and the reasonableness of the railroad requirement. Showing it in country school houses and villages would make votes for dry territory."

E. C. Cole, editor of the Standard, at Hecla, S. D., has purchased equipment and opened a show there.

Theodore Hull has assumed the management of the opera house at Raymond, S. D., and has had the building fitted for use as a moving picture show.

I. B. Greengard, of Mandan, N. D., operating shows at Minneapolis, Duluth, Edgeley, N. D., has acquired a fourth, leasing and remodeling the Knights of Pythias building at Milbank, S. D.

"Hypocrites" has been broken for the latter part of May by the Colonial, at Sioux Falls, S. D.

The Normal school at Mayville is giving weekly moving picture shows.

Harry St. Clair has leased the Grand theater, at Minot, N. D.

George Ryckman has sold the Lyric, at Woonsocket, S. D., to R. E. Hazen and Elmer Bratsberg.

"The Pale of Prejudice," the pro-chiropractic film, was shown at the Photo-Play theater in Pierre, S. D.

German war pictures at the Princess, in Fargo, N. D., were promoted by the Courier-News of that city.

The New Lyric, at Park River, will be opened about July 1.

The Idle Hour, at Aberdeen, S. D., has ceased to operate on Sundays.

The Metropolitan theater, at Grand Forks, N. D., is giving No-Vary premium coupons at matinees. These, given also by stores, are similar to trading stamps.

The Charles theater at Devils Lake, N. D., has been remodeled.

Cox & Mulvey of the Princess at Madison, S. D., have taken over S. K. Leen's Ruby at that place.

Joseph Daum sold his show at Hetland, S. D., to J. J. Mangan.

Buchanan & Tuppler of Canova are giving weekly shows at Epiphany.

The three reels of the Dietz "Cameron Dam" pictures was shown April 28 by the Ruby at Webster, S. D.

IN SAN FRANCISCO.

Moving pictures are to be taken of the Empire Day celebration at the Exposition late in May and these are to be sent direct to London, where they will be viewed by the royal family before being shown elsewhere in England.

A cinema dansant will be tendered shortly at the St. Francis Hotel when "Phyllis of the Sierras," a California Motion Picture Corporation production, will be shown for the first time.

The Pillsbury Photo company has purchased a Motiograph for use in Yosemite Valley during the summer season.

Harriet Chalmers Adams, the prominent woman explorer, is here to deliver a series of lectures and has arranged for the use of a Motiograph. J. W. Erwin, chief of the lecture bureau of the Southern Pacific company, and a user of the Motiograph, is also here, as is Frederick I. Munson, the prominent lecturer, and James F. J. Archibold, the war correspondent.

A new pressed steel front has been installed at the Silver Palace on Market street, greatly improving its appearance.

The "Heart of Maryland" has been booked for the Portola here and the Alhabra at Los Angeles, both runs to commence on the same date.

The California Kriterion company's exchange on Golden Gate avenue, was closed this week and W. W. Ely, who was manager for a few days only, is now with the Hippodrome.

The Turner & Dahnken Circuit has made arrangements to run the William Fox Film Corporation's attractions in this city for the first run, commencing May 30th.

The Mutual Film Corporation is making efforts to secure new quarters at both San Francisco and Los Angeles, and Manager J. R. Crone will visit the southern city to make arrangements for the change. It is planned to have a building erected at San Francisco especially for its needs.

The Washington Square theater in the North Beach district has been given over to a season of grand opera.

The Golden Eagle theater, which has been closed for several years, is being refitted and will be opened again as a moving picture house.

CALIFORNIA BRIEFS.

An airdome is being erected at Corcoran for Pell & Cates and will be opened as soon as weather conditions are favorable.

The C. & C. airdome at Taft, in the oil district, was totally destroyed by fire on April 29th. This was owned by A. T. Connard, formerly of Fresno.

The Portuguese Pentecostal Association is erecting a large hall at Turlock, and it is planned to equip this with moving picture apparatus.

The National Film Corporation has been incorporated at Los Angeles with a capital stock of $100,000 by William Parson, D. L. Tasker, A. W. Coldewey and G. F. Zimmer.

"Hypocrites" has been booked for another run at the De Luxe theater, San Jose, where attempts were made recently without success by the police to stop its exhibition.

The San Jose Film company of San Jose, Melville Jeffrey, manager, is planning to create a special department for training for moving picture acting, a three months' course to be given free. Producing to be commenced shortly by this concern.

Ask Advance Payment

San Francisco Film Board of Trade Gives Notice That from May 24 All Exchanges Must Exact Advance Payment for Films—To Eliminate Losses—Statements Week in Advance of Showing Give Time for Cash.

By T. A. Church, San Francisco Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE FILM EXCHANGE BOARD OF TRADE of San Francisco has issued a notice to all exhibitors in this territory that, commencing with May 24th, 1915, all exchanges affiliated with this organization will exact payment in advance for film rentals, both regular service and features. It is explained that while this may seem unwarranted, and perhaps unjust, to such exhibitors as have been and still are paying bills promptly on receipt of their statements, it has been made necessary by the great number of the other class of exhibitor, who, after accepting credit, will not pay his bills, and who makes a practice of preying upon exchanges, dropping one after another when credit is exhausted. The regulations placed in effect shortly after the formation of the local Board of Trade did much to eliminate these losses, as credit was materially curtailed, but exchange men declare that it is by far too heavy and must be stopped. The attention of exhibitors is called to the fact that during the year 1914 approximately one million dollars in bad debts accumulated among the exchanges of the United States and Canada. This has worked a handicap not only upon film exchanges, but upon exhibitors as well, as it has formed illegitimate competition for those who make a practice of paying their bills.

The exchanges belonging to the local Board of Trade will mail film statements one week in advance of the showing date, thus allowing ample time for checks to reach the exchange before the films are to be shipped. In case the check is not in evidence upon the shipping date the exhibitor will be placed upon the delinquent list and no member of the board will accept business from the exhibitor, except on a cash on delivery basis, until this account is settled. This plan has been based largely upon the arrangement now in operation at Denver, Colo., where prepayment for film service is insisted upon.

V-L-S-E, INC., OPEN OFFICES.

The Vitagraph - Lubin - Selig-Essanay, Inc., has secured quarters at 986 Market street, San Francisco, and the new branch was formerly opened a few days ago by W. N. Selig, who came here expressly for the purpose. The entire second floor of a large building opposite Sixth street has been taken over and workmen are now busily engaged in fitting up what is intended to be the finest film exchange on the Pacific Coast. One of the features of this exchange that will appeal to exhibitors is its accessibility, it being located on the main business artery of the city and easily reached by both local and out-of-town exhibitors. The entire front is of plate glass, while there are numerous windows in the rear, together with skylights, making an unusually light exchange. A large part of the space will be given over to offices, as this will be the headquarters for California, Oregon, Washington, Nevada, Arizona, Utah, Montana and Idaho. C. B. Price is district manager, and Robert Quive is in charge of the local business.

TOM NORTH GOES TO PORTLAND

Tom North, for more than a year the representative of George Kleine in the territory served from San Francisco, and who has been with Sol Lesser since the transfer of the Kleine interests to the latter, will leave shortly for Portland, Ore., where he will have charge of the exchange to be opened by the V-L-S-E, Inc. His departure from San Francisco will be keenly regretted by a host of friends, as he was one of the most popular of the local film men. During his stay here he has been instrumental in bringing about a number of improvements in the film exchange business and was one of the organizers of the Film Exchange Board of Trade, the Screen Club of San Francisco and the Mystic Order of Pals.

FOX CORPORATION GIVES BANQUET TO EXHIBITORS.

A banquet was tendered to exhibitors in the San Francisco territory on the evening of May 6th at the Portola-Louvre by the William Fox Film Corporation, and was attended by about seventy-five theater owners who have used productions put out by this concern. The affair was arranged to enable exhibitors to meet Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the company, who arrived recently to make a survey of the Coast field. James Beatty, manager of the Liberty theater of San Jose, acted as toastmaster and kept the flood of oratory flowing in excellent fashion. Prominent entertainers assisted in keeping merriment rampant and it was at a late hour that the party disbanded. Many visited the Screen Club later in the evening and joined the jolly crowd of exchange men and exhibitors gathered there.

POWERS EQUIPMENT WELL REPRESENTED AT SAN FRANCISCO.

A recent survey of the local moving picture field indicates that there are ninety-six theaters here where moving pictures are featured, not counting those located at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition or churches where pictures are shown. The projection equipment in these houses is divided as follows. Powers machines, 94. This puts it ahead of all its competitors. At the Exposition grounds there are fifty five machines in operation at the present time, and of these 33 are Powers Cameragraphs. Five other theaters will be opened there shortly, making a total of about one hundred and fiifty theaters in San Francisco where motion pictures are shown.

EXCHANGE INSTALLS A FINE CLEANING PLANT

The California Film Exchange has installed a new Seaborne film cleaning machine in its exchange on Golden Gate Ave., San Francisco, and is devoting special attention to the matter of having all films in the best possible condition when sent out to customers.

OTHER SAN FRANCISCO NOTES.

The Moving Picture Operators' Union of San Francisco has changed the time of its meetings to the second and fourth Thursdays of each month at 10 a. m. L. G. Dolliver has been elected delegate to the international union convention at Chicago.

The Miles Motion Picture Machine company has been incorporated here with a capital stock of $1,000,000 by E. C. Miles, G. B. Monk, C. M. Wooster, F. A. Losh and J. A. Sciarconi.

Contracts have been awarded for alterations and additions to the old Chutes theater at Webster and Eddy streets, the work to cost about $12,000.

The Art Slide Studio has been incorporated here by F. Hull, N. W. Hall and A. Williams, with a capital of $2,000.

Reading Up On Photoplays

In Memphis, Tennessee, the Crossitt Library Reports as Big a Demand for All Books on Photoplay Writing as for Fiction Almost—Some of the Books that Are Proving Most Popular with Budding Playw rights.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., Louisville Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THROUGH local theaters and the steadily increasing interest in moving pictures the Crossitt Library, of Memphis, Tenn., reports a big demand just now for all books on photoplay writing, scenario technique, etc. This line of reading matter is now about as popular as novels, according to officers of the library. The books in strongest demand are: "The Technique of the Photo-Play," by Epes W. Sargent, and Essenwein's "Writing the Photo-Play." A number of new books on photo-play writing have been added to the library recently, including "The Photo-Drama," by H. A. Phillips; "Playwriting for the Cinema," by E. A. Dench; "Art of Photo-play Writing," by C. Carr; "Cyclopedia of Motion Picture Work," 2 volumes; "The Photoplay; How to Write; How to Sell," by J. A. Nelson; "Moving Pictures, How They Are Made and Worked," by F. A. Talbott; "Practical Cinematography," by F. A. Talbott, and the "Motion Picture Handbook," by F. H. Richardson.

TENNESSEE BRIEFS.

The picture, "The Price He Paid," was recently shown at the Wilson auditorium, of Nashville, through the Nashville, Tenn., Y. M. C. A. The Y. M. C. A. was enabled, through the courtesy of Tony Sudekum, manager of the Crescent Amusement company, to show these pictures to young men free of charge. The picture has had a great run wherever shown. When shown at the Fifth Avenue theater, of Nashville, it was necessary to keep the picture beyond its scheduled stay in order to accommodate the big crowds.

The Crescent Amusement company, of Nashville, Tenn., has opened the new Strand theater at Bowling Green, Ky. This is the fourth theater which the company has opened at Bowling Green and all are doing nicely. Tony Sudekum, president of the company, was at Bowling Green for the formal opening of the new ten-cent house. A big crowd turned out for the opening and it was necessary to turn patrons away on that day.

The Essanay Film company, which is taking pictures at Signal Mountain, near Chattanooga, Tenn., after some scouting around, finally located and secured some old war-time costumes, consisting of dresses with hoop skirts, for use by the two ladies taking the leading feminine roles. These dresses were secured from residents of the vicinity. The balance of the wardrobe for the 150 actors who take part in the picture "Vain Justice" was secured from Chicago.

Fire destroyed the Gem theater, of Union City, Tenn., at 1.30 o'clock in the morning of May 4. The theater occupied the lower floor of a two-story brick building which was completely gutted. The second floor was given over to offices and a number of concerns suffered in the blaze. The loss to Justice W. C. Morris, proprietor of the theater, was about $8,500. Ed Marshall, owner of the property, figured his loss at $2,700. The two men carried partial insurance.

At Harriman, Tenn., R. A. Watson, L. P. Geasland and others are arranging to erect a moving picture and vaudeville theater at a cost of about $8,000. The theater will be three stories high and of brick construction. A marble front and mirrored lobby is contemplated. The upper floors will be converted into offices.

Newspapers of Nashville, Tenn., have commented on the fact that "movie parties" are becoming popular in the North and East. It is thought that the fad will shortly reach Nashville and other Southern cities before the hot months expire, and that the hostesses will take to the idea as readily as they did to the "tango tea" and similar popular crazes.

"Safety First" was the plan adopted by the management of the Vendome theater of Nashville with respect to the famous photoplay, "The Heart of a Painted Woman," which was shown at the theater on Monday and Tuesday, May 10 and 11. The production is admittedly sensational in some respects and due to wide discussion on what it classed as sensational or "salacious" pictures, the Nashville board of moving picture censors was invited to see the pictures prior to the regular offering. "The Devil" and "The Tigress" were also shown recently.

Due in part to the wide renown credited to Gouverneur Morris as one of America's foremost sensational writers, a big attendance was present at the showing of the first reels of the Vitagraph's new serial, "The Goddess," at the Elite theater of Nashville. Anita Stewart and Earl Williams make a fine combination in the leading roles and the picture went big.

The Fifth Avenue theater of Nashville recently made arrangements to show the new "V-L-S-E" features, as the Vitagraph, Lubin, Selig and Essanay combination pictures are termed. The first of these pictures arranged for was "The Juggernaut," another picture in which Earl Williams and Anita Stewart starred. The pictures will be shown during the latter part of May.

Conner & Gilmore, of Nashville, Tenn., recently completed arrangements whereby moving pictures were made at the Sam Davis monument on the capitol grounds. All survivors of the First Tennessee regiment, all members of Company B, United Confederate Veterans and members and friends of a number of chapters of the United Daughters of the Confederacy were invited to be present at the taking of the pictures. The prime object of this picture is to bring out the life and heroism of Sam Davis before the present generation. Company B, Confederate Veterans, will receive a large proportion of the proceeds. Members of Company B were asked to assemble fully armed and uniformed. Sam Davis, the martyred Confederate, was mustered into service May 10, 1861, First Tennessee Regiment. Out of the 1,050 men comprising this regiment only about seventy-five survive. Part of the picture will be taken at Smyrna, Tenn., where the old Davis homestead is located and where Sam Davis was buried.

ATLANTA ROTARY CLUB'S MOVING PICTURE.

By A. M. Beatty, Atlantic Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

THE first motion picture roster, perhaps, possessed by a Rotary Club, was made for the Atlanta Rotary club, at their luncheon in the Assembly hall of the Ansley hotel this week. Rotarians in after years may know what the Atlanta 1915 Rotarians looked like.

The first half of the film shows the club marching in twos and arranging themselves at the Rotary tables. Several scenes follow, showing the meeting in full swing, and these are followed by individual pictures of each member of the club taken at close range. These pictures are sub-titled with the names of the Rotarians through the entire film, thereby constituting a complete motion picture roster of the organization.

THE NEW PROGRAM FEATURES.

J. L. Marentette, manager of the Consolidated Film & Supply Co., in the Rhodes building, announces the Universal company will begin at an early date releasing the new four and five-reel features on the regular program. "Joe" Marentette is one of the best known film managers in the Southern states. Coming to Atlanta a number of years ago an entire stranger, he has by his kindly and cheerful nature, as well as honest business dealings, endeared himself to not only film managers over the South, but to thousands of friends in other lines of business. The successful business enjoyed by the Universal company over the South is largely due to his untiring efforts.

S. A. LYNCH BUYS SCHLOSS CIRCUIT IN NORTH CAROLINA.

It is announced that S. A. Lynch, the film man, now of Asheville, N. C., but formerly of Atlanta, has purchased from the estate of the late S. A. Schloss, their entire circuit in North Carolina. This gives Mr. Lynch practically control of the leading moving picture theaters in the state, and will doubtless prove a good investment for him.

ATLANTA BRIEF NOTES.

Hugh Cardoza, in charge of the Wells interests in Atlanta, was compelled to disappoint the immense crowd of children who had gathered Saturday morning, for children's day at the Grand theater, on account of the moving picture, "Alice in Wonderland," not arriving. Mr. Cardoza substituted "America" and "Jack and the Beanstalk," with a promise that "Alice in Wonderland" should be shown very soon. Children's day is proving a great success at this popular theater.

The Strand theater, a new moving picture house, under management of Floyd Goodrich, opened recently in Durham, N. C. It is said to be one of the finest in the state, having a seating capacity of 550, which will enable it to take care of the patronage on feature days. Mr. Goodrich was formerly manager of the Edisonia, in that city.

Mr. R. M. Savini, manager of the United Film Service, Atlanta, reports that he has sold bookings of his service to the Fifth Avenue and Majestic, Nashville, Tenn.

The Fox Film productions will be shown first in Atlanta, at the Strand, a contract having been signed by Manager O. P. Hall, Atlanta manager for the Fox Film Corporation. This addition gives the Strand first run on three of the great feature picture releases—Mutual Master Pictures, Metro Picture Corporation and Fox Film. The Strand, under the management of B. Lee Smith, is becoming very popular.

The Montgomery theater announces a full week of "Tillie's Punctured Romance."

Aloma No. 1 theater, on Peachtree, announces that beginning Wednesday and every Wednesday thereafter until completed, "The Diamond From the Sky" will be a feature at that house.

The Savoy, the oldest theater in the city, and perhaps the best patronized, owned by William Oldknow, one of the most versatile men in the game, and a pioneer in the film business, has installed a new screen. This screen consists of 147 square feet of silver leaf, and adds a brilliancy and beauty to the pictures that is delighting the patrons.

The new Victoria, on Peachtree, opened during the week, and crowds have been patronizing it. This new theater is perhaps the best located of any in the city, the surroundings are pleasant, the seating arrangements good, the projection splendid and the pictures and music fine. The theater is served by the Mutual Film Service and Keystone comedies.

Patrons of the Montgomery theater are delighted to learn that Mrs. H. W. Stewart, the organist and pianist, has signed a contract to return to the Montgomery, beginning Monday. Her return to this theater is of general interest to the music loving public of Atlanta.

The Grand announces for the week the following: Mary Pickford in "Fanchon the Cricket"; Anita Stewart in "The Goddess"; Francis X. Bushman in "Graustark," the "Moth and the Flame" and "The Butterfly."

KANSAS NOTES.

Dr. J. C. Montgomery, health officer of Manhattan, Kas., in his annual campaign to clean up the city, is using a moving picture drama with good effect. This is one of the pictures that is so filthy that the Kansas censors could not see the dirt and let it pass. Moving picture exhibitors say that the picture is more suggestive and more dirty than any they have ever before shown.

The children in Hutchinson, Kas., members of the clean-up squad, most of which are members of the Y. M. C. A., have been royally entertained by the various civic organizations of Hutchinson. Tickets to the moving picture shows have been given to the little workers as well as flower seeds and other prizes. The Rex theater there has made arrangements to run straight through the supper hour and the Pearl is opening its show just as soon as school is out. The tickets for the theaters are only good for two days.

The Cozy theater, at Topeka, Kas., was crowded to capacity for the four-reel feature Francis X. Bushman, in the picture "One Beautiful Night."

The Elite theater, at Great Bend, Kas., has been charging 5 and 10 cents for the shows. Clara Kimball Young appealed strongly to the patrons in the "Deep Purple" recently.

M. O. Molden, of Coffeyville, Kas., writes to Kansas City that he has had one of the best seasons with serials that he has ever had. "The Exploits of Elaine," he says, broke all the records at his house, but the first of the "Who Pays" series which he has just started, has proved to be much better than the Elaine pictures as a drawing card. Mr. Molden is strong for the serial pictures and he says that they draw better at Coffeyville than any of the others.

E. H. Van Hying, of Coffeyville, Kas., recently made arrangements for the showing of the picture "Hypocrites" for the second time at his show there. Mr. Van Hying says that it is the best picture in his judgment that has ever come into the State of Kansas.

Grady Montgomery, of the Iris theater, at Topeka, Kas., recently took L. A. Sheridan, of the Pathe Exchange, out on the Y. M. C. A. tennis courts of Topeka and—played a nice match. Mr. Sheridan on reaching Kansas City would not say much about it except that he got a good booking from Mr. Montgomery, so it is taken for granted that Mr. Montgomery beat him.

The Tribune, at Great Bend, Kas., has been helping the moving picture business and the merchants of Great Bend very materially. The Elite theater, at Great Bend, is filled every Wednesday afternoon from 3 to 5 o'clock with school children which are the guests of the Tribune. The Elite charges admission for those over 14 years of age. The children can be left at the theater while their parents do their shopping and the merchants have taken advantage of this and have made this their bargain day.

As a result of damage to the Orpheum Moving picture house, at Atchison, Kas., when a large section of the ornamental ceiling fell, crushing theater chairs and the musical instruments in the pit, the city is to have a full fledged playhouse. Atchison is one of the largest towns in the State of Kansas and has never had a playhouse. Nate Block, owner of the theater, says that in rebuilding he will put in a modern stage and book road shows. The theater is one of the best in the State of Kansas. The accident happened late at night when the house was deserted.

Kansas Censors Willard

State's Board of Appeal Upholds Censors on "The Heart Punch" Decision—Champion Heavyweight Has Difficult Time in His Own Home State—Pictures of Him Barred—Forbidden to Show How Punch Was Gi ven in Vaudeville.

Special to Moving Picture World from Kansas City News Service.

GOVERNOR CAPPER, with the Attorney General and the Secretary of State of Kansas, who constitute the appeal board of the Kansas censorship, upheld the decision of the censors of the "The Heart Punch," in which Jess Willard is shown in action. The film company appealed to the board from the censoring of Rev. Festus Foster and Miss Carrie Simpson, who first condemned the picture. The picture appeared in the state before the law went into effect and has already been shown at a great many theaters. Jess Willard, the Kansas pugilist, is having considerable trouble in showing the home folks just how he delivers his championship punch. His films have been barred even when coated over with nice stories and he himself has been barred from the vaudeville stage by the sheriffs of the various towns, who declare that he is violating a state statute by giving boxing exhibitions.

KANSAS SUNDAY SHOWS VIOLATE LAW.

Judge A. W. Dana, of the Shawnee County District Court at Topeka, Kas., recently upheld the decision of the lower courts in the matter of free Sunday shows, and has declared that it was in violation of the Sunday labor laws. The case was taken into his court from the police court by Lew Nathansen, of Topeka. Mr. Nathansen has again appealed his case and will carry it to the Supreme Court. Judge Dana based his decision upon a Kansas Supreme Court decision in a Sunday theater case in which the higher court found that the work of opening and conducting a theater was in itself a violation of the Sunday labor laws.

COULDN'T SELL TICKETS TO THEM IN CHURCH.

Jumping on the moving picture censors of Kansas has become a favorite pastime for the press of both Missouri and Kansas. One paper suggests a suitable combination for any state wishing good, clean moving pictures and not business. The suggestion is that the moving picture producers employ clergymen to write their scenarios and W. C. T. U. and Y. M. C. A. members to play the parts in their productions for Kansas if they wish to get their pictures passed. The board has not only been cutting out all of the drinking scenes and barroom scenes, but they have put a ban on all scenes pertaining to the "Idle Rich." This is a different report from last week's news of Kansas censors. They seem to have been stirred up a bit.

LEO FRANK FILM CONDEMNED.

Fred F. McClure, superintendent of the recreation department of the board of public welfare of Kansas City, recently condemned the pictures of the case of Leo Frank, under sentence of death on a charge of murder.

Mr. McClure says that it is the rule in Kansas City to prohibit all pictures exploiting famous criminal cases and for that reason the picture will not be shown. The fact that a number of other cities with civic censors made the same ruling has influenced the board, according to the moving picture men.

The story repeats the history of the case and creates a strong prejudice against Frank, according to the press reports that have reached Kansas City. The film also shows the murder to have been committed by the negro and shows all the court scenes up to the time of the death sentence.

Mr. McClure says that it is his belief that the picture will be condemned by most all the censors, yet it is his belief that it will be shown at more places than it is prohibited from, because the places do not have censor boards. It has twice been condemned by the National Censorship Board. It has already been shown at a great many cities where the censorship rule is not in existence. It has been on exhibition about eight weeks, but was only passed on last week by the Kansas City censors.

A LIVE PATHE EXCHANGE.

L. A. Sheridan and F. F. Nine are continually starting some new club at the Pathe Exchange, in Kansas City. Mr. Sheridan comes in off his territory about once a week and he always has some new idea in his head which he carries to Mr. Nine. The two men then organize a club to promote these new ideas. The last one to be instituted at the exchange is the "Exploits of Elaine Boosters."

The whole force at the office belong to the clubs, but Mr. Sheridan and Mr. Nine are always the officers being elected unanimously by themselves. Mr. Nine gets to nearly every moving picture man in Kansas City that comes into the office and tries to get him to sign up the serial, and Mr. Sheridan gets them on the road. The one who has the best average will have to buy the other a good dinner. The other members of the club are only figure heads. They aid Mr. Nine locally and send out correspondence for Mr. Sheridan. And all of them claim to be neutral, as they have to buy their own dinner.

This sort of organization is a great thing for any film office, as the records will show in the work of these two men at the Pathe Exchange. C. S. Edwards, Jr., says that they are always on top with the best bookings in their territory and their many organizations have scored a big hit with him when he opens the morning mail of checks for the service.

KANSAS CITY NOTES.

Mrs. E. M. Frost is now superintending the erection of an airdome at Ninth and Spruce streets. She says that the new picture show will be ready in a few weeks, and she believes it will be the best one of this kind of shows in the city. The new airdome is going to have all the conveniences of the indoor theater and the feature of no roof.

E. F. Maxwell, manager of the Novelty theater, at Topeka, Kas., has gone into a new business as a side line—the jitney transportation business. Mr. Maxwell, representing the Topeka Jitney Company, attended the first meeting of the International Jitney Association at Kansas City, May 6, and was elected vice-president of the association. Delegates were present from all over the entire country. The vote for Mr. Maxwell was unanimous.

Lee D. Balsly recently joined the staff of the K. C. Feature Film forces and is busy with the publicity end of the business. Mr. Balsly is late of Chicago and knows the moving picture publicity business well, having followed it with great success at Chicago.

The Echo theater, at Great Bend, Kas., "the house of Paramounts," is operating at prices ranging from 5 to 15 cents. Mary Pickford and Mary Fuller are the headline attractions at this house and the management will probably change its slogan next week to read "the house of Marys."

Many New Theaters

Detroit Shows Film Prospects by the Ventures Are: Drury Lane, to Cost $80,000; Schmied-Sisman New $75,000 House; the Stratford; Pearce House at Wyandotte, and Hippodrome at Saginaw. New Picture Houses—Among Coming

By Jacob Smith, Detroit (503 Free Press Bldg.) Correspondent of M. P. World.

THE Drury Lane Theater company of Detroit has been incorporated for $80,000, to operate the Drury Lane theater, which will be erected at 274 Woodward avenue, Detroit. In fact, the excavating is now in progress, and it is fully expected that the theater will be ready by August 15 or not later than September 1st. Frank Drew, who promoted the enterprise, is now owner of the Avenue theater, which plays melodramatic stock. He was also one of the original incorporators of the Detroit Universal Film company. The Drury Lane theater will seat about 600 people and will be exclusively for feature photoplays. The other incorporators of the company are Grant Deats and D. B. Hayes. Mr. Drew will spend from $20,000 to $25,000 in equipping this new playhouse.

A permit to construct a brick and steel theater, to cost approximately $75,000, was issued on May 11 to the Schmied-Sisman Co. The new theater, the property of the Grand Boulevard Theater Co., with offices at 2033 Dime Bank building, will be erected on the south side of East Grand boulevard, between Brush and John R streets. It will be 87 feet wide by 171 feet long and 37 feet high. Fuller Claflin designed the new theater.

The Hippodrome Amusement Co., of which Mortimer Hoffman and Wesley Schram of Detroit are the promoters, and which proposes to erect a large theater in Saginaw, Mich., has been cited to show cause why it should not be restrained from removing an old building from the site of the proposed theater. The petition sets up that the amusement company leased the property, but no provision was made in the lease for the removal of the building.

A new photoplay house of classic design, suggesting the Italian renaissance, to be known as the Stratford, will be erected on the southeast corner of Dix and Ferdinand avenues for the Dix Theater company. Plans have been prepared by Joseph P. Jogerst, architect. With frontage of 60 feet and depth of 139 feet, the building will be of fireproof construction with steel frame and reinforced concrete floors and roof. Exterior surface of the walls will be of cream colored terra cotta and brick trimmed in recessed panels. The front of the building will be illuminated at night by lights concealed in the cornice and around the edge of the marquise. The interior will be handsomely decorated in ornamental plaster. The seating capacity will be 1,100, with seats for 950 on the main floor, accommodations for 115 in separate private boxes on a mezzanine floor and space for 36 in proscenium boxes. The building will be equipped with the most approved ventilating system. Rest rooms and a ladies' parlor will be provided. Officers of the Dix Theater company are Frederick A. Schneider, president; vice-president, John S. Affeld; secretary, William H. Steffens, and treasurer, Joseph N. Schneider.

Another new theater is to be erected in Wyandotte, Mich., a suburb of Detroit. It is to cost $25,000 and is being built for Pearce Bros. It will be located on First street. Actual construction work has already begun. It will be two stories high, fireproof and modern. The seating capacity will be 800. Photoplays will be the policy. Those interested in the project are Walter A., Edwin T. and George W. Pearce, all of Wyandotte.

We have already printed prospective accounts of some of these new ventures, but the showing when taken together makes it plain that in Detroit there is nothing the matter with the picture business.

DETROIT NOW KEEPS EASTERN TIME.

The Common Council of Detroit, after months of investigation, voted on May 11 to change from central standard to eastern standard time, the change being fostered by the More Daylight Club of Detroit. Under the new plan business activities start an hour earlier and shut down an hour earlier. The change became effective on May 15. The theaters, manufacturers and business places are practically all operating under the new time. Owners of motion picture theaters do not see how it can make any difference with them or their business. Detroit is now on a par, so far as its time is concerned, with Cleveland, Buffalo and New York.

HARRY WOODS TAKES CHARGE AT THE ORPHEUM.

Harry Woods, personal representative of Charles H. Miles, operating theaters in Detroit, Cleveland and Pittsburgh, has been appointed manager of the Orpheum theater, Detroit, succeeding W. W. McEwen, resigned. Previous to coming to Detroit, Mr. Woods was manager of the Miles in Pittsburgh. The Orpheum in Detroit plays vaudeville and pictures, giving a two-hour exhibition of motion pictures before the daily matinees at no extra charge to those buying regular admission tickets to the regular performance.

NEW ALGONAC HOUSE.

Architect E. H. Rogers, 398 Montclair avenue, Detroit, is drawing the plans for a $75,000 theater and business block to be erected by James Gilbert at Algonac, Mich. The size of the building will be 90 by 179 feet, two stories in height, of brick and terra cotta, and will represent an investment of $75,000, exclusive of the theater furnishings. The theater proper will be devoted to photoplays.

LORANGER BECOMES SALES MANAGER.

John W. Loranger, formerly assistant sales manager of the Casino Feature Film company, Detroit, has been advanced to sales manager. He has been with the company for 14 months, during which time he has proven himself to be an efficient worker. The Casino company is Michigan distributor for Paramount films.

Films showing the Lusitania's departure on May 1st for Europe were shown at the Washington, Empress and Royale theaters (owned by John H. Kunsky) the week of May 10 and drew big houses. The pictures were contracted for by Mr. Kunsky and his personal representative, Geo. W. Trendle, while in New York City two days following the Lusitania disaster.

NEWS NOTES FROM MINNESOTA.

Special to Moving Picture World from Midwest News Service.

DULUTH members of the Drama League at a meeting decided to cooperate with the Rex theater in selecting films for morning programs for children. Efforts at regular programs will be made to conform to the policy of the Junior Drama league.

William L. Weiss of Sioux City, Iowa, has bought a half interest in the Empress at Crosby from Dr. A. C. Bosel.

The New Grand at Lake City has booked the United service.

The Huntleys of Winona advertised their camera work in a distinctive manner. At a banquet given by the Association of Commerce, a small strip of film was laid at each guest's plate. It showed an unusual engineering feat in raising the pillars for a handsome new Winona Bank building.

Frank Maher of Preston has purchased the Gem at Caledonia.

The New Majestic at Ellsworth had a five-reel special show for the benefit of the baseball team.

FROM NEBRASKA.

Lincoln will not have Sunday shows. The proposition lost at a general election by a vote of 3,532 to 2,690. In many precincts, however, there were large majorities in favor of Sunday shows.

Moving picture shows for children, with strictly censored films, have been advocated, as a use of the auditorium, at Omaha, by the Associated Charities. The admission should be two for five cents, it is suggested.

G. W. Dunn, of Kearney, has taken a year's lease on the Star at Kahoka, Mo.

Vavra & Tinker have secured control of both picture houses at Crete.

M. M. Coe has purchased the Elite at Friend.
